A new road from Lake Coeur d'Alene to Murray was likewise completed in 1885, and on July 28th the first stage made a trip over it. Thereafter the mining district had stage connections with Spokane Falls. The same morning the first train of freight wagons came into Murray. It consisted of two four-mule teams and two vehicles, and belonged to T. S. Smith. The first stage from Thompson Falls came into Murray November 16, 1885, and the line from the east with the one from the west made the isolation of the region a memory.

The one great tragedy of 1885 in Shoshone county occurred at Pierce City in September. On the 10th of that month at an early hour the body of the well known and respected old pioneer, David M. Fraser, was found in the deceased's own store, literally hacked to pieces with axes, hatchets and knives. A bullet, also, had entered the mouth and passed out through the side of the neck. An old county safe had been battered and the lock broken, but Mr. Fraser's own safe was untouched, as was all the rest of his property. The body was taken to Lewiston for interment. After its arrival there twenty or twenty-five citizens left for the scene to endeavor to find a clue to the murderers and these were joined by about fifteen from Camas prairie. Upon their arrival they surrounded the town, sending in a small posse to learn of the situation. It was found that the few white men in camp had arrested eight Chinamen on a charge of complicity in the crime, including two Chinese merchants of Pierce. A preliminary hearing had been given them and five were held for trial, the others being discharged. It developed that the crime had been committed for the purpose of ridding the town of the only white merchant, that the Chinamen might have a monopoly of the business, also that the Mongolians were angry at Fraser for taking the part of Indians against them when they had paid the red men in bogus gold dust.

It is said that the evidence upon which the citizens held the Chinamen was obtained by disguising as an Indian a young man named Sears, who could speak Chinese. Sears stole up to the courthouse jail and heard the eight Chinamen incarcerated there discussing the crime and what were best to do to escape punishment.

After the departure of the Lewiston and Camas prairie people the few white men left began asking one another what was to be done with the accused Chinamen. It being evidently impossible to guard them in Pierce until next term of the district court, the whites decided to take them to Murray. Seven men, one of whom was the deputy sheriff, started with the prisoners. When they were about four miles out they were met by a mob, only one member of which was masked. The mob overpowered the guard, seized the Chinamen and, notwithstanding the fervent pleadings of the wretched Mongolians, hanged them to a pole between two trees. No punishment was ever meted out to the lynchers, although the matter was officially investigated by Secretary of State Bayard in July, 1886, for the purpose of satisfying the Chinese government.

CHAPTER II.

CURRENT HISTORY—1886-1892.

The initial month of the year 1886 was marked in the Coeur d'Alene country by the first fatal snowslide in the region. Willow creek, a tributary of the south fork, was the scene, and Andy P. Richards and Simon Christenson the victims. At the time the slide took place the men were doing some work on the Elder mine, on the eastern side of the divide in Montana. As the entire region had been burned over the summer previous, there was nothing to hold the snow on the steep mountain side. The bodies were found January 27th by I. C. Sargent and W. S. Harris, who lived near the scene. Harris started at once for aid, but before he could return with reinforcements from the Hunter the bodies were buried deep under another snow slide, so deep that they could not be exhumed without danger, so they were left in their sepulchre of snow for the time being.

In April of this year an important move was made toward giving the Coeur d'Alene country railroad facilities by the organizations of the Coeur d'Alene Railway and Navigation Company. D. C. Corbin, Gov. S. T. Hauser, A. M. Holter, S. S. Glidden, James F. Wardner, James Monaghan and A. M. Esler were the incorporators and their object was to establish a railway connecting some point on the main line of the Northern Pacific railroad with Coeur d'Alene lake, and a line of steamers to operate between the railway and the head of navigation on the river.

As the season advanced considerable railway activity developed, three companies being in the field and making preparations to build, all of them apparently in earnest. The Coeur d'Alene Railway & Navigation Company, with D. C. Corbin at its head, was advertising for bids for clearing the right of way and for ties; another company, with Armstrong, Turner and other heavy capitalists of Montana, was pushing preparations, though its line had not yet been definitely located; and the third, the Spokane & Coeur d'Alene branch of the Northern Pacific railroad, was purposing to build, if practicable, a road to leave the main railway at the Idaho line. Its engineers were in the field in search of a route. J. J. Browne, of Spokane, was president of the company in charge of this work.

Later in the year the O. R. & N. entered the field with its engineers, making a preliminary survey from Farmington to the mouth of the St. Joe river, and on to the Montana line. The survey was stopped in November by the authorities in Washington, D. C., who objected to further work on the Indian reservation until permission should be officially obtained.

Operations were pushed by the Coeur d'Alene Railroad & Navigation Company with unusual energy and before the end of the year 1886 a road was completed between Hauser, a point on the Northern Pacific about midway between Rathdrum and the Idaho line, and Kingston. On November 9th the road from Hauser Junction and Coeur d'Alene City was turned over to the operators. Unfortunately, however, the road did not prove a success at first, as appears from the following item from the Murray Sun of December 24, 1886:

"We sincerely regret to learn that communication has not yet been opened up on the Mission-Wardner railroad, and that the prospects are slim for the early running of trains over this road. It seems that much of the iron was laid during the first cold snap in November. At the time the embankment was frozen and looked solid enough. Later the Chinooks came, and they have literally melted away much of the road bed, the black loam soil, without gravel for ballast, readily yielding. The road, such as it is, is ironed to Milo, but as it stands is useless. One engine is on the track between Pine flat and Mud prairie and another between Kingston and the mission, unable to move. Freighting is being done by team and travel by cayuse. The predicament is an unfortunate one."

However, all such misfortunes, when they come to an aggressive company, are temporary, and in a short time the road was ballasted and in operation. The untenanted wilderness of forest, the complex labyrinth of mountain solitudes had been penetrated, three short years after the first great rush of prospectors, by the mighty arteries of the world's commerce.

May, 1886, witnessed the completion of a telephone system between Thompson Falls, Montana, and Murray. It was ready for use at 6 o'clock on the evening of the 24th, and shortly after S. Fuller sent the first message, a private one. Later the same year a telephone line was put in between Murray and Delta, with the intention of extending it to Wardner.

It was reported in July that though excellent cleanups were still being made on Trail and Beaver creeks, the center of interest had shifted to the south fork, that hundreds of people were pouring into that section and that commercial enterprises there were booming. Wardner was receiving much attention, also the Pine creek country, where, it was reported, a rich silver-lead strike had been made. The original discovery was made by William Reineger, and numerous other prospects were soon discovered in the district.

In other parts of the Coeur d'Alenes, also, there was much mining activity during 1886. The second stamp mill in the district was put into operation at the Golden King mine, two miles below Murray, November 7th. It was a ten-stamp mill to be operated in connection with three Duncan concentrators, the first thus completely equipped in the region. On Canyon creek about fifty men were engaged in developing the different lodes, pushing work vigorously. The town of Burke had two stores, one belonging to Stephen S. Glidden, the other to the Armstrong Mining Company, both of which were doing a flourishing business. There was one saloon, that of Dick Wilmer. The Tiger, Union, Black Bear, Diamond Hitch and Hidden Treasure were the leading properties at that time. In the Mullan district several of the largest properties, including the Hunter, the Morning and the Evening, were bonded to capitalists, who were developing them steadily, though the attention of many of the holders of undeveloped prospects had been distracted by the Wardner mines. It is stated that the first out-and-out, bona fide sale of a property for a considerable sum was effected this year, though of course many mines had been bonded. This was the transfer of the Sunset mine, near Carbon, from Phil. Markson to J. K. and W. A. Clark, Oliver Durrant and Alexander H. Tarbet for $17,500.

The greatest sensation of 1886 was the trouble over the Eureka mine, the details of which were given in the Murray Sun of October 10th, as follows:

The trouble with the Crown Point or Eureka mine in Government gulch on the south fork culminated yesterday morning in a bloody conflict in which Jack McCauley was killed and A. R. Campbell seriously wounded. The facts of the trouble are related by Bill Payne as follows: It appears that Pat Flynn and party obtained possession of the property last Wednesday, but in what manner is unknown at the present writing. At any rate Pat Flynn, Ed. J. Lavelle, Joe Skeffington and Jack McCauley were holding possession of the mine yesterday morning and were on guard. Early yesterday morning these four men were on the alert at the mouth of the tunnel. Pat Flynn is said to have declared he saw some one moving in the thick mist up the mountain side and Jack McCauley, with his revolver strapped to his side, climbed the steep hillside to see who it was. Upon arriving at the place indicated he stopped and, peering about in the semi-darkness evidently discovering no one, turned as though to return to the mine when a gun exploded in the mist and McCauley fell. A dozen or more shots from unseen parties quickly followed the first explosion and the three men at the mouth of the Eureka mine stood by their arms anxiously waiting. Nothing more transpiring they went up and brought down McCauley, who lived about forty minutes. At this time a constable's posse, hastily summoned at Wardner upon a rumor of what was going on, and consisting of Bill Payne, Jack Currie and Con. Sullivan, headed by Deputy Sheriff Joe Campbell, rode up to the mine. Payne went up the hill to the spot where the shooting occurred and behind a stump not far from where McCauley fell he found a hat and a gun, which were subsequently discovered to belong to A. R. Campbell, formerly of Campbell & Pease, of Murray, who was found at a cabin on the road seriously wounded in the left shoulder. He admitted being in the fight.

A coroner's jury rendered a verdict that McCauley came to his death at the hands of a party or parties unknown. Shortly after the verdict Pat Flynn swore out a complaint against L. F. Robinson, J. C. Caldwell, Joseph Holly, A. R. Campbell, A. Small and an old man named Fisher, charging them with doing the killing. The affair stirred up a serious factional row on the south fork.

That fall a grand jury indicted J. C. Caldwell, Pat Flynn, Joseph Skeffington and six others on a charge of conspiracy, the offense, it was alleged, being committed in connection with the Crown Point-Eureka mine trouble, but there was failure at the subsequent trial to convict any of the accused.

The wondrous developments in the Coeur d'Alene country were certainly not wrought without great expense. Though Shoshone county was virtually but three years old, it was already in debt, including interest, something like $155,000. Three-fifths of this amount, it was estimated, had been expended by the commissioners in the construction of roads expressly demanded by the people. It is related that the Delta-Kingston road cost $100,000. The remaining two-fifths was made up by court expenses and other disbursements incidental to the organization of a new community and the installing of the machinery of government. Thus the people of southern Shoshone, who had borne with fortitude the burdens of county government for so many years, burdens necessarily heavy on account of the paucity of their numbers, were now compelled to pay between four and five per cent. taxes for improvements from which they could derive but little benefit. The only noticeable effect upon them was that their county seat was removed from their midst to the distant town of Murray, which could be reached by them only after long and arduous travel. It is not surprising that these people became dissatisfied with their political affiliations and began agitating for a change. By this time the population of southern Shoshone had grown to perhaps 300 or 400. They thought that, few though they still were, they would rather form an independent county than put up with existing conditions, so they began circulating petitions for a new county to include all of Shoshone south of the north fork of the Clearwater. The movement was not successful, nor has any such movement since been.

Unusually heavy snow storms in the early months of 1887 brought some inconvenience and occasioned a snow slide at Wardner which threatened the lives of several people, but the opening of the year was a most propitious one, notwithstanding. In April there was effected a sale of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mines, the Sancho, Important and Bunker Hill fractions, with the concentrator and a contract with A. M. Esler & Company, the price being $1,500,000. Of this Cooper & Peck received $75,000, in consideration of their dropping their suit for an interest. S. G. Reed, of Portland, was the purchaser. Naturally a transfer of such magnitude attracted not a little attention within and without the mining district, those within looking upon it as an evidence of faith in the camp and a favorable portent for its future.

In September following another important sale was made, that of the Poorman mine, at Burke, to Marcus Daly, Patrick Clark, Ben Kingsbury and others of Butte and Helena. The purchase price was $136,000. It was the purpose of the new company to erect, the following spring, a new concentrator to handle the ore, the product of the mine in the meantime to be shipped out for treatment. Much credit was accorded John M. Burke at the time for his zeal in bringing the Canyon creek mines to the front. He, with Vincent and Frank Lelande, Ed. Benjamin, Alexander Caza and others, all poor men, received a small fortune each out of this sale. The costly litigation between this mine and the Tiger, which is situated on the same vein, had been settled previous to the date of this transaction.

The railway situation continued interesting throughout the year of 1887. A war of no small magnitude developed between the Northern Pacific and the Union Pacific, the two great companies operating in the district under different local names or supporting local companies. The O. R. & N. Company, the protege of the latter corporation, had been projecting a line from Farmington to the Montana line, passing through the south fork country. It was operating through what was known as the Washington & Idaho Company. The Northern Pacific Company was watching the situation with a jealous eye on account of the coveted Mullan pass. The Coeur d'Alene Railway & Navigation Company, of which Corbin was the leading spirit, but which was doubtless under the protection of the Northern Pacific Company, already had a narrow-gauge road to Wardner Junction and was pushing eastward. By July the road had been extended to Miner's cabin, and the right of way was cleared to within a few miles of Wallace. The building of this road occasioned the laying out of a new town, first called Georgetown, after Lee George, one of the owners of the town site. It later became known by the pioneer name of Osburn. It was expected that this would be the Carbon, Delta, Myrtle and Murray Junction.

Rapidly work on this narrow-gauge was pushed, and early in September it had reached Wallace, but the jubilation which greeted its entrance into that town was premature, for a temporary injunction was granted by the courts on complaint of the Washington & Idaho Railroad Company, tying up a mile and a half of its track between Osburn and Wallace. This was a disastrous coup not alone for the railway but for the people of the south fork, for the roads in the bottoms were wretched; winter was coming on; no ores could be shipped out and enterprises in the upper mining country were suffering. Fortunately, on October 29th the injunction was dissolved by Judge Buck, and this incubus upon industry was removed.

Another important effect of the decision just referred to was that it encouraged vigorous work on the Burke branch. The Canyon Creek Railway Company, of which S. S. Glidden, of the Tiger mine, was president, had been working on this short line since July, but as long as the Corbin road was tied up there was nothing to be gained by its immediate construction. As soon as the tie-up was at an end, however, work was resumed in good earnest, and on December 22d, the iron rails were in Burke. A rousing celebration was held, attended by delegations from all parts of the Coeur d'Alenes.

The events of this year may be summarized as follows: Sale of Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine and effects; sale of the Poorman and effects; railway activity on the south fork; phenomenal growth of Wardner, Wallace, Burke and south fork mining camps; placer outputs begin to decline; deep interest is felt all over the United States in the Coeur d'Alene mines; two noted homicides.

From the report of Governor Stevenson it appears that the population of Shoshone county at this time was 8,500; that the taxable property amounted to $929,680; that there were twelve concentrators, quartz mills and arrastres in the county; also twelve towns.

"The Treasure Box Company, on the Mother lode," continues the report, "has taken out in six weeks, with an arrastre, $60,000 in gold. Mother's Boy, Golden Chest, Buckeye Boy, Occident and Golden King, on the same vein, are each producing daily outputs of gold.

"The principal placer mining gulches are the Prichard, Trail, Eagle, Buckskin, Missoula, Pony and Day. Besides these there are hill diggings which are being worked with great success by hydraulics; and a flume costing $500,000 is now being constructed to work these placer mines."

On January 12, 1888, at five o'clock, began what was classed as the severest storm experienced up to that time in the Coeur d'Alenes. The wind, which came from the northeast, was not especially strong and disastrous, but it had sufficient strength to pile the snow up in huge banks in unsheltered places. Next day the wind subsided, then came a cold snap of unprecedented severity. At noon the temperature in Murray had fallen to thirteen degrees below zero; at six o'clock it stood at twenty-three degrees; at midnight it had reached thirty-four degrees; and at daylight it was forty degrees. On the morning of the 15th the thermometer again registered forty degrees, and next morning it fell to that point for the third time. A spirit thermometer is said to have registered forty-four degrees on the morning of the 15th. Such weather was phenomenal in a region, which, though elevated, usually enjoys comparatively mild climate.

In March of this year the Emma, Last Chance and Republican Fraction, located northerly from the Bunker Hill, near Wardner, were sold to a syndicate, of which A. M. Esler, Charles Sweeney and Frank Moore were the leaders. The first two, it is said, were located on the same day, September 17, 1885, by John Flaherty, J. L. Smith, Mike Carlin and John M. Burke.

In the mines generally the year was a prosperous one. The fortunate jump in the price of lead in August gave a remarkable impetus to operations in all the silver-lead mines and prospects. From $3.75 it rose to $4.75 in two weeks, and it retained its upward tendency until it reached $4.92½.

According to reports of the United States assay office at Boise, Shoshone's production of minerals from November, 1887, to November, 1888, was: Gold, $350,288; silver, $1,327,500; lead, $1,794,000; total, $3,471,788. The official figures showed that the value of minerals produced was more than twice as great as that of Lemhi county, the next in rank among the political sub-divisions of Idaho. Lemhi, Boise and Alturas counties were ahead in the production of gold; Custer was next below in silver, with a production of $1,061,300; and Lemhi was next in lead, with a record of $700,000.

The mining situation in the country was thus ably summarized by the Murray Sun of January 1, 1889:

> The year just closed has not been unkind to the Coeur d'Alenes. It is true the gold belt has not kept pace with the silver-lead section, yet in the main it has made some progress, and we think the output will approximate $250,000. But there has been no special advance. The main enterprise upon which our people had built some hope, the Prichard creek bedrock flume, did not materialize, and so far as the future may be read by the present state of affairs, there is no likelihood that anything will be done in that line during the ensuing year. The next best enterprise, the Coeur d'Alene flume (Coulter's waterway) has remained in a dormant state, and future prospects are unfavorable. The Idaho mill from which we expected so much, is still closed down and this valuable property is practically a nonentity in the affairs of this camp. The Golden Chest has contributed slightly to the gold output during the year, but has been no material agent in illustrating the quartz possibilities of the north side. The Golden King mill has now something like a small promise before it. However, it is a mill without a mine, although there are eight or ten locations in the group. If a mine can be developed, there is a prospect ahead. The Ophir hill mines have been the backbone of the north side during the year and it seems as if we have to depend upon them for some time to come, as far as our quartz interests are concerned. Although we have not the exact figures at hand, we estimate the output of the three arastres at about $50,000 during the year. With a ten-stamp water power mill the product for the ensuing year will reach over $100,000, and at least thirty men will find steady employment. The California ditch, with a flow of 300 inches for about eight months in the year, has proven one of Murray's best friends. The mines under it have produced steadily. About $10,000 has been expended for labor and supplies.

Mr. Mills's flumes on Eagle creek have been important to our material prosperity during the year in giving employment to many men. The water flume being finished to Fancy gulch, the scene of placer operations, will add largely to our "dust" product and it is also quite probable that the bedrock flume, near the head of East Eagle creek, will be sufficiently advanced by spring to contribute some of the yellow metal and encourage more extensive work by Mr. Mills. These enterprises have kept Eagle alive.

On Trail and Bear gulches the march of progress has been slow, but steady, and this quite often counts far more than a rush. The placers on Trail have yielded well and their output in 1889 promises to surpass that of former years. The most notable improvement in the district has been made in the quartz belt on Pony gulch, where the Fay Templeton mine and mill erected this year are giving substantial value to locations. Should this mill prove a success, the camp's gold output will be increased $100,000. Sunset peak belongs to the north side as its entire territory is drained by streams which flow into the north fork. Although these mines are somewhat isolated they have made a sufficiently rich showing to bespeak for them a "boom" when transportation is furnished.

The phenomenal silver-lead region has made a steady advance during the year, with nothing to stay its progress and prosperity except the limited transportation facilities. Four concentrating mills have been added to the reduction capacity, making seven in running order with another one at Mullan in the process of construction, and still another one in prospect by April or May. The shipments have averaged 600 tons of ore per week, and this year will run up to 1,000. The extension of one railroad to Mullan and the possibility of the construction of the Washington & Idaho during the year to the same point will infuse life into every ravine and give the camp a lift which will make 1889 memorable in local history.

During the year 1888 postoffices were established in Burke and Mullan and daily mails to all the towns except the latter. Fifty miles of telephone lines were built by the Norman Company, giving Wardner, Wallace, Mullan and Burke direct communication with Walla Walla, all Palouse country towns, Moscow, Lewiston and other Idaho points, Fort Spokane and Davenport, in the Big Bend country, and many other points, all through the Western Union Telegraph Company with the entire outside world.

The railroad situation continued interesting throughout the whole of 1888. In February of that year Senator Dolph introduced a bill granting the Washington & Idaho Railroad Company the right of way through the Coeur d'Alene reservation. By about the middle of May it became a law, and on June 1st a special to the Oregonian from Farmington announced that "the first sod of the railway to Spokane Falls and the Coeur d'Alene mines was broken this afternoon by Corey Brothers, contractors at this point. The road to the Coeur d'Alene branches off eastward at a point ten miles north of Farmington and the contractors are now on the ground looking over their line for the purpose of bidding on the work."

By July a large force of graders was at work and grading was being pushed, except through the reservation, where a gang of surveyors was engaged in locating the road. It is stated that the company would have built from some other point than Farmington if the Indians had not raised serious objections. Many difficulties stood in the way of the road, however, the greatest, perhaps, being the opposition of the Northern Pacific Company. Under date of August 7, 1888, the Murray Sun commented on the situation as follows:

Railroad work is not progressing very rapidly on the South Fork lines. The Northern Pacific, or Spokane and Idaho, is said to be doing very little work on the South Fork, and nothing can be learned as to whether it is doing any in Fourth of July canyon to connect the Mission and Coeur d'Alene City by rail. Although the grading contract on the W. & I. to Mullan is to be finished by January 1, 1889, it is thought to be impossible to carry it out by that time unless legal difficulties are settled. Several hundred men are tied up at Farmington and everywhere along the route are small gangs of laborers occupying disputed ground on which they are supposed to work. Everywhere along the route the pioneer's notice that he claims a patent of ground stares the railroader in the face and the W. & I. is, literally compelled to buy every foot of ground it wishes to utilize. The appraisers who have been at work appraising land claimed by the N. P. have finished their labor and handed their report to the court. The good land was appraised at $6 and the poor land at $2.

It must be understood that nearly all the land on the South Fork and for that matter the largest portion of the Coeur-d'Alenes is claimed by the Northern Pacific Company as being within their forty-mile grant, and as the Northern Pacific objects to the W. & I. crossing its territory, the court, according to the prayer of the plaintiff, appointed a committee of appraisers to set a value on the land for a right of way. Since the appraisement it has leaked out that the Northern Pacific folks claim that the land has been transferred to the Spokane & Idaho Company, whose line runs from Spokane to Coeur d'Alene City, and that the W. & I. will have to commence proceedings against that company in order to obtain relief. It is alleged that N. P. engineers surveyed that company's land grant here, eighteen months ago, and found it entirely within the boundaries.

These difficulties and those over the right of way across the reservation were finally overcome, and we are informed that in April, 1889, 2,000 men were engaged in pushing grading work on the reservation. On December 9th it made its entrance into Wallace, and needless to say it was received with great rejoicing.

Just one year, and a few days later, or to be more specific, on December 22, 1890, a junction was effected between the Cœur d'Alene Railway & Navigation Company's line, which had passed into the hands of the Northern Pacific Company, and the Missoula cut-off, which it was then thought was intended as the main line of that transcontinental road. This was, indeed, a great day for the Coeur d'Alene country, as it settled in a most satisfactory manner the problem, important everywhere, but especially so to a mining community, of railway transportation. Indeed the district is to be congratulated on the speed and promptness with which it achieved the boon which other communities have sought for decades without success.

The phenomenal growth of the South Fork country occasioned a movement for the removal of the county seat from Murray, which was then rather quiet, on account of the gradual decline of placer mining, to some point more nearly central to the great body of the population. Agitation began about the year 1888 and continued throughout the next twelvemonth and the next. Several mass meetings were held in different south fork towns, but as is usually the case in such matters unanimity of opinion or even an approximation thereto, could not be secured. Mr. S. V. W. Osburn made a proposition at one of these meetings that if the seat of government should be located on his land at the junction of the Coeur d'Alene Railway & Navigation Company's line with the Murray wagon road, he would build and rent to the county for ten dollars per annum a suitable building for court house purposes. Osburn seems to have been quite favorably considered by a large number of people at this time.

March 15, 1890, a bill previously passed by both houses of congress was signed by the president, providing that the location of the county seat of Shoshone county, Idaho Territory, be submitted to a vote of the legal voters of said county, at the next general election. In accordance with the provisions of this act, a vote was taken on the question in October, the result of which was that Murray continued to hold the honors. The vote was as follows: Kellogg, 3; Wallace, 706; Osburn, 982; Murray, 364; Kingston, 1; Gem, 1. From this it will be seen that Osburn, the favorite town, lacked 47 votes of having the requisite majority of all votes cast.

The second month of the year 1890 was marked in northern Shoshone by a serious disaster at the Custer mine on Nine Mile creek. Fortunately a few days previous to the accident twenty-five of the forty men employed were laid off work. About twelve of the remainder were at supper on the evening of February 3, in a building on the side of the hill, when an avalanche started from above. It struck the building just high enough to send the broken timbers on the men who were sitting facing the slide, killing three almost instantly. Those on the other side of the table, which was parallel to the mountain side, escaped with a number of bruises. Building and men were carried far down into the gulch. Some of the living succeeded in digging their way out and then went to work vigorously to succor their less fortunate comrades. So great was the danger of another snow slide that one of the men who came to the rescue took the names of those at work. After about fifteen hours of incessant labor all were recovered. The dead were John Galbraith, foreman; Thomas Sturgeon, miner; J. Gillbright, miner; Mike Flynn, cook; Tom Malloy, assistant cook; Ole Olson, waiter.

This was the most disastrous of a large number of snow slides that had caused loss of life and property in the Coeur d'Alenes during the winter of 1889-90 and previous years. The contour of the country is very favorable to such slides, and their frequency proved a serious drawback to winter mining.

The chief mining excitement of this year on the north fork was that incited by the news of a mammoth find of lead carbonates on upper Prichard creek, on the old Thompson road, a mile and a half above Raven. Scores rushed to the new district and the entire country surrounding was agitated. Before the fires of excitement had begun to subside they received fresh fuel by the discovery of gold quartz in Cement gulch in the same neighborhood. It is stated that the carbonate discovery was first made as early as 1884, but was neglected on account of the fact that everyone had the gold fever then. It was relocated in 1889, and later sold for a nominal sum to W. H. Douty and George Chapman, who sank a shaft, discovered some fine ore and then quit operations. Though the secret was carefully guarded, the news eventually reached the ears of George P. Carter, one of the discoverers of the Poorman mine, and Smith Darling, who began prospecting in the vicinity with great earnestness. As a result of their labors showings were made which incited the stampede.

Another exciting event of the twelvemonth now under review was the jail break at Murray on November 17th, the details of which, as nearly as can be ascertained, were as follows: When Jailor Ives brought in the evening meal Nicholas Tully, who was in the habit of assisting the authorities, caught Ives in the steel cage, and with the help of another prisoner named Edward Smith, overpowered, bound and gagged him, took his watch, money and keys, and locked him in the cell. He then released four other prisoners, secured two revolvers and prepared for flight. When darkness came on the six set out to enjoy their freedom. The escaped prisoners were: Nicholas Tully, held for assault with intent to kill; Edward Smith, for highway robbery; Thomas Ryan and John McEvoy, for grand larceny; Henry Goodman, for highway robbery; and Peter Snowball, for the murder of John Galbraith, at Pottsville.

Ives chewed the rope with which he was gagged, into two, and yelled for aid. Only with great difficulty was his release effected, for it was necessary to file some of the bars of the cage. The sheriff was absent at the time. Commissioner Kraus called for volunteers to go out and arrest the escaped prisoners. He received a ready response. William L. Tinker and Will Hooper set out for Thompson; O. D. Jones and George W. Chapman for the south fork. The latter two discovered at Delta that they were on the right track. Pushing on to Beaver Station they saw the fugitives in a field near that point. Securing the aid of Ed. Clough and the Wallace stage driver, they started back to the place where the culprits had been seen. Jones and Chapman rushed ahead and secreted themselves near the road, onto which the fugitives soon emerged from the brush. Jumping up suddenly in front of the sextette, they gave the command to halt and throw up hands. A fight might have ensued had not the two men in the rear come up just then with their shot-guns, arriving in time to satisfy the escaped prisoners that resistance was useless. The desperadoes were easily disarmed and returned to their incarceration.

The United States census of 1890 gives the population of Shoshone county by precincts as: Burke, 482; Carbon, 157; Delta, 106; Eagle, 56; Elk, 339; Kellogg, 324; Kingston, 158; Mullan, 818; Murray, 450; Osburn, 269; Pierce, 238; Wallace, 913; Wardner, 858; Weippe, 156. Total, 5,882. In 1880 the population of the county was only 469.

On February 16, 1891, a meeting of the mine owners and mine managers of the Coeur d'Alenes convened at Wallace and resulted in the organization of Mine Owners' Protective Association, claimed to have been the first of its kind in the United States. Its purpose was co-operation in all matters pertaining to mining in the silver-lead district, such as the adjustment of freight and transportation rates with the railways, the handling of labor, etc. The organization, like the miners' union, which came into being the previous year, was destined to play a prominent part in the history of the region.

Railway activity in the county this year took the form of changing the Northern Pacific cut-off from a narrow to a broad gauge and the effecting of a like change in the Burke branch.

August 19 a terrible accident occurred at the Black Bear mine, on Canyon creek, causing the death of four men. Two hundred pounds of giant powder, at the mouth of the lower tunnel, was exploded accidentally, caving the tunnel for a distance of fifty feet. The result was that G. M. Neil, general manager, Will Janse, assistant manager, Robert Blackburn and Alex. Barron, miners, who were working at the breast of the tunnel, were imprisoned and suffocated by the gas before help could reach them. A number of others were missing, but it later developed that these men were in another tunnel and out of harm's way. No blame attached to anyone.

A few months afterward the first fatal accident in the vicinity of Wardner occurred in the Stemwinder. A cave of twenty tons of rock and ore caught Richard Griffin, a native of Wales, causing his instant death.

Those who were in the Coeur d'Alene country at the time will remember that as the Northern Pacific passenger train was approaching the town of Pottsville, near the Montana line, on November 19, 1891, Express Messenger R. R. Case had two unwelcome visitors, who requested him to unlock his safe, emphasizing the request with an ugly looking pistol. After securing $2,800, destined for Mullan, and perhaps much more money, the robbers departed. At the point where the robbery was effected the road makes a long curve and the grade is heavy, necessitating the slowing down of the train. It was thought that the robbers boarded it from ambush, expecting to get the money that was being shipped in from Montana to pay the Gold Hunter's men the next day. The affair was well planned and well executed and the perpetrators of the crime were never apprehended.

The year 1891 is noted as being the one in which the Coeur d'Alene labor troubles had their origin. Some time in July the Miners' Union at Wardner petitioned V. M. Clement, manager of the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mines, that the existing arrangement whereby the miners paid a dollar a month for medical treatment without hospital facilities should cease, and that the same money should be deducted from each man's pay and applied to the maintenance of the Central Miners' Union Hospital at Wallace. Early in August the company posted notices in prominent places about the mine calling an election for the purpose of choosing between these three propositions, viz: To continue the existing arrangement; to build a new hospital on the company's grounds at Milo, the company to give lumber and sufficient ground for all purposes, conditioned on the men's obtaining sufficient money from individuals and other local companies to pay other expenses; exemption from hospital taxation upon signing a contract with the Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining Company, releasing them from all liabilities for sickness or injury while in their employ. Only a few of the miners voted, and most of these who did favored the Wardner hospital proposition. The result was that the company gave notice of its intention to deduct the dollar a month and that all miners objecting to this plan should call a once for their time. Most of the men went out on a strike, causing the temporary closing of the mine and mill. Strikers demanded $3.50 a day for all candle-bearers and the privilege of sustaining with their dollar a month the Central Union Hospital. Late in December the difficulty was adjusted by agreement between the local union and central union of the Coeur d'Alenes, denominated the "Consolidated Union," on the one side, and the Bunker Hill company on the other.

CHAPTER III.

CURRENT HISTORY—1892-1903.

The mine owners were in considerable difficulty throughout the entire fall of 1891 and a part of the ensuing year, not only through differences with their employes, but on account of disagreements with the railroad companies about freight rates. By January 15th all the producing mines in the district were closed except the Hunter, at Mullan, and the mines of the north side. The former remained in operation owing to the fact that its contract with the smelter only required its ore to be delivered at the railway. A mine owners' committee was sent to St. Paul and Omaha to arrange, if possible, for lower rates. In March the differences were settled by the railway company's agreeing to return to the 1890 rate, which was $2 a ton lower, and the Mine Owners' Association announced that on April 1st the mines would be reopened. However, they insisted that only $3 a day should be paid to carmen and shovelers, a proviso which did not tend to harmonize the strained relations existing between them and their men.

No attempt will be here made to discuss the rights and wrongs of this controversy, but that the reader may have some data upon which to found an opinion of his own, the official statements of both sides of the case are here incorporated, as follows:

SPOKANE, March 27, 1892.—As there has been some misrepresentation relative to the proposition of the mine owners of the Coeur d'Alenes as published on the 19th inst., the Association thinks it proper to publish the proposition again and also to give at length for the information of all concerned a summary of the present status of affairs in regard to the question at issue.

The proposition is given below, and what the mine owners intend as a fair, frank statement of the whole case follows. It is commended to the careful consideration of every citizen of the Coeur d'Alene region:

MINE OWNERS STATEMENT.

The Mine Owners' Association of the Coeur d'Alenes takes this public method of informing all former employes of the various mines and mills, as well as the public generally, that having reached a satisfactory settlement of all differences with the railway company relative to freight rates and other matters, that all mines will be ready to resume work on or about April 1, or sooner if a sufficient number of the old hands can get back before that date. In order to give them time to get back it is probable that not more than one or two mines will resume before the date stated, and preference will be given to all former employes.

Believing most earnestly that the advance of the wages of carmen and shovelers, which was forced upon the mine owners during the last year, was unjust and unreasonable, for obvious reasons, to both employers and miners, the Association begs leave to announce the following scale of wages: For all miners, $3.50 per day of ten hours; for carmen and shovelers, $3 per day of ten hours, except in shaft mines, where carmen and shovelers will be paid $3.50 per day, or carmen working in wet places in tunnel mines where gum clothes are necessary, will be paid $3.50 per day. Where miners or carmen are put on special eight-hour shifts the wages will be the same as for ten hours.

This scale of wages, after much consideration, has been determined upon as liberal and fair by the Association and it is hoped that it may meet the approval of all old employes as well as the public generally. The Association also announces that in all tunnel mines where a majority of the men desire to avoid working Sunday and Sunday night they may, on giving expression of such desire to the manager, have Sunday and Sunday night off each week.

The above are the wages that were paid at all the Coeur d'Alene mines for several years prior to last year, in fact ever since the mines started. During all those years there were no unions in this country, and there was never a cut in wages nor any strike, shut down or trouble whatever.

While we have no objections to miners' unions if they are governed and conducted by able, sensible, real miners, it is nevertheless a fact that during the year we have had unions in this country, there has been trouble somewhere most of the time; strikes and threats of strikes, committees and delegations continually, to the great annoyance and loss not only to the miners, but also to the community generally as well as the mine owners, and we challenge anybody to show in what manner the miners or owners or the community have been benefited one cent's worth for all the trouble caused, for all the time lost, for all the hard feelings engendered, for the many hard-earned dollars which the working miners have contributed to the coffers of the unions, excepting in the matter of the Sisters' hospital, which is a noble institution and worthy of generous support. These are facts which are known to all miners who have been in the country any length of time and too generally known to admit of any contradiction.

The only men who can be said to have been benefited at all are the carmen and shovelers, worthy men, no doubt, but it is well known that any reasonably intelligent men can learn to do this work in tunnel mines in a few days, and can it be said that these men are entitled to the same pay as skilled miners, who have spent years in learning their trade? We have endeavored many times to learn by what reason the unions demanded the same pay for these men that they do for miners, but have failed entirely to get any good reason. The only reasons given were that the carmen and shovelers work under ground and run the same dangers as miners, and also that such was the custom in Butte. The fact is that carmen and shovelers do not run the same risks as miners; for one reason they do not handle powder, and it is well known that more than one-half the accidents in the country have been caused in one way or another by unlooked for explosions of powder. Then, too, they work mostly on the floors and in tunnel levels, while the miner has to work at the front in new ground and often on staging. Even admitting that the danger is equal to both miner and carmen alike, we would ask if the world's work is paid for without regard to skill? Does the locomotive fireman get the same pay as the engineer? Does the brakeman get the same pay as the conductor? They also share the same danger. It is a recognized principle in business everywhere that men must be paid according to the skill necessary in the vocation they follow. Were it otherwise there would be no incentive for men to be anything but laborers.

We have gone into this matter at greater length than we would have done under other circumstances, as wages of carmen and shovelers has been the cause of endless trouble between the unions and the mine owners, and it seems to be the main bone of contention at the present time.

It is true that the mine owners raised the wages of carmen and shovelers last year at the demand of the unions, but they did so under protest and with a keen sense of its injustice. However, at that time lead and silver were much higher than at present, and desiring to get along amicably with the unions and being able to afford it, the wages of carmen and shovelers were raised. Now the conditions have changed; lead is only four cents and tending downward. Silver is below 90 and going lower, and the mine owners are therefore under the necessity of the strictest economy.

It is entirely a matter of business. The ores of this camp are, as everybody knows, low grade, and it requires the closest management to make the business profitable and when the enormous expense of opening and equipping one of the Coeur d'Alene lead mines is considered it must be evident to anybody inclined to a fair view that it takes a long time—often years—to get back the original investment, before any profit whatever can be made.

These are facts and we state them at length for the benefit of the many reasonable, sensible miners of this camp, who, we dare say, seldom hears matters of this sort discussed at all in their union meetings.

We wish to inform them also that our interests are mutual; that miners, mine owners and all the people of this Coeur d'Alene region depend solely upon the mines for support. There is nothing else, as everybody knows, and when the mines are stopped everything else must stop.

Now it is equally true that after the prospector, the mine owners were here first and by means of their skill and capital opened and equipped the mines and made it possible for not only the miners but all of the people of the several towns of this county to live here. Are they not, we would ask in common justice, entitled to some consideration? One would think not to hear the covert threats made by some members of the unions, and some who are not. Threats of running them out of the country, of burning their mills, of blowing up their flumes, of even murdering them, shooting them in their beds, and so on. Supposing these threats were carried out and all the mine owners, or a majority of them, were "killed off," as they say, how would it benefit them of the community at large? Would it start up the mines immediately or make business active? Certainly not. Would such a state of anarchy encourage capitalists to come into the country, to buy and develop the many fine prospects that are lying idle? We do not think it would be very encouraging. Does this ceaseless strife of coercing, men by threats and force to join the unions encourage married men to come in here with their families and build up the country? Does this talk of riot and murder and running people out of the country do anybody any good? It certainly does not, but on the contrary, it does the whole community harm.

What is the cause of it? Simply this: A few agitators, who are not miners (or if they are, never work at their trade), desire to terrorize this whole community and they make these utterances themselves, or induce their friends to do so, with this end in view, their sole purpose being to keep up a continuous state of turmoil and strife to the end that tribute may come in one way or another to them. To show how well they have succeeded, we may state that the whole community is terrorized or appears to be so, and in evidence of this is the fact that while the majority of the business men of this country admit that the mine owners' proposition is a fair one, and state among themselves that they are surprised that the unions do not accept it, they dare not say much in any public place, nor dare any newspaper in this camp to utter one word of comment upon the situation. A few men do all the talking and instead of devoting themselves to a fair discussion of the vital question of the time and giving every man a chance to be heard, their speeches are full of the most part a tirade against capital and full of invective against the mine owners. We would ask if this is sensible and right? Is there any justification for it? Are any higher wages paid in any camp in this or any other country where the conditions of living are as favorable as here? Is it not true that much lower wages are paid in many mining sections of this country where the conditions are not as favorable? Take Leadville and Aspen for instance, where the elevation is over 10,000 feet above the sea level, and where the mines are mostly carbonate, and therefore more or less unhealthy. The wages there now and have been since the strike of 1880 $3 per day for miners. It may be said that Butte pays shovelers and carmen $3.50 per day, but all the mines in Butte are shaft mines, and in shaft mines here we offer to pay the same wages.

Pay days have always been regular here, the men as well housed and have good board; the altitude is low and the climate pleasant; in short there is not a mining camp in the country where the conditions are more favorable. These are facts that are too well known to be gainsaid; still the central committee of the miners' union has served formal notice on the mine owners that they will not permit any of the mines to start up on the proposition offered and intimate that they, the committee, mean to dictate the terms, before any more work can be done in this camp. While this is the ultimatum of the committee, many of the best miners of the country have told several mine owners and others that their proposition is a fair one and express their approval; still they fear to go into the unions and state their honest convictions. As it is with the business men and newspapers, so it is with the miners themselves. They all fear to state their real opinions for obvious reasons. We would ask if this is a desirable condition of things? We hold that this is a free country and that every man in this community is entitled to express his honest convictions without being threatened for doing so. We have an interest in this question, for the living of all depends upon its solution, and we hold that it is not only the privilege, but it is the duty of every honest citizen to state his opinions frankly and freely.

We do not ask anybody to take our side. We leave the side that they will take to their own good judgment, but we say they should take one side or the other and express their views freely and openly with the end in view of securing what is just and honorable to all concerned. All trust also that every citizen who has any stake in this community will appreciate the necessity of discountenancing and opposing any acts of violence which misguided men, stirred up by seditious talk, may undertake.

We must have law and order, for without them we can have no prosperity and acts of violence and riot never result in any good to anyone. We trust there will be no more disgraceful scenes such as were witnessed during the strike at Wardner last fall, when over 100 armed white men waited at midnight on one lone man, who had a wife and family, and ordered him to leave the country at once or they would kill him. This we hold was a high handed and cowardly outrage. By what right did those men arrogate to themselves the authority to order an American citizen to leave this country? And this is only one instance of many, and we wish to inform those who are now contemplating similar outrages that the law provides that such crimes can be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary and we propose hereafter to see the law strictly enforced, and we think we will have the active support of every respectable citizen of this country in so doing.

It may be said by some that this is no fight of ours; we have no interest in it. We answer that every man who has any stake in this community is interested to the extent of all he has to secure good order and prevent outrages. And further it may be said that in case of riot here or the burning or destruction of any mills or other property, Shoshone county will have to pay the loss. This precedent was established fully at the time of the Pittsburg riots in '77. Allegheny county paid over $3,000,000 to the owners of property destroyed, and is not this right? What do we pay taxes for? Can it be said, therefore, that where men are daily talking outrage and riot and inflaming the passions of men who have not one cent at stake themselves that the citizens who have something and pay the taxes have no interest in this affair? We think every sensible man will say we have a deep interest, and mean to see to it.

Relative to the miners, we would say again that we have no objection to them if they are conducted by prudent, sensible miners who work for their living. As long as they devote their efforts to mutually aiding and benefitting all working men, by all lawful means we say God-speed them. But when they undertake to run the whole country; when they undertake to terrorize everybody and by threats and intimidation, coerce and force men to join the union whether they wish to or not, and if they do not join, by force take them from their work and drive them out of the country; when they talk violence and undertake to lay down the law to everybody, we say they are going altogether too far, and moreover, that they cannot succeed by any such means in accomplishing any permanent good for themselves or anybody else. They will merely defeat the ends they aim at.

It will doubtless be said that the unions do not undertake any of these things. We beg to ask, who were the men who perpetrated the outrages in Wardner last summer and terrorized that community for weeks by threats and acts of violence? Who were the men who drove the two miners off the Little Chap ground last fall and threatened their lives if they did not leave the country? Who are the men who have undertaken by threats and force to make miners at nearly every mine in the country join the union, and in several cases have taken them from their work and forced them to leave the country? It may be answered that the unions are not responsible for these acts of some of their members. But were not many of these acts sanctioned by a formal vote of the unions and even if they were not, are not the unions responsible for all the acts of their members, which arise out of or are caused by talk and acts within the unions. We hold that they are, and moreover that every member of the union, whether a willing one or forced, is responsible for every act of his union, lawful or unlawful.

Men cannot associate together and form societies to do certain things and then because they fail to attend or do not vote, claim that they are not responsible and that certain two or three leaders made speeches and motions and carried things to suit themselves. This has, we think, been the trouble right along in the proceedings of the unions. Two or three men who can talk, make all the speeches and all the motions and the majority of the sober, sensible men, partly through fear and partly through diffidence, have very little to say about it; in short, take no more active part in the acts of their unions than if they were 100 miles away. The votes even do not express the sentiments of those present, for if we hear them rightly, they are given orally, vive voce, and not by ballots, with the result that after two or three inflammable speeches damning the mine owners have been made, very few have the courage to vote no. Now, we would ask if any body of men can hope for permanent success by pursuing any such methods?

It is well known to those who are acquainted with the history of the miners' unions that the pursuit of such methods have been the cause of the ruin and end of many of them. The leaders, not content with a conservative course and accomplishment of the beneficial objects that properly come within the province of the unions, undertake to run everything and everybody with a high hand, to lay down the law to the whole community; in short, they use their brief authority to convert the unions they control into great tyrants which not only grind and terrorize the community, but also their own members. Such a course, whether pursued by a miners' union or a government, can end only in defeat and ruin. It is unnecessary to state instances. There are dozens of them and old miners can call to mind many within their own experience. They know of several cases where, urged on by reckless leaders, the union demanded an advance for miners from $3.50 to $4 per day, and after a strike which cost the miners, mine owners and the community a great loss of time and money, they ended by going to work at $3 per day. If the present condition of things is maintained in the Coeur d'Alenes, we very much fear that after weeks and months of idleness, turmoil and strife, a similar result will be reached. History repeats itself over and over again.

It may be answered that the members of the Coeur d'Alene unions are conservative, prudent and temperate, and never undertake anything not properly within the province of any mutual benefit society. We would ask if many of the leaders have not now made up their minds that if they are successful in the present conflict, they will within sixty days urge a strike for $4 per day for miners, for the closing of all company boarding houses, for a boycott on all business enterprises in which any mine owner has an interest, for a rule that no miner will be allowed to work in any mine in the Coeur d'Alenes over seven days unless he joins the union, if not freely then by force, that no mine foreman shall discharge any man under ground until he has given a satisfactory reason for so doing to the union. Not only have these things been talked up, but they have been voted upon, and if not definitely determined upon, it is well known that they will be when the time is considered ripe.

Suppose under this state of affairs, the mine owners were to accede at once to the ultimatum of the central committee, can it reasonably be expected that any permanent peace in our fair country would be secured? Vain hope! We venture the belief and we have good grounds for it, that sixty days would not elapse until trouble would arise somewhere, and the fiat of the union would go forth and must be complied with or the offending mine, or all of them, would be closed down and the men driven out. Under this state of affairs, we, the mine owners, think it is about time to call a halt and we do so most emphatically; and we think every right thinking man in the country, be he miner or business man, will say, "Amen. You are right and we are with you." We would ask again, was there ever any cut in wages in any camp in the Coeur d' Alenes, was there every any strike or any trouble whatever, or any damning of mine owners, or threats of murder or of the destruction of property before we had the union? Everybody knows there was not.

There was peace and amity everywhere until the fall of 1899, when the miners' union was first formed, and trouble began almost immediately and we have had lots of it since and it has been increasing in volume and violence up to the present time. It has been said that the mine owners have broken a contract which they had with the unions to pay shovelers and carmen $3.50 per day and that the mine owners should have notified the unions before publishing any change of wages. We would in answer ask if the unions notified the mine owners last year before they decided on demanding a raise in the wages of carmen and shovelers? They did not, but they simply made a peremptory demand on the mine owners and said, "Raise these carmen's pay to $3.50 a day or we will on a certain day shut down your mine," and meeting with refusal in three places, they did close the mines, to the great loss of all concerned. When the advance was granted by one mine after another in order to have peace, we do not remember that there was in a single case any covenant or agreement that it should stand for any specified time. In short the mine owners had no opportunity to agree and they were simply held up and told to do certain things, which they did, and there was no promise or agreement on either side that it should continue for any specified time, or that any notice should be given by any one side or the other desiring to change it.

To return to the question of the moment. The central committee has notified us that they will permit no work to be done at any mine in the Coeur d'Alene excepting at $3.50 per day for all men underground and at short hours, that is to say, ten hours for the day shift, excepting Saturday—nine hours—and nine hours for the night shift, excepting Saturday night—eight hours. Let us take a look over the situation and see what justice there is in this ultimatum. Is it not true that the price of silver is 86 cents per ounce and going lower every day? Is it not true that silver mines in Butte and in nearly every other large camp are daily shutting down because they simply cannot afford to run? Is it not true that there are from 1,000 to 2,000 miners idle in Butte and vicinity and many thousands more in other camps all over the country? Is it not true that copper and iron ore are very low, and that in consequence there are in the Lake Superior region thousands of idle miners and laborers? Is it not true that the miners in that region are working at $2 and less per day of ten hours? Is it not true that in nearly every camp in Utah, Colorado and California wages are but $3 per day or less? And notwithstanding these facts we, the mine owners of the Coeur d'Alene, are being damned and vilified and threatened for offering to pay the scale of wages stated at the beginning of this article. We will simply add that we have determined that the wages cited are fair and liberal, and all we ought to be asked to pay, and having so determined we do not mean to start up our mines at any higher wages. We will wait until the 1st of April for our men to make up their minds, and if they decline to accept, we will have no other course but to claim the right to work our mines (which we have paid for and own) outside of any unions, and we are fully determined to do so without any dictation from any association, conceding, however, the right to every person to demand any price they see fit for their labor as long as they do not interfere with the rights of others, and we feel confident the law will uphold us in so doing.

We would ask in conclusion: What is the cause of all the cursing of mine owners that we hear? What is the cause of all the misrepresentations, all the covert threats and invectives? Is there any sense or reason in it? Have we not paid everybody regularly all that we owed them? Have we swindled anybody? Have we wronged anybody in any way? Was anything of the kind ever heard prior to last year?

We challenge anybody to show any just cause for it. Would anybody be living in the Coeur d'Alenes if there were not mine owners?

COEUR D'ALENE MINE OWNERS' ASSOCIATION.

THE REPLY OF THE UNIONS.

As miners, we are not gifted with the literary abilities of the hired attorneys of the Mine Owners' Association, nor at the same time with that talent of making statements so absurd and false as to cause a blush of apology on the cheeks of Ananias, but as working men we ask a thoughtful and considerate public to view both sides of the question before forming an opinion as to the merits or demerits of the case brought before their notice. Without eulogy or self praise we can say that the character for honesty and integrity of those members of the miners' unions who have been in the past or are now prominently identified with these organizations in the Coeur d'Alenes, and as officers of the several unions in the respective communities in which they reside, is such as to be above and beyond the reproach of the Mine Owners' Association; they can certainly lay claim to be practical miners.

The miners of the Coeur d'Alenes can appeal to the people of this section, in whose minds the memory is still fresh of the course pursued by some of the mine owners when an endeavor was made to establish the Sisters' hospital in our midst. It is also well known that what they now truthfully call a "noble institution" formerly they designated a "foreign and un-American corporation." It is also thoroughly understood that it was the refusal of some Wardner companies to deduct hospital fees in accordance with the wishes of the majority of their employes that led to the misunderstanding of last summer, and that since the local unions have consolidated, the organizations have, in proportion to the amount of fees collected in dues from their members, cared for their sick, as well as decently interred their dead, and in sick benefits have paid as largely as any of the secret benevolent societies in existence, besides equally establishing better feelings for the welfare of their members and their mutual protection. When we bear this expense we would like to ask the Mine Owners' Association and the public whether the taxpayers of Shoshone county and the individual members of the unions are benefited one cent's worth by the trouble caused, time lost or feelings engendered? We emphatically say yes, and challenge even our worthy foes to truthfully deny this assertion.

From items appearing in the public press, gathered from some of our mine managers by reporters in neighboring states, we are led to believe that wages cut no figure in the late shut down, but were the sole motive that has been to crush out organized labor and to establish in the Coeur d'Alenes by importation of contract labor (that curse of American institutions) a condition similar to that brought about from this course in some of the older states. That the question at issue is a mere matter of business no one seeks to deny, but the fact still remains that nowhere in latter days has capital invested in mining enterprise been so productive in so short a time as in the Coeur d'Alenes. In proof of this assertion we have only to quote from the annual reports of some of our mine managers to their directors for the past year. One of the managers sometime since made a statement, afterward appearing in the public press, that the concessions received from the railroad companies would to his company alone make a difference of $30,000 per annum, which, taken with the dividends paid during the past year, makes an immense yearly return on the capital originally invested. What is true in this case is equally so of the other companies, except where affairs have, as is generally understood, been grossly mismanaged.

That the "altitude is low and the climate pleasant" we do not deny; nor do we feel under any obligations to the mine owner for this gratuitous gift of Providence, but if at some of the mines where the companies run the boarding and lodging houses the condition of the houses and the quality of the board were in proportion to nature's gifts in the first instance we would feel that in that matter we were being treated with only a merited degree of justice. To show how unfairly the Mine Owners' Association dealt with us, let us review their assertion that the wages offered in their statement were those existing ever since the mines started. We answer that the statement is false, for in all of the principal mines until the summer of 1887 the wages for all underground men were $3.50 per day, when the wages of carmen and shovelers in some of the mines were reduced to $3 per day. Immediately after this reduction of wages the first miners' union was organized, as a natural sequence, and to say that the increase made last year was paid under protest is also false, as we hold conclusive proof that in certain mines in this section the additional wages were paid without the solicitation of the miners' union, much less under protest. The ultimatum of the Mine Owners' Association conveys the idea that we are nothing more nor less than a band of anarchists continually threatening the destruction of life and property, liable at any moment to carry out such threats if necessary to accomplish our purpose. This is interesting news to the people of this section. Whatever the effect of such slanders on the outside may be we have no fear of the result at home. We ask when, where and by whom were such threats made? When did the destruction of life by the miners' union begin? When were the mines of the several companies burned? When were the flumes blown up and what name did the mine manager bear when in the flesh who was killed in his boots or threatened with such consequences by any member of the miners' union? We assert without fear of successful contradiction that such dire threats were never made by anyone acting under authority of the union, and we know, as do all the citizens of this section, they were never carried out nor could they be with the consent of any of the unions.

Of some of the managers it may be said that a change seems to have come over the spirit of their dreams since September of last year. On the 24th of that month the then manager of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company, with the then central union, entered into an agreement in which the following occurs:

"In consideration of the foregoing concessions the consolidated miners' unions of the Coeur d'Alene hereby guarantee to protect all the company's property, its agents and officers, from any acts or demonstrations of violence or threats from individuals or bodies of its members."

We ask before becoming a party to the statement published, did the said manager satisfy his mind as to the date on which the local or central union violated this or any other agreement made with him or others? The Coeur d'Alene managers did enter into written agreements with the union, their denial to the contrary notwithstanding, in which the following occurs: "That there shall be no person employed in our mines at a less price than $3.50 per day until I shall first notify you in writing."

There is no doubt that the mine owners would not object to the unions provided they were officered by their nominees, but to this every member objects, as they should, in order to maintain some independence that in future as in the past they might be in a position to direct their efforts to mutually benefit all working men and by lawful means, and to state that the central or any other local union means in the future to select a county ticket to be voted on in the fall is a falsehood without a vestige of truth. The miners did without doubt at the last election vote for and elect certain managers and others to the state legislature, but the record left by some of them was such as not to give much encouragement to the people to elect any of them again. The union as a society did not perpetrate the outrages in Wardner last summer, but as citizens, perhaps, attended a mass meeting where certain men were forced to leave by the decree of said meeting. Again, to say armed men forced American citizens to leave Wardner is so transparently falsehood as to remain unanswered. If our local unions sanction the acts of the central organization it is not by intimidation, as the public would be made to believe. Our constitution is open to the public and we invite all to study it carefully, as we defy any one to say we are an unlawful body. As for using coercion in order to enlist members, the people here know well we have never used the like with one-half the force the association has done to compel outside mines to fall in line. Will the Mine Owners' Association allow their constitution to be perused by the public? We think not, because from information now in our hands, we know it is so opposed to law and order that the darkened archives of the association is its safest retreat.

In conclusion we say that business enterprises have not been boycotted by the unions here simply because the mine owners were interested, but in some cases when attempts were made to force men to trade with such concerns the unions did interfere, but never without just cause. How has it been with the Managers' Association? It has continually pursued our members, and to be an officer in either local or central union has been for a long time since sufficient reason for the blacklisting of the offending member. In all mining districts in the west we have miners' unions, but owners in other sections contrive to get along without a mine managers' association. We thank the citizens of our respective communities for their expressions of sympathy and hope always to merit their approval.

THE CENTRAL MINERS' UNION OF THE COEUR D'ALENE.

The proposition of the mine owners was finally rejected by the Central Executive union and the Coeur d'Alene Mine Owners' Association issued a manifesto in which they said, among other things:

"We have made an effort in good faith to resume work, but cannot do so under existing circumstances. We could bring in men from distant mining sections who would be glad to work for the wages offered, but we will not do so except as a last resort. * * * We desire to announce that we now withdraw the proposition made, and also that we have decided, as we cannot work the mines, to reduce expenses as much as possible and to allow our mines to remain idle until June 1st, by which time we hope to have made such arrangements as will enable us to resume business."

As the first of June approached the mine owners began bringing in miners from the outside, under guard of armed detectives. They also sued out injunctions in the Federal court and had them served on a number of different persons, restraining them from interfering in any way with the operation of the mines. During the month of June some of the mines were run by non-union labor, short-handed and intermittently, whereas in others union and non-union men seem to have been working side by side, the former, at least, at the old scale of $3.50 a day, and in still others only union men were employed.

The mines which came under the special displeasure of the union men were the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, at Wardner, and the Gem and Frisco, on Canyon creek. At the Canyon creek mines the feeling between the union strikers and the non-union men who had taken their places and were working under guard was very bitter. Exchange of harsh words were very frequent and fist fights were not uncommon. These eventually precipitated an armed encounter on July 11th between union men and the employes and guards of the Frisco mine. At about five o'clock in the morning of that day the firing commenced. It is said by both sides that the shooting was not intended at first to do other execution than to frighten the men out of the mine. Soon, however, a pitched battle resulted, both miners and guards firing to kill. The strikers were at a disadvantage, so withdrew up the hills. It was now that the plan of destroying the mills took shape in their minds. They came to the end of the tramway, placed some giant powder in a car and started it to the buildings on its errand of destruction. The fuse was too short, so the explosion took place too soon to do serious damage, though the tramway was destroyed. Powder was then carried to the flume and, the water having been first turned off, sent down the penstock and to the water wheel. The old mill was thus wrecked, but fortunately most of the men had withdrawn to the new mill, thus saving their lives. The men in the mill continued firing a short time, but soon realizing their hopeless position, surrendered.

Soon the battle began at the Gem. The men in that mine had made some preparation by erecting barricades of wood and lumber. As the night shift was going off and the day force going on, the firing began. After a large number of shots had been exchanged by the strikers in the town of Gem and the men at the mine, a conference was held under flag of truce, in which it was agreed that the non-union men should surrender if so advised by A. L. Gross, the only member of the Gem company in the country. Gross advised the surrender and the men handed over their arms.

In the two battles two non-union men were killed, namely, John Starlick and Ivery Bean, also three strikers,—James Hennessy, Gus Carlson and Harry Cummings. A considerable number were wounded.

After their victories at the Gem and the Frisco the strikers proceeded to Wardner, going from a point outside of Wallace to the junction in two freight cars propelled by gravity. They arrived after dark on the night of the 11th, took possession of the Bunker Hill concentrator and placed a ton of powder under it. Next morning Mr. Clement had the choice of discharging his non-union employees and sending them out of the country or having his mill blown to pieces. Under the circumstances he agreed to send away the men, which was done.

Many of the non-union men left the country July 12th, going by rail to the Mission and arriving at that point about three o'clock. The steamer was transferring troops across the lake and did not reach the Mission until one o'clock next morning. While waiting, the non-union men were made the victims of an outrage which has been condemned by both parties to the quarrel as a dastardly and utterly inexcusable affair. Persons whose identity is unknown to the writer and perhaps not known with certainty by many outside of their own number, came down on a hand car to the Mission and attacked the unarmed men with guns. The men fled, of course. They were pursued by the attacking party over the meadow toward Fourth of July canyon, six miles distant, and all of them subjected to the hardship of spending a night in various hiding places. Those who took refuge along the banks of the river either made their way back to the Mission in small boats or were picked up by the steamer next morning. From the number missing it was supposed that many had been killed, but no bodies were found, although diligent search was made for them. At least one man, John H. Abbott, was severely wounded in the left breast by a bullet, so that he was not expected to recover, but we are informed that he eventually did. The purpose of the attack was doubtless robbery rather than bloodshed. Many of the victims had everything in the world that they possessed taken from them. It should be added that the miners' union of the Coeur d'Alene emphatically denied that it or any of its members had anything to do with this outrage, directly or indirectly.

Martial law was promptly declared, and under the protection of the soldiers many of the expelled non-union men returned. With such help, the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company had resumed work before July 1st. According to the mining notes in the Coeur d'Alene Miner of July 30th, the Gem, Granite, Custer and Sierra Nevada were then all at work and all except the Custer with non-union men. The Tiger and Poorman mines were closed by command of Colonel J. F. Curtis, on August 20th, also all the saloons in Burke. The reason was unknown, but it was supposed that the colonel considered the mines and the saloons as meeting places of those plotting crimes and breaches of the peace.

Many of those who were most active in the uprising were compelled to flee from the country; many others were placed under arrest, but only a comparatively few were convicted and punished. Twenty-five were tried in the Federal court on a charge of violating the restraining order, and of these Thomas O'Brien was sentenced to eight months and F. T. Dean, R. M. Boyce, Thomas Henney and Thomas Doyle to six months' imprisonment. A number were tried at Coeur d'Alene City for conspiracy and four were sentenced to the House of Correction at Detroit, Michigan,—George A. Pettibone for two years, M. L. Devine and Charles St. Clair, for eighteen months, and John Murphy for fifteen months.

Gradually the troops were removed, and November 18, 1892, martial law was revoked. Besides the state militia there were stationed in the Coeur d'Alenes companies from the Fourth, Fourteenth, Twenty-second and Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, all under command of General W. P. Carlin.

Eighteen hundred and ninety-three, the year of panic and hard times, was not a prosperous one in the Coeur d'Alene country. During the spring most of the mills closed down, throwing hundreds out of employment. May 11th the Small & Colby Lumber Company, of Kingston, failed, owing $35,000 to employees, but it did a noble thing. By giving a mortgage on all its property it raised sufficient money to pay its men in full, saving, no doubt, a great deal of hardship and suffering. By September county warrants, which before the financial crash brought 90 cents on the dollar, had fallen to 40 cents. In the gold belt prospects were allowed to go without even the performance of assessment work, and valuable properties were permitted to lie idle. In the silver-lead belt many of the mines remained inactive during the greater part of the year. The railroads offered a reduction of $2 a ton during the spring, and an effort was made in July to resume work, but the mine owners claimed they could not afford to pay the union scale of $3.50 a day, owing to the low price of lead and silver, and the miners refused to accept a less rate. As a result large bodies of men were out of employment and there was undoubtedly some destitution among their families.

The Murray Sun, which was strongly union in its sympathies, thus comments on the situation in its issue of October 13, 1893:

The miners of Canyon creek have made a great and grave mistake by not accepting, in the first place, the sliding scale of wages for tunnel mines, and subsequently the tender of $3 and $3.50 for the same character of mining. As a result the mills have refused to start and hundreds are out of employment. The present unsettled condition of lead and silver should have been taken into consideration by all intelligent laboring men, who are not bent on destroying the very industry that upholds all other classes of industry throughout the civilized world. Labor in the Coeur d'Alenes would have achieved one of the greatest victories yet recorded in the union had either scale been adopted, and set every mine in motion, the world would have applauded and steady employment would have been given under a sliding scale at least, to every man in the union, although he was on the black list of the most infamous military rule that ever cursed civilization. The right against unions had ceased and they had been victorious.

A new question presented itself. Silver declined and lead declined in sympathy. The mines could not be operated successfully without some labor concessions. Although requested, they were refused by the miners of Canyon creek and Mullan, although at Wardner some of the mills have been operating. The majority of the mines and mills remain idle and hundreds of miners are living upon the charity of organized labor elsewhere, their families are in need and the children, we are told, frequently cry for bread. Many of those who sympathized with organized labor have, though prosperous eighteen months ago, been reduced to dire straits, and some have gone to the wall. Indeed the situation could not be more distressing in the face of a long winter. Yet all could easily be changed and humiliation avoided by saying "We accept the proposed terms solely on account of the depressed value of silver and lead." It would have been dignified and honorable. But another feature is also presented. The agitation over, wages now being carried on here is attracting outside attention and laborers have been coming to the south fork by hundreds. These men are nearly all broke and will demand work in preference to starvation. What will result? A permanent decline in wages to $3 and $2.50.

However, the silver lining to the dark clouds is pointed out by the same paper in its issue of December 29th in the following language:

Although dark shadows are thrown across the country on the threshhold of the new year, with business stagnation everywhere in the land, the people of the Coeur d'Alenes have cause, to some extent at least, to congratulate themselves that the industrial condition is not so bad here as it is elsewhere. Fortunately the mining situation in the gold belt has greatly improved during the past year and the new one opens with greater promise of healthy growth than any previous one in the history of the camp. During the past year the Mother lode has made substantial improvements, increasing its milling capacity from five to ten stamps; the Golden Chest has dropped ten stamps regularly and shipped a large quantity of concentrates and crude ore; the King ten-stamp mill has run a part of the time; the Lion three-stamp mill has run most of the year and promises to grow into a big ten-stamp mill battery before another new year; the Fay roller mill on Pony gulch has been running for some time, off and on; the Ward arrastre at Delta has been grinding for months and we may safely estimate that the output of gold from this source during the year has been $200,000. Our extensive placer interests, too, have shown good and substantial development. The booming process in our big gulches and on lower Prichard creek has come to stay; large tracts of land are thus turned over and washed; the main creek here and on Trail gulch is being sluiced and drifted with as good results as ever before, or better, and no impression is apparent on the great gravel deposits, while the old channel is still in its infancy of development, yielding its regular output of dust from year to year. The output of the placers for the past year is estimated at $300,000. This would give us a total yield of $500,000 from quartz and placers, a healthy state of affairs. One of the incidents of the year has been the successful experiment of the Golden Chest property with the new cyanide process of extracting concentrated sulphurets.

Although the year 1894 had a somewhat unpropitious opening, it brought substantial improvements over its predecessor in financial conditions. There were some snow slides in January, in one of which "Doc" McGrevey and John Bollen, prospectors, lost their lives. This was in Bowlder gulch, two miles east of Mullan. In February a serious accident occurred in the Williams slope of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, by which Patrick Curran, Adolph Markaite and Frank Sobalja lost their lives; Peter Overwrader suffered a compound fracture of the left leg, and Henry Schmelling a double fracture of the leg and a compound fracture of the right foot. The coroner's jury in the case held the company at fault. During the closing days of March seven snowslides occurred on Canyon creek, damaging flumes and railway tracks and by interfering with transportation causing mining companies to suspend operations. One slide in the vicinity of the Black Bear mine buried and occasioned the death of the following persons: Stephen Deiro, Mrs. Stephen Deiro, Victoria Deiro, five years old, Michael Martino, Mrs. Benjamin Rowe. In May, the entire south fork valley was flooded, doing immense damage, especially to railroads. Many houses were entirely submerged. At Harrison the water was at one time twenty-four inches above the railroad track. From Cataldo to Kingston there was scarcely any track of either road visible; between Kingston and Wallace, the Union Pacific track was badly washed out, and between that point and Mullan still greater damage was done. On Canyon creek the railways had been similarly damaged, while the village of Black Bear was for a time under water and its inhabitants were camped on the hillsides. Wallace was never in danger of loss of life or great property loss, but it suffered considerable damage. No mail reached the town between May 22d and June 5th. It is stated that at Murray the snow fall during the winter had been 20 feet 3 inches, and on the higher altitudes around it was known to have been vastly greater. The precipitation, rain and snow, from November 7, 1893, to March 31, 1894, was 29.4 inches.

As the season advanced these difficulties passed away and the damage was repaired, though the Coeur d'Alene cutoff was not in operation until late in July. The second week in August all the Canyon creek mines, which had been idle, resumed operations, paying $3.50 per diem for all underground workers. The terms of the agreement between the unions and the mine owners, under which the work was begun, were thus set out in writing:

"The present maximum wages of $3.50 per day shall be paid to all underground men.

"There shall be no discrimination in the employment of men, the men now in the country shall have the preference. No men shall be imported for the purpose of working in the mines.

"The men who lately left the employment of the company, who were objected to, shall not again have employment in any of the above mines.

"It is hereby agreed by both parties hereto that should any difference arise between the parties hereto, that the same shall be settled by arbitration.

"It is the desire of both of the above parties that the long existing differences be and are hereby buried for all time; that henceforth both parties be friends and work for the mutual benefit of both parties."

This agreement was signed by the Milwaukee Mining Company, the Standard Mining Company, the Coeur d'Alene Mining and Concentrating Company by A. B. Campbell and A. L. Gross; also by Edward Boyce, president central executive committee Miners' Union of the Coeur d'Alenes.

Notwithstanding all drawbacks, it is claimed that times in Shoshone county were better than in 1893, and it is certain according to the report of the United States assay office at Boise the production of mineral wealth was greater.

The year 1895 was, however, far from being a prosperous one in the lead-silver district of Shoshone county. The price of lead was low. The union in most places was successful in maintaining the $3.50 schedule, though there was much trouble between the labor organizations and the mine owners, rendering production fitful and unsteady. Where a community is depending entirely upon one industry, it can be easily imagined what the effect of having that industry paralyzed is. All business must become stagnant; all energy is fettered. It was stated that the price of living became cheaper during the summer and fall than was ever before known in the camp.

In October, 1895, there was a slight uneasiness lest open trouble betwen the contending forces in the labor disputes should break out. A dispatch was sent to the governor saying that the Hunter mine was threatened. The governor telegraphed the sheriff to protect life and property or martial law would be declared. Fortunately there was no cause of alarm and the sheriff, after visiting the scene, so advised the chief executive.

But while the lead mines were comparatively quiet, the gold belt of the Coeur d'Alenes was making substantial progress. "Without noise," says the Sun, "mill after mill has been erected and the development work has kept pace with the increased reduction facilities. As no outside capital has been invested, we can lay claim to superior merit for our prospects and mines, for the home people are investing from experience and knowledge of their surroundings. From two stamp mills two years ago we have increased to nine and one in course of construction. The high placers lacked water during the year and did not do so well as in previous years, but this admitted of some development work and the season was not entirely a blank. The low placers have held their own. Altogether our people should feel grateful toward 1895, for it has placed the gold belt on the road to success."

The year 1896 brought brighter prospects to the silver-lead sections. In February arrangements had been made whereby the following mills were either in operation or soon to open: Standard, capacity 500 tons of crude ore; Bunker Hill & Sullivan, 800 tons; Last Chance, 150 tons; Stemwinder, 150 tons; Gem, 200 tons; Helena-Frisco, 500 tons; Tiger-Poorman, 450 tons; Morning, 300 tons; Hunter, 150 tons. It was expected that the output of the year would exceed that of 1891, the banner year in the history of the district.

Another encouraging feature was the fact that on March 18th county warrants sold at par for the first time, it is said, in the history of the county. It was claimed in January, 1897, that the county's indebtedness was reduced, during 1895 and 1896, about $25,000.

The encouraging indications in the early months of 1896 did not prove illusory, for the mines were operated extensively throughout practically the whole of the year, employing from nine to twelve hundred men steadily at an average daily stipend of perhaps $3. The price of lead continued low; there was talk at times of a general cessation of operations, but fortunately no such thing occurred. In December, according to the Wallace Press, the following mines were running steadily: At Burke, the Standard and the Mammoth; at Gem, the Frisco; at Mullan, the Morning and the Hunter; at Wardner, the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, Last Chance and Stemwinder; at Murray, the Idaho, Daddy, Golden Chest and Yosemite. "In a smaller way," continues the paper, "we find the Hecla, Gem, Granite, Joe Dandy and Nellie, all under lease; and in addition to them there are the Tiger-Poorman, Formosa, Phœnix, Black Cloud and numerous others with small forces at work."

The one disaster of the year was the flood of November, one unprecedented for that season. The evening of the 15th, Prichard creek broke over the north bank in the upper part of Murray and the water rushed down Gold street. Early next morning people were warned by the night watchman that they were in danger, and by three o'clock men were astir with lanterns in the intense darkness and heavy rains. A hard fight was necessary to save the Second street bridge. Some other bridges were swept away and much damage was inflicted upon mining property and that stored in cellars.

On the south fork the loss to property owners was considerable. Wallace was damaged sixteen or seventeen thousand dollars, the small farms between that point and the lake were inundated, roads were obliterated, bridges swept away, railways washed out. The Northern Pacific train from the east failed to reach Wallace on the 16th, though it got as far as Mullan, and traffic from the west ceased two days earlier.

It was claimed by the Sun that November, 1896, broke three records. It had to its credit the greatest precipitation of any month since the settlement of the county, 11.12 inches; the lowest temperature for the season of the year ever experienced, 8 degrees below zero; and the highest water ever known.

Ever since the discovery of the mines, the proposition of dividing Shoshone county so as to give the southern portion autonomy in local government has been agitated in some form. It can hardly be denied that justice and equity require a different division of the territory of Northeastern Idaho than now obtains and that something should be done for the amelioration of conditions in the Weippe and Pierce City sections. None have deserved better at the hands of the state government than these people. For years they maintained a county organization, although their numbers were so few and the revenue so meagre that the burden was a grievous one and could not have been borne had not the county officers for several years remitted half of their legal salaries. Then came the discovery of the mines, the removal of the county seat and the incurring of a large indebtedness, a proportionate share of which the southern section was required to pay, though it was incurred solely on behalf of the Coeur d'Alene watershed. "The protracted and excessively costly litigation attending the development of the Coeur d'Alene mines, as well as the many criminal trials in the same section, ran the county debt up enormously in the two years succeeding the discovery. The first term of the district court in the Coeur d'Alenes was held at Eagle City in July, 1884, and continued six weeks. The docket comprised thirty-nine civil cases and the grand jury found six indictments for murder. One of the latter, the State versus Bernard, for killing Enright, was transferred to Lewiston on change of venue, and cost the taxpayers of Shoshone county close upon $20,000. None of these cases originated in the Pierce City country. In the general election of 1884 and subsequently, county commissioners were elected who inaugurated of wagon roads throughout the Coeur d'Alene country and thus very largely increased the county's debt without benefit to the southern half."

It was natural then that the people who suffered by the existing arrangement should keep up agitation for their relief, but the matter did not assume definite form until 1897. In the spring of that year a bill was introduced dividing Shoshone county and creating a new political entity by the name of Clearwater. It passed both houses of the legislature, but was vetoed by the governor. The action of the chief executive was heartily condemned not alone by those who suffered through it but by the fair-minded and justice-loving people of the north.

Two unfortunate events transpired during the year, no doubt arising out of the feeling engendered by the labor difficulties. May 14th, about 1 o'clock in the morning, a number of masked men entered the bar-room of the Steele hotel, Mullan, and compelled O. S. Roof, lessee of the bar, to conduct them to a room in which rifles belonging to the local militia company were stored, also to the ammunition. Next day Capt. Link, of Company F, residing at Wardner, in compliance with telegraphic instructions from the governor, repaired to Mullan and secured such guns as were in other parts of the town. He said the stolen guns were in reality the property of the United States. The number of men engaged in the robbery is said to have been six, to the identity of no one of whom has any clue been found. It is known that the unfortunate occurrence prevented the consummation of three different deals in mining property.

The second event which stained the annals of the Coeur d'Alenes in 1897 transpired at Gem on the evening of December 23d. Just at Yuletide, when all Christendom was singing the glad gospel of "Peace on earth, good will to men," foul and cowardly assassins to the number of about twenty entered, at the hour of nine in the evening, or later, the house in which Fred D. Whitney, foreman of the Frisco mill, was rooming. They proceeded to Whitney's apartments, forced his companion, Mr. Weimar, to turn his face to the wall, while Whitney arose and dressed, then compelled Whitney to accompany them. They took him through the town of Gem, and when he reached the outskirts of the village he probably sought to escape by flight, whereupon a number of shots were fired and he fell wounded. He was discovered a little later by a man entering the town, and eventually conveyed to Providence hospital. Examination proved that he had been shot through the right thigh, the bullet entering from behind. The limb was amputated; the man could not stand the shock, and on Christmas day he died. He was a member in good standing of a Montana miners' union. The perpetrators of the foul deed escaped arrest and punishment, though rewards aggregating $17,000 were offered for their apprehension and conviction.

In the mines the year 1897 was one of progress and prosperity, as appears from the following review from the Wallace Press of December 29th:

> The year 1897 now drawing to a close has been a most prosperous one for the Coeur d'Alenes, few regions in the world showing as decided a move forward and none having brighter prospects for the year about to be born. At the present rate of production practically one-half of the lead product of the United States comes from the northern end of Shoshone county, and the gold, silver and antimony are worth little, if any, less than the lead.
>
> The commencement of the prosperous times antedates the beginning of 1897, although the greatest strides were made during the year. When the Tiger-Poorman concentrator burned, March 17, 1896, it looked as though a hard blow was struck to the silver-lead belt. The mine was already down 1,200 feet and was the most expensive one in the district to operate. For weeks it was doubted if the company would rebuild, in spite of assurances that it would. When work did begin on the new concentrator larger and better than the old one, the world knew that the people who knew the country best had faith in it, and money cautiously commenced to look for an investment here, and when, in November, a foreign syndicate sought a controlling interest in the Helena-Frisco at a price approximating $1,500,000, we realized that better times were coming, although there could be no marked change until spring opened. That we were not deceived in this the following summary, necessarily brief, shows, although many of the minor improvements cannot now be recalled.

The Helena-Frisco, in accordance with the policy of the new owners, closed down on the last day of 1896, and until July employed from 60 to 100 men doing development work and adding new machinery and additions to the concentrator. When it was ready to start it had one of the finest plants ever erected, to which further additions have since been made. Since starting it has run steadily, averaging about 100 tons of concentrates daily, requiring the labor of 150 men.

The Standard has had its output reduced by serious caves in the mine some three months ago, but still stands at the head of the Coeur d'Alene mines in the value of its product. Normally it employs from 160 to 175 men, but at present employing two-thirds that number.

The Mammoth employs 80 men. During the summer the company leased the old Milwaukee mill and doubled its output. It is still shipping a large percentage of crude ore, concentrated by nature.

The Tiger-Poorman did not start its mill until nearly the end of 1896, since which time it has been operated continuously. One hundred and forty men are employed in turning out from 60 to 75 tons of concentrates daily.

The Formosa company completed its new mill in the spring and ran it until two car loads of concentrates were turned out. Considerable trouble was experienced with the machinery. The company was organized late in the summer and a new tunnel started at the mill level. The mill has been shut down until next winter.

Development work still continues steadily on the Hecla and Hercules.

Never before has there been such activity in the Sunset and Nine Mile district, the property owners there realizing that if a railroad was to come to them it must come because they showed sufficient ore to justify it. Development work proceeds vigorously on the Colwyn group, now owned by the Lenox Lead and Silver Mining Company, the Father lode, the Chloride Queen Mining Company's claims, Amazon, Manhattan Fraction, Blue Grouse, Custer, Granite, Black Cloud, which was sold during the fall to E. S. McGraw, of New York state, Atlantic claims, Yellow Jacket, Panhandle and Contact.

Around Mullan there has never been so good a year for Larson & Greenbough, owners of the Morning and Yo[illegible] mines. Nearly $100,000 has been spent in improvements on the mill, railroad and mines and the product has shown a continuous increase, until the output is from 2,500 to 3,000 tons of concentrates each month. The pay roll carries from 200 to 250 names. The Hunter met with a serious loss in July, its mill being destroyed by fire. A few men are now doing development work and a new mill will be built early in the spring.

At Wardner the Bunker Hill and Sullivan has run steadily during the year, except a short shut-down of two weeks in August, employing between 300 and 400 men. About $300,000 has been spent in improvements, chief among which is the largest air compressor plant in the Northwest. The Last Chance has from 100 to 125 men working steadily. An important event this year was the bonding of the Nabob Mining Company's property to F. S. McGraw. A new mill employing new methods was built for the Antimony mine, employing 20 men.

The gold belt was not behind in the march of progress. Old properties were successful and new ones came to the front. Lack of transportation facilities was severely felt, but with better concentration of the ore several new mills were added, particularly at the opening of the galena belt at the head of Prichard creek. The tonnage was greatly increased and before long the canyons of the north side will echo to the locomotive.

The year 1898 was one of uninterrupted prosperity in the Coeur d'Alene mining country, and in all other parts of the county. From official and semi-official sources the Wallace Press compiled the following statistics of outputs of the silver-lead district, the figures representing tons of concentrates, except where otherwise stated: Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining & Milling Company, 26,400; Helena-Frisco Mining Company, 22,550; Morning Mining Company, 16,280; Consolidated Tiger-Poorman Mining Company, 15,350; Standard Mining Company, 13,460; Empire State-Idaho, 9,650; Mammoth Mining Company, 7,000; Milwaukee Mining Company (lessees), 850; Hecla Mining Company, 300; Blake Brothers, at Osburn, ore, 100; Colwyn Mining Company, ore, 60; miscellaneous, crude ore and concentrates, 500. Figuring 60 per cent. lead and 35 ounces of silver a ton, the Press estimates the value of this product at $12,400,000, one-fourth of which went to labor, one-fourth for freights and smelter charges, one-fourth for supplies and developments and most of the remainder to stockholders.

The outbreak of the Spanish-American war was the occasion for an ebullition of patriotic fervor in Shoshone county, as elsewhere, and the sons of the Coeur d'Alenes were ready and anxious to bear their part in the conquering to their country of a glorious peace. The Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining Company encouraged enlistment among its employes by giving each one who enrolled for service under the Stars and Stripes $100 in money and assurances of employment on his return. The roster of Company F, made up almost entirely of Shoshone county men, is as follows:

Company F.—Officers; M. J. Link, captain; Edgar T. Hawley, first lieutenant; Isaac M. Busby, second lieutenant; Alfred J. Dunn, first sergeant; A. H. Rombo, quarter-master-sergeant; Louis H. Pohle, Thomas Proctor, Abel R. Knight, Arthur Brown, sergeants; William S. Smith, Louis B. Beach, Ira S. Milton, William A. Walker, Bernard Maxwell, John H. Reed, Fred C. Skinner, corporals: William J. Buckley, musician; William G. Kuch, artificer; Gus Becker, wagoner.

Privates: Charles Banky, John C. Bargfield, Albert Burke, Amos D. Burrows, Fred C. Conklin, William Cuffe, Fred L. Fetterly, Peter Ghigliere, Iver L. W. Griaff, Charles Hartinger, Hugh Hutchinson, Felix Keenan, M. W. Koskela, Enoch S. Koth, Charles S. Lamb, Paul T. Larsen, Robert Lent, Henry Levy, William H. Luddy, G. Mayland, Napoleon Martel, F. Manson, Archie McDonald, Edward H. Parks, John H. Reynolds, Henry R. Snider, Bruce Southern, Alexander Steadman, Neil Strom, Marcus B. White, Frank E. Wood, Fred Worley, Ugile Young.

Discharged: William J. Kipp, first lieutenant, July 31, 1899; Peter R. Nelson, July 30, 1899; Orin Smith, corporal, July 28, 1899; Stanley Hills, musician, July 28, 1899; John Anderson, July 23, 1899; Mead Barr, November 8, 1898; George Babcock, July 15, 1899; Frank Bennefield, July —, 1899; Orville V. Brown, July 12, 1899; Morris Carlson, July 15, 1899; Jasper D. Carter, July —, 1899; Charles C. Chambers, July 8, 1899; Thomas Clagett, July 29, 1899; Beinard Dillon, December 28, 1898; Charles Gabriel, July 29, 1899; George Lester, July 27, 1899; T. B. Louney, October 23, 1898; John C. McBride, December 14, 1898; David McEwen, July 15, 1899; William H. Moss, September 21, 1898; William Munson, January 25, 1899; James Patterson, July 20, 1899; Robert Percival, ————; Isaac Peterson, July 15, 1899; William Siebert, July 15, 1899; James Whalen, April 23, 1899; Eugene E. White, July —, 1899.

Transferred: William C. Field, to hospital corps; Harry Hood, to hospital corps; Isaac Troutman, to hospital corps.

Wounded: Louis B. Beach, in action, February 5, 1899; Hugh Hutchinson, in action, June 6, 1899; Enoch S. Koth, in action, February 5, 1899; Charles S. Lamb, in action, February 24, 1899.

Dead: William D. Gillespie, quartermaster sergeant, Manila, P. I., December 1, 1898; Charles F. O'Donnell, musician, Manila, P. I., October 15, 1898; Adolph Agidius, Manila, P. I., February 23, 1899; William Beaushene, Manila, July 24, 1899.

Organized at Wardner, Shoshone county, Idaho; mustered into United States service at Camp Stevenson, Boise, Idaho, May 7, 1898.

Battles and engagements: With Spanish forces, assault and capture of Manila, August 13, 1898; with Filipino insurgents, Santa Ana, February 4-5, 1899; Caloocan, February 10, 1899; Malabon Road, February 11, 1899; Santa Cruz expedition, April 8-17, 1899, including engagement in front of the city, April 9th, and battle of Santa Cruz, April 10th.

Mustered out of service at the Presidio, San Francisco, California, September 25, 1899.

During the early months of 1899 all the indications pointed toward a season of unusual prosperity in the south fork mines, but in April clouds began to gather, and before the month was past an event occurred which greatly disturbed conditions, materially reducing the output of the mines for the year. It cannot be denied that ever since the trouble in 1892 a fight was waged between union and non-union labor, and that either as incidents of that struggle or on account of the bitterness engendered by it in the minds of hot-headed and evil-disposed individuals, several outrages were committed, one of the most heinous of which was the murder of John Kneebone, on July 3, 1894, and the expulsion from the country of Superintendent R. K. Neil, Foreman Crumer, Frank Higgins and Charles West. It is claimed that some forty men participated in this crime.

This trouble was brought to a crisis when, on April 23, a demand was made upon the Bunker Hill & Sullivan Company by a committee representing the Wardner miners' union that wages should be increased to $3.50 for all underground men and that the union should be recognized. Frederick Burbige, manager of the company, to whom this committee applied, said he would submit the matter to other officers of the company. The company agreed to increase the wages of all laborers from $2.50 to $3 and of miners from $3 to $3.50 a day, but the union men nevertheless went out on a strike. On the 26th the company's tramway was in the hands of a body of armed men from 10 o'clock in the morning to 10 o'clock in the evening. It was testified to afterward in the trial of Paul Corcoran that men on their way to work were at different times stopped and turned back after the strike had been declared.

In the same trial it was also testified that masked men took possession at Gem of the train from Burke on April 29th; that they compelled the engineer to back the train to the Frisco powder house, where sixty or seventy-five boxes of giant powder were loaded in one of the box cars. The train then went to Wallace. Failing to get running orders there it went on to Wardner anyway, going over the O. R. & N. tracks. It was testified that a number of men from Mullan got on the train at Wallace, also that a number from Wardner met the train a mile out from that town and boarded it, the engineer having been ordered to stop for them. It was estimated that by the time these men reached the Bunker Hill mill there were about a thousand of them, three hundred of whom were masked and armed. In a few minutes several hundred pounds of powder were placed under the mill and it was completely destroyed. Witnesses say there were three distinct explosions.

"After the terrific shock of the last explosion had died away in the distant mountains," says the Idaho State Tribune, "an ominous stillness of a few minutes followed. The delegation from Canyon creek and Mullan, together with a large portion of the people from Wardner, were either on or about the train, which consisted of nine cars and two engines. Winchesters and revolvers were everywhere in evidence. The silence was broken by a single shot from a Winchester from some person on top of the cars, followed by a deafening fusillade. For five minutes the rattle of musketry was incessant. It was evident, however, from the beginning of the firing that no harm was intended; that the men were simply celebrating the victory they had secured in the destruction of the Bunker Hill concentrator. In the midst of the firing the engines gave the starting signal and the train moved slowly toward Wallace, but when about one-half mile from Wardner was stopped, it being claimed that 75 of the Canyon creek and Mullan delegation were left at Wardner. The train slowly backed down to the depot again, and quite a few more boarded the cars, when it proceeded on its way to Wallace."

During the excitement subsequent to the blowing up of the mill, John Smythe, a miner at the Frisco mine, was shot and killed; James Cheyne, a vanner at the Bunker Hill mill, was shot through the hip so that he afterward died, and R. R. Rogers, stenographer for the Bunker Hill Company, was wounded. It has been claimed that Smythe was killed purposely by union men because he was suspected of being a traitor and spy; and it was on a charge of having murdered Cheyne that Paul Corcoran was tried in the district court of Shoshone county. Incidentally it may be stated that the trial resulted in a conviction of murder in the second degree, and that Corcoran was sentenced to seventeen years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary.

Of course martial law followed close upon these warlike events. The governor at once appealed to the president to call forth the military forces of the United States to assist in establishing and maintaining order. The request was complied with and General Merriam, then at Denver, Colorado, ordered to the scene. Numerous arrests were made and the large body of prisoners taken into custody on suspicion of being implicated in the blowing up of the Bunker Hill mill were confined in a temporary prison which later became popularly known as the "bull pen." All who were merely charged with minor offenses were in time released, the county deeming itself unable to individually try so many different persons, and most of those charged with major offenses escaped and could not again be apprehended. Paul Corcoran, however, was tried for murder, of which he was convicted in the second degree, as heretofore stated. He has since been pardoned.

So many bitter complaints were made against the soldiers under General Merriam, the treatment of the prisoners, and the actions of both state and federal officers, that January 8, 1900, an amended resolution was passed in the national congress referring the matter to the full investigation of the committee on Military Affairs. As this resolution furnishes a concise outline of the various charges and complaints, it is here set forth in extenso:

Whereas it is a matter of general information given out by the public press and charged by the industrial organization known as the Western Federation of Miners that United States troops have been sent into the state of Idaho in defiance of and contrary to the provisions of Article IV, section 4, of the constitution of the United States, in that it was done at the individual request of the governor of Idaho, without the authority of the legislature, and at a time when there was no condition of insurrection or riot, and when the legislature could have been called together without danger or delay from any source whatever; and, further, without even consultation by the governor with the sheriff of Shoshone county, where it was desired that the troops should be, and actually were, sent; and

Whereas, in defiance of section 9, article 1, of the constitution, martial law was declared and the writ of habeas corpus suspended in said county in a time of profound peace, when there was no condition or rebellion or invasion or any menace to the public safety; and

Whereas, it is charged that Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam, commanding the troops in Shoshone county, arbitrarily and without warrant of law, without informing the accused of the charge upon which they were arrested, and in defiance of the sixth amendment to the constitution, arrested and imprisoned hundreds of citizens of the United States and of the state of Idaho, and held them prisoners under the most brutal and tyrannical conditions, denying to them their constitutional right to speedy trial by an impartial jury of the state, which right the constitution clearly guarantees; and

Whereas it is charged that the said Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam did, in defiance of and contrary to the provisions of the fourth amendment of the constitution, subject the persons, houses, papers and effects of citizens to unreasonable and arbitrary search and seizure; and

Whereas it is charged that the said military commander arbitrarily and in defiance of the civil law, ordered the arrest of the sheriff of the county and the board of county commissioners, and subsequently deposed them from office on the unproved pretext of neglect of duty; and

Whereas it is charged that the said Brigadier-General Merriam, immediately upon the arrival of the troops, ordered the arrest of every man who was a member of the miners' union, and also of all citizens who were supposed to sympathize with the cause of organized labor; and

Whereas it is charged that those citizens were imprisoned in what was known as the "bull pen," a place unfit for human habitation, and that so brutal and degrading was the treatment inflicted on these prisoners by Brigadier-General Merriam and the United States troops under his orders that one unfortunate man became insane, and upon being taken to the county jail he broke from his guards and jumped into the river, and a negro soldier, at the command of the Bunker Hill Mining Company's doctor, fired three shots at him, and he was dragged from the river dead, and that another unfortunate prisoner, dying in the "bull pen," begged for a priest, and his dying request was denied; and

Whereas the imprisoned citizens were denied opportunity to confer with their counsel or members of their families and were denied the right of speedy and impartial trial, were held in this vile and inhuman imprisonment for several months without charge or indictment against them, although two sessions of the grand jury were held in the meantime, and during their confinement were treated by the officers and soldiers of the United States army as convicted felons and compelled to work at penal employment; were subjected to cruel and degrading punishments, such as being compelled to sleep on bare boards, placed on a diet of bread and water for ten days, and compelled to stand erect seven hours each day in the hot sun under penalty of death if they attempted to move or sit down (these two latter unlawful punishments were inflicted upon them by the orders of Captain Edwards, United States army, who amused himself by calling the prisoners "cowardly curs"); and

Whereas it is charged that by the use of the military power the writ of habeas corpus was suspended for months in Shoshone county, and the right of free speech, free press and peaceable assemblages were denied to the peaceable citizens of that community without any excuse or justification whatever; and

Whereas when the Industrial Commission sat in Wallace all union men who had long been residents of the county were in the "bull pen," and had no opportunity to appear before the commission; others were arrested while on their way to Wallace to appear before the commission; and thrown into the "bull pen" until after the commission had adjourned; and

Whereas it is charged that the following proclamation, in gross violation of the constitution of the United States and of the constitution and statutes of the state of Idaho, was issued and enforced by Brigadier-General Merriam, to-wit:

"PROCLAMATION.

"Whereas the following notice has been served upon the mine owners of Shoshone county by the duly constituted state authorities, by whom martial law has been declared, to-wit:

"'To the mine owners of Shoshone county:

"'Certain organizations or combinations existing in Shoshone county have shown themselves to be criminal in purpose, inciting and, as organizations, procuring property to be destroyed and murders to be committed, by reason whereof it has been twice necessary to declare martial law in Shoshone county.

"'You are therefore notified that the employment of men belonging to said or other criminal organizations during the continuance of martial law must cease. In case this direction is not observed your mines will be closed.'

"Therefore, in order to carry into effect the spirit of the foregoing notice and restore the industries of the district as far as possible, it becomes necessary to establish a system by which miners who have not participated in the recent acts of violence, and who are law-abiding people, may obtain work, and that order and peace may be established, the following is promulgated for the guidance of all mine owners and employers in the affected district:

"All parties applying for underground work in any of the following mines will be required to obtain from Dr. Hugh France, the duly appointed and authorized agent for the state of Idaho for this purpose, or his deputy, at Wardner or at Wallace, a permit authorizing said person to seek employment in any of the following mines: Bunker Hill and Sullivan, Last Chance, Empire State-Idaho, Consolidated Tiger and Poorman, Hecla, Mammoth, Standard, Helena-Frisco, Gem, Morning, Hunter, and such others as may be hereafter included in the above list. Parties applying for such permits must be prepared: First, to deny all participation in the riots of April 29, 1899, in Shoshone county, and, second, to deny or renounce membership in any society which has incited, encouraged or approved of said riots or other violation of public law.

"Mine owners must refuse employment to all applicants for underground work who do not present a duly signed permit authorizing the same. Such permit will be deposited in mine owners' office subject to periodical inspection.

"All parties now under employment by any of the mines above named will be required to procure, within ten days from this date, the permits above referred to as a condition to their remaining in the service of their respective companies.

"By order of the governor and commander-in-chief.

"BARTLET SINCLAIR, State Auditor.

"Examined and approved:

"H. C. MERRIAM,
Brigadier-General United States Army.

"Dated May 8, 1899.

"The application for permits to seek employment which union men must sign is as follows:

"'Application For Leave to Seek Employment in the Mines of Shoshone County.

"'To Dr. Hugh France, State Representative.

"'Sir: I hereby make application for issuance to me of a permit allowing me to seek employment in the mines of Shoshone county.

"At this writing no union men are permitted to work in the county: the meetings of the miners' unions are prohibited;" and

Whereas it is charged that during the months when a great portion of the male citizens of Shoshone county were thus unlawfully held in imprisonment by the United States troops the wives and families of the said citizens were subjected to insult and outrage by the soldiers of the United States stationed in that county; and

Whereas it is charged that the outrageous misuse of the military power of the United States, hereinbefore mentioned, was brought about at the instigation and in the interest of the owners of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mines, who, it is also charged, are the owners and manipulators of other similar trusts; and

Whereas said outrages above described, as perpetrated by the United States army and its officers, are an intolerable abuse of the right of citizens and a dire menace to the perpetuity of free institutions and the liberty of citizens; Therefore,

Resolved, That the charges herein preferred be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for a thorough and complete investigation, to determine their truth or falsity; and said committee shall have the power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses on oath in relation to the subject-matter of this resolution.

After an investigation lasting from February 20, 1900, to May 8, 1900, in the course of which thirty-five sworn witnesses gave testimony and various documents and exhibits were examined, the committee to which the resolutions were referred prepared an exhaustive report. It reviewed each charge in the resolution, and its findings in brief were that none of the "whereases" were sustained by the evidence. It is but fair to state, however, that a minority report was signed by seven members of the committee, namely: William Sulzer, John L. Lentz, N. N. Cox, James Hay, Thomas M. Jett, James L. Slayden and Robert F. Broussard, condemning the actions of the governor, the president and General Merriam as in violation of the rights of free American citizens, complaining that persons were imprisoned without being charged with any crime, and recommending the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the conduct of the president and of the military forces of the United States in Shoshone county, Idaho, has been reprehensible, violative of the liberty of the citizen, and totally unwarranted by the laws and constitution of the United States."

It is needless to say that the disturbance of conditions incident to the blowing up of the mine and the imprisonment for months of a large number of men had its deterrent effect upon production, and that the figures of the United States assay office at Boise were not as favorable to Shoshone county as the year before. However, the district recovered itself with rapidity and enjoyed a goodly measure of prosperity notwithstanding this great misfortune. The leaders of the disturbance were compelled to scatter to different parts of the United States, leaving the Coeur d'Alene country, and as the danger of trouble between employer and employe has been greatly lessened by their departure, the district is in a fair way to speedily make up for losses sustained. It is to be hoped, and perhaps may be reasonably expected, that the present harmonious conditions in the district shall continue, and that never again shall the occasion arise in the Coeur d'Alenes for warfare between labor and capital—warfare which, from the nature of things, must prove disastrous to the interests of both belligerants. The effect of peace was shown in the production of the year 1900, which, according to estimates probably correct, amounted to $11,500,000, as against $9,500,00 the preceding year. The author of this estimate, the Coeur d'Alene Mining Journal, divides credit for this output among the different mines, as follows: Bunker Hill, $1,750,000; Standard, $1,600,000; Morning, $1,600,000; Frisco, $1,350,0000; Tiger-Poorman, $1,350,000; Empire State, $1,250,000; Mammoth, $1,000,000; Hunter, $525,000; Hecla, $500,000; Crown Point and Silver King, $300,000; Sixteen to One, $150,000; north gold belt mines, $125,000.

Speaking of conditions in the north fork country, the Murray Sun of January 5, 1901, says:

"The chief industrial feature of the county during the year 1900 was the absorption of nearly all the placer ground on Prichard creek and its tributaries by the Coeur d'Alene Mining Company, and the full payment for all the claims. Perhaps nowhere else in the history of mining has a deal been perfected which embraced so many owners, or which distributed such large sums to so many persons. Many of the claims had from two to six owners, and these in the aggregate must have footed up several hundred. Barry N. Hillard, the company's manager, accomplished a tremendous undertaking in bringing all of these claim owners to an harmonious understanding, that a sale might be consummated, and he did it in an incredibly short time.

"The large payments periodically, there being four payments, and the gradual release of individual ownership, changed the entire financial and industrial situation. Old debts were paid, and money became abundant, while all those who desired work, secured it at ruling wages.

"The company, with remarkable energy, under the general local management of Mr. Hillard, installed a hydraulic elevator, put surveyors in the field, bought and located water rights, commenced the construction of ditches and flumes, repaired the huge pipe line, built trails and roads, put in a sawmill, started bedrock drains, built a new creek channel and allowed not an hour to go to waste. What would never have been accomplished by individual effort is now being done by the company. The progress already made justifies the belief that placer mining on the most extended scale may soon be expected. This prosperity will be further enhanced by the splendid gold quartz prospects and the developments in our silver-lead and copper districts."

Throughout the entire year 1901 quiet prevailed and steadily the mines of the Coeur d'Alene poured forth their wealth. Political interest this year centered in the southern part of the county, which had continued to work for segregation and the formation of a new county. The people of the north did not oppose their wishes: on the contrary they were favorable to the organization of a new political entity, but there was some opposition from Nez Perces county, a portion of whose territory it was sought to take. Much of the history of the short-lived Clearwater county, the passage of the bill intended to create it and the litigation which resulted in this bill's being held unconstitutional has been detailed in connection with the history of Nez Perces county, included in this work. Before the fatal supreme court decision was rendered the county was organized and a session of the commissioners, lasting fifteen days, was held. The board adjourned May 15th to meet again the 20th of the same month, but the second session was never held on account of the adverse decision referred to.

A noteworthy event of the year 1901 was the execution at Boise of Edward Rice, convicted in a Shoshone county court of murder in the first degree. The crime for which he suffered the supreme penalty was the murder of Matthew Mailley, at Wallace, September 30th of the previous year. The motive was a base one, and the evidence, though circumstantial, was so clear that the jury found a verdict in thirteen minutes. By appeals, the condemned man's attorneys delayed his execution more than a year. He was hanged November 30th. There have been numerous homicides in Shoshone county, but this was the first and only instance where a man convicted of such crime suffered death. Many of those accused of taking human life have been exonerated on the plea of self-defense, some have been sent to the penitentiary, and one escaped execution because death claimed him before the date set.

The annals of the year were darkened by a foul murder at Mace on November 11th, when Eugene Klein, time keeper at the Standard, came to his death at the hands of C. E. Shuff, a miner, who had been in the employ of the company but was laid off. Shuff came armed to the office of his victim and demanded a time check. Henry Lippert, who was with Klein at the time of Shuff's entrance, was forced to leave the room. As he retired he heard a shot and a scream. Forthwith Shuff passed him in retreat, using some threatening language. Lippert informed Superintendent Moffitt of the shooting; the latter gathered a posse and set out in pursuit, eventually capturing the fugitive.

It was found on investigation that Klein had been shot in the back, the ball striking the lower part of the shoulder blade and emerging under the right nipple. He never regained consciousness, though he survived a short time.

Shuff, who was a Missourian, about twenty-four years old, was tried in April, 1902, convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to death on June 24th. He took an appeal, however, and by dilatory proceedings has prolonged his life to the present, though he is still in custody.

The second month of the year 1902 brought one of the worst disasters of its kind in the history of the Coeur d'Alene. About three o'clock on the morning of the 25th of February, the large two and a half story frame structure on Canyon creek, belonging to Milton Flohr. H. R. Allen, and the White & Bender Company, and known as the Standard boarding and lodging houses, were destroyed by fire. The residence of William Fletcher was also a total loss, having been blown up by dynamite to prevent the flames from reaching the Standard works. It is thought the fire started in the men's drying room of the lodging house. It spread with great rapidity, and in thirty minutes had done its work of destruction. So swift were the devouring flames that time was not given to arouse all of the forty-seven men and the help asleep in the buildings, and J. W. Edwards, aged twenty-two; R. D. Mann, twenty-five; Eugene Bangs, twenty-one, and M. T. Moore, forty-five, were burned to death. Duncan McCallum and John H. D. Bowhay were also so badly burned that they died later at the hospital, making the death list in this terrible holocaust number six in all. Besides these the following were so badly injured as to require hospital treatment: Thomas Yarbrough and L. V. Eberhart, seriously burned; Frank Townsen, K. Mackenzie, Tom Bowers, R. N. Brand, B. J. Bond, John McAuliff, J. C. McConnell, John Eckland and A. H. Adams, slightly. The only means of exit from the building was a second story window, eighteen feet above the ground, and no doubt some were wounded in the jump.

In industrial circles the year 1902 was quieter than its predecessors, owing to troubles between mine owners and the smelter trust. On this account the looked for increase in the production over that of 1901 did not materialize, though the differences were settled in time to keep the output of the mines up to the average. Whether on account of this difficulty or for some other reason, there was some complaint among business men in Mullan, Burke, Gem, Wardner and Wallace during the summer and fall that trade was unusually dull. Some of these men were inclined to blame the permit system, which had been in vogue since the last labor troubles, and which, they claimed, had a tendency to keep married men out of the mines or at least to deter them from bringing their families into the country. The permit system has since been abolished.

In August of the year under review a company of Canyon creek and other mine owners was formed for the purpose of buying out the holdings of farmers on the rich bottom lands along the south fork, and these lands were purchased and leased to their former owners for a period of ninety-nine years. The object of this was to avoid the litigation and trouble incident to the fact that every flood carried tailings from the mines over the land, utterly destroying its value for agricultural purposes.

An exciting event of October, 1902, was the holdup on the second last day of that month, of one of Glen McDonald's livery rigs, while it was conveying Frank Watson, a mining man; William Trout, of Spokane; W. F. Kuder and A. H. Blankerton, of Cleveland, Ohio, from Wallace to Murray. The scene of the robbery was a point a quarter of a mile toward Murray from Beaver station. The robber was masked with a polka dot handkerchief, and he wore gunny sacks on his feet, while in his hands were two murderous, apparently brand new revolvers. Though evidently a novice, he succeeded in compelling the men to alight, take off their coats and vests and hand them over. His crime was rewarded by thus securing $75 in money and watches. By hard begging Mr. Watson prevailed upon the robber to give him back his watch. The right man was never apprehended, though two arrests on suspicion were made.

Early in the current year an event occurred in the southern part of the county, which aroused the people to a high pitch of excitement. In May John J. McDonough was murdered from ambush in a most brutal manner. His body was found by a young lad named Amil Hendrickson, who had gone over to McDonough's farm on a visit, lying in the road in front of the house, by the side of the deceased's wagon and team. Four bullets had entered the body from behind.

Suspicion of having committed the murder attached to Frank Peters, who, it is claimed, had attempted formerly to kill McDonough while the latter was plowing in his garden. Jealousy is the supposed cause. Posses have been out in search of Peters, but at this date they have not yet been successful in apprehending him.

So far southern Shoshone county has not yet attained the boon of autonomy in local matters, though it made anther effort therefor at the last meeting of the legislature. It is, however, almost universally conceded that this region cannot much longer be deprived of the blessings it covets. It has been forging ahead during the last few years at a rapid rate, and it needs but the convenience of an efficient local government to convert it into a prosperous, happy and contented community.

At this writing conditions in the Coeur d'Alene country are quite favorable. All the mines are at work in full blast; the relations between the employers of labor and their employees are, perhaps, as pleasant as they have ever been in the district; the wheels of industry are revolving steadily and the rate of output is greater than ever before. In recent years the list of producers have been swelled by the addition of one famous mine—the Hercules. It is said that new locations of mining properties are being made at the rate of about a thousand a year. Many skillful miners and prospectors are at work developing these claims as rapidly as circumstances and conditions will allow, and it is no more than reasonable to expect that some few of them will take their places with the great mines which have given the district fame throughout the entire American Union. With a united people working for the common good and with a common end in view, that of garnering all the wealth of the district, we may expect that the country, already so prominent among the mining regions of the world, will more than double its output, and assume a place of still greater importance as a contributor to the wealth of mankind.

In closing this general review of events in Shoshone county, it is fitting to refer to an exceedingly pleasant occurrence of recent date, the reception of President Roosevelt during his two hours' stay in the central city of the Coeur d'Alenes. Special trains brought crowds of people to the scene and it was estimated that by 7:30 o'clock on the morning of the 26th of May, the day of his advent into the town, ten thousand people had assembled to greet him. When the train arrived every effort was made to do fitting honor to the distinguished guest, the school children, it is said, strewing his pathway with bouquets of flowers.

As fitting souvenirs of the occasion the president was presented with a pyramid paper weight made of lead, copper, silver and gold nuggets from the great mines of the district, also a bar of pure gold from the Golden Chest mine at Murray. The large flag floating proudly over the platform on which the president stood as he made his timely speech to the citizens gathered to greet him was said to be the first Union flag unfurled in this county, having floated upon the breezes which blew in 1865. It had been sent to Wallace for the occasion by I. B. Cowen, chairman of the county commissioners.

It is to be hoped that the destiny of this county and this great mining district may be wrought out in future in strict harmony with the sentiments expressed by the closing words of the president's speech. After briefly referring to the qualities of good citizenship, he said:

"There are two attributes of which as a people we need to beware more than any of the others; the arrogance which looks down on those not so well off and treats them with brutal and selfish disregard for their interests, and the equally base spirit of envy, hatred and rancor for those that are better off. Either spirit is utterly un-American, utterly alien to our institutions, utterly alien to the spirit shown alike by the men who founded this republic and the men who under the lead of Abraham Lincoln saved and perpetuated the republic; the men who in the Civil war established once for all in this country the principle that we are a union in fact as well as in name, and that this is a government not of license, but of liberty under and through the law. The worst foe to American institutions, to American life, is the man who seeks to cause hatred and distrust between one body of Americans and any other body of Americans. It is just as base no matter whether the appeal is made to inflame section against section, creed against creed, or class against class; in any event the appeal is unworthy of American institutions and if listened to will hurt none so much as those who pay heed to it.

"Any man who endeavors to make you do wrong under the plea that it is in your interest to follow him in doing wrong will do wrong to you if the opportunity arises. The only safe principle upon which to act is in accordance with the immutable law of decency and fair dealing, to give each man a chance, to give one man the same justice that you give to any other, to draw the line not between one class and another on artificial grounds, not between rich man and poor man, but between the man who is straight and the man who is crooked, without any reference to whether one be rich or one be poor. That is the only ground upon which you can afford to act."

CHAPTER IV.

POLITICAL.

Although Shoshone county was created as early as 1858, a county government does not appear to have been organized until after the discovery of the Oro Fino mines, and the settlement of that region. As noted elsewhere in this work, the county's population increased from a mere handful of people in 1860 to several thousand in the summer of 1861, necessitating the immediate organization of a local government. Thus, in pursuance of the requirements of law, an election was held July 8, 1861, the only record of which is as follows:

"I, George Galbreath, county auditor within and for Walla Walla county, do hereby certify that the following named citizens were duly elected to the several offices set opposite their respective names, in and for Shoshone county, said territory, by the qualified votes thereof, at the annual election held in and for said county, July 8, 1861: county commissioners, J. Tudor, W. Cardwell, J. C. Griffin; probate judge, D. M. Jessee; sheriff, R. L. Gillespie; auditor, E. L. Bradley; treasurer, L. H. Coon; assessor, H. M. Bell; coroner, D. Bell; constable, ——— Vamastram (F. M. Van Nostron). Dated August 20, 1861."

A majority of these men accepted the honor conferred upon them, and forthwith entered upon the administration of their duties. However, as might be expected, the quest for gold was far more alluring than office holding, consequently the membership of Shoshone county's official family was constantly changing. Among those who served the county in an official capacity in 1861 and in the spring of 1862, we find, besides those already mentioned, the following: J. B. Buker, E. Kinsey, E. B. Stone, D. M. Boon, George McCully, William James, Thomas Stringham, Levi Anderson, justices of the peace; Neil McClinchey, William Atlee, treasurers; D. H. Brown, D. M. Boon, Thomas Stringham, S. Leonard, Charles J. Marvin, Stephen Jewett, county commissioners; J. B. Buker, coroner; Israel Mitchell, surveyor; J. P. Butler, auditor; J. M. Moore, prosecuting attorney; Stanford Capps, assessor.

The first regular term of county commissioners' court opened Monday, September 2, 1861, every member being present. After effecting an organization the board at once proceeded to establish three precincts, Pierce City, Oro Fino and Elkton. The boundaries of the first named precinct were fixed as follows: "All of that portion of Shoshone county north of a line running due east and west and crossing the Oro Fino creek about one mile southeast of the town of Pierce City, at a point near the mouth of what is known as the canal gulch on the west side of said Oro Fino creek." The boundaries of Oro Fino precinct were: "On the north by the Pierce City precinct, on the south by the south fork of the Clearwater and on the east by the boundary line of Shoshone county." There is no mention of a western boundary. Elkton precinct was made to include all the territory in the county bounded "on the south by Snake river, on the north and west by the south fork of the Clearwater and on the east by the boundary line of Shoshone county."

On this same day the board, or court, decided upon the following official ferry rates for crossing Snake river: wagon, carriage and other vehicle with animals, $1.50; pleasure wagon with two horses, $1.50; additional animals, 25 cents each; cart, wagon or carriage with one horse, 75 cents; man and horse, 50 cents; each animal and packhorse, 50 cents; footman, 25 cents; loose animal, other than sheep, goats or hogs, 10 cents; sheep, hogs and goats, 15 cents. The ferry rates for crossing the Clearwater were made considerably lower than those for crossing the Snake.

After fixing the assessment rate at five mills for all purposes and providing that liquor dealers in the county should pay the county license of $300 per annum, the court adjourned to meet in special session September 10th. Nothing of special importance came before the court at this special session, or at special sessions held on October 7th and 28th.

The discovery of the Forence mines in the southern portion of the county, led the county court, on January 3, 1862, to create Florence precinct, to which they gave the following boundaries: "All of that section of country west of the dividing ridge between the south fork of Clearwater and Snake rivers and running east to the summit of the Rocky mountains." Thomas Stringham was appointed as the first justice of the peace in this precinct. A glance at the map of Idaho will give the reader an excellent idea of the immensity of this precinct and of the dim conception which the commissioners had of the region around them.

At the May term the county court took up the matter of arranging for a permanent courthouse, a building of great need, as heretofore the county had been paying out considerable money in rent. Sheriff Gillespie was appointed to draft the plans and Charles J. Marvin and S. F. Leonard were appointed to secure a site in Pierce City, where a majority of the sessions had been held. On June 7th, the commissioners, Stephen Jewett, S. F. Leonard and Charles I. Marvin, accepted the bid of K. C. Reed and W. Keith to build a courthouse and jail at Pierce City for $3,700 in county scrip. This building was completed in August and accepted by the county. It served as a courthouse until the removal of the county seat to Murray, in 1884, when it was sold to Edward Hammond for less than $75.

Through the creation of Idaho and Nez Perces counties in December, 1861, Shoshone county lost two of its largest precincts, leaving only five, Pierce City, Oro Fino, Rhodes creek, Placer Flat and Lone Tree. Election day fell on July 14th. The official returns are as follows: For representatives, S. S. Slater, A. B. Andrews, James Orr, Unionists, 282, 262, and 268 votes respectively, J. M. Murphy, E. P. Bostwick, M. S. Winkle, Democrats, 164, 137 and 170 votes respectively; county commissioners, S. F. Leonard, D. M. Fraser, S. Jewett, Unionists, 231, 268 and 279 votes respectively, A. Fornier, D. Litton and James Bowers, Democrats, 148, 128 and —— votes respectively; treasurer, William A. Atlee, Unionist, 292, J. P. Butler, Democrat, 132; auditor, P. S. Black, Unionist, 259, A. Thompson, Democrat, 167; assessor, Stanford Capps, Unionist, 331, G. E. Pearson, Democrat, 94; probate judge, William James, Unionist, 204, Jesse Bond, Democrat, 180; prosecuting attorney, H. Martin, Unionist, 269, J. H. Parker, Democrat, 162; coroner, G. R. Sheldon, Unionist, 273, John Cain, Democrat, 133. Lone Tree precinct did not cast a single vote for a Democrat. Strangely enough there appears to have been no contest for the office of sheriff, R. L. Gillespie being allowed to retain office without rivalry.

Several resignations were accepted by the board in the course of the next few months, among them the resignation of Sheriff Gillespie, who was succeeded by Thomas Cann and he by W. A. Busey; that of Commissioner Jewett, succeeded by Ed. Harris; that of Commissioner Leonard, who was succeeded by Samuel Ramsay and Ramsay in turn by J. M. Merrill; then Harris resigned and was succeeded by William A. Goulder; Capps resigned the assessorship and Robert McCullough took the office for a short time, resigning in April, 1863. Then for a time the county organization virtually went to pieces, nearly all of the officers resigning. Several of them, including Fraser and Harris, donated their salaries to the treasury. The report of the auditor on March 9, 1863, shows that the county had issued up to that time $8,834.32 in scrip, of which $3,013.20 was for building the courthouse and jail; that of this amount $5,845.47 was yet unpaid.

The reason for this almost total dissolution of the county is to be found in the phenomenal growth of the Florence, Elk City, Warren and Montana mining districts, which drew away thousands from the Pierce City district. It would be impossible to accurately enumerate the different men who were appointed and resigned offices at this period of the county's history, but among them we find J. M. Carpenter, commissioner; William N. Hudson, auditor; John B. Lauck, auditor; E. B. Stone, prosecuting attorney; Elijah Davidson, sheriff; Levi Ankeny, treasurer; S. M. Stout, assessor; George Moeller, justice of the peace; I. B. Cowan, justice of the peace; E. K. Davidson, coroner; N. M. Pratt, sheriff.

The election of 1864 was held October 10th. There were only two precincts in the county, Pierce City and Oro Fino. The polls in the former precinct were opened at the Pioneer hotel; in the latter, at Gram's drug store. As Idaho territory was not created until 1863, this was the first election held under Idaho laws. The vote cast at this election follows: For delegate, Samuel C. Parks, 80, E. D. Holbrook, 39; representative, William A. Goulder, 72, J. H. Parker, 52; territorial auditor, B. F. Lambkin, 75, William McDaniels, 33; territorial treasurer, Charles D. Vajen, 54, M. A. Kelly, 54; superintendent public instruction, D. M. Walters, 72, A. Benedict, 35; probate judge, Samuel Ramsay, 67, David Elliott, 38, L. Reed, 8; commissioners, D. M. Fraser, 107, Samuel Walker, 54, William B. Perry, 62, William A. Goulder, 48, D. H. Jaume, 62; treasurer, Levi Ankeny, 110; auditor, John B. Lauck, 75; sheriff, E. K. Davidson, 118; assessor, S. K. Waymire, 66, Alexander Damas, 2; justice of the peace. I. B. Cowan. 121; district attorney, G. M. Pomeroy, 75, W. W. Thayer, 40; constable, L. Reed, 41.

But before we enter deeper into the political history of Shoshone county, it will not be amiss to say a few words regarding the pioneer district court of the county. Not until Shoshone county became a political division of Idaho territory was the first term of court held, the day of opening being September 8, 1864, and the place Pierce City. Hon. Alexander C. Smith, judge of the first Idaho district, presided, Levi Ankeny was present as clerk, Sheriff E. K. Davidson attended, and Thomas M. Reed was present in his official capacity of prosecuting attorney. I. C. Hildebrand acted as bailiff. The grand jury consisted of Francis Carroll, H. Nelson, A. G. Corbett, Jesse Frickle, Frank Hawk, I. E. Clark, S. K. Waymire, Samuel Gaton, Julius Mack, R. Filkins, Henry Myers, D. Haneford, William Hackett, Ed. Chatfield, L. Reed and D. W. Carty.

There were no important criminal cases tried before this court; in fact the session lasted only two days. The most important jury case was that of John Pontade versus C. Schwindson, Peter Dubaison and Peter Manett, a suit brought for the recovery of money. The petit jury comprised Rufus Hardy, foreman, George Brown, Robert Walker, David Bassey, Peter Eddy, E. C. Rose, T. Lodgdson, Thomas Giles, Peter Fisher, Samuel Sayers, John Straw, and Samuel White. The plaintiff was awarded $350 and costs. Shoshone county was not again visited by a judge until June 27, 1868, when Milton Kelly held one day's court at Pierce City. At this term no jury was called. When one considers the isolation of this mining district and the lawlessness which generally prevails in mining camps, Shoshone county has reason to feel proud of its pioneer miners. Of the pioneer lawyers who practiced in the first courts we find the names of only E. B. Stone, A. H. Colvin, Thomas M. Reed and W. A. George, the two latter being prosecuting attorneys.

The result of the election held in 1866, as shown by the records, was as follows: For delegate, J. M. Kirkpatrick, Republican, received 39 votes, E. D. Holbrook, Democrat, 27 votes; for councilman, W. H. Hudson, sole candidate, received 51 votes; for joint councilman, C. T. Nelson, Republican, received 22 votes, I. K. Whitson, Democrat, 13; for superintendent of public instruction, E. K. Davidson, Republican, received 49 votes; for representative in the legislature, W. F. McMillen, Republican, received 49 votes; for sheriff, I. B. Cowan, Republican, received 66 votes; for probate judge, B. F. Yantis, Democrat, received 50 votes; for treasurer, G. W. Crampton, received 58 votes; for auditor, John P. Lauck, Republican, received 58 votes; for assessor, S. K. Waymire, Democrat, received 50 votes; and George Moeller, A. G. Cowanson and Joseph Fettis were elected county commissioners, vote not given. As well be seen from the foregoing, there was no special party strife, in most cases only one candidate being nominated. Some of the men elected served full terms, others resigned shortly after being sworn in. As an illustration of the unsettled condition of the county government, we find that in September, 1867, Samuel Ramsay, C. T. Nelson and S. M. Stout were the county commissioners; A. T. Currier was county treasurer; and Stanford Capps was prosecuting attorney.

When the annual election of 1868 came around, the two precincts that Shoshone county formerly had, were combined into one. The Democrats were victorious in this county, capturing a majority of the offices. J. K. Shafer, the Democratic candidate for delegate to congress, received 44 votes, T. J. Butler, the Republican candidate, 42 votes; S. S. Fenn, Democrat, was given 44 votes for county attorney, while his Republican opponent, W. A. George, received 3 votes less; for councilman, B. F. Yantis, Democrat, received a majority of 19 votes over his opponent, W. Hudson, who received thirty votes; W. A. Goulder, Republican, was chosen assemblyman, 49 votes being cast for him and 34 for G. Trook, the Democratic candidate; I. B. Cowan, the Republican nominee for sheriff, received 54 votes, S. K. Waymire, his Democratic opponent, only 28 votes; B. Bowers was elected probate judge, receiving 18 votes, while C. Ewing, Democrat, received 15; for treasurer, R. L. Yantis received 49 votes, Alexander McGregor, 31, a victory for the Democrat; J. B. Lauck was re-elected recorder and auditor without opposition, his vote being 55; the contest for the assessorship was more spirited, the three candidates and their votes being as follows: John Ragan, Democrat, 38. Thomas Hudson, Republican, 24, S. M. Ramsay, Independent, 15; for commissioners, C. T. Nelson, Republican, received 58 votes, Francis Carle, Republican, 45 votes, D. H. Jaume, Democrat, 56 votes, and David Elliott, Democrat, 30 votes; A. Damas, Democrat, was elected justice of the peace, his contestant being James Buchanan; and John Rogers, Republican, was victorious over his opponent, J. C. Hiltebrand, for the office of constable.

The official vote cast at the annual election held June 6, 1870, was as follows: For delegate, S. A. Merritt, Democrat, 102. T. J. Butler, Republican, 56; councilman, Samuel Ramsay, 31; assemblyman, W.

B. Yantis, Democrat, 101, A. McGregor, Republican, 50; probate judge, Alexander Damas, Democrat, 89, George Moeller, Republican, 64; district attorney, John Clark, Republican, 59; sheriff, Matthew Fettis, Democrat, 83, I. B. Cowan, Republican, 66; auditor and recorder, Thomas Hudson, Democrat, 69, J. B. Lauck, Republican, 87; treasurer, Robert L. Yantis, Democrat, 102, D. M. Fraser, Republican, 55; commissioners, 1st district, D. L. Elliott, Democrat, 101, Peter Thompson, Republican, 58; 2d district, James McInroe, Democrat, 42, Henry Mauli, Republican, 51; 3d district, Allan Boice, 56, W. Price, 58; assessor, D. W. C. Dunwell, Democrat, 94, John Ragan, Republican, 63.

From the following official summary, the names of the successful candidates for office in Shoshone county at the election of 1872 may be picked: Delegate, John Hailey, Democrat, 34, J. W. Huston, Republican 27; district attorney, John Clark, Republican, 49, James W. Poe, Democrat, 9; councilman, Stanford Capps, Republican, 40, Joseph Lees, Democrat, 22; representative or assemblyman, J. B. Sisson, joint nominee, 59; probate judge, Philip Streeter, Republican, 32, D. M. Murray, Democrat, 26; auditor and recorder, D. M. Fraser, Republican, 32, Frank Capps, Democrat, 26; sheriff, Francis Carle, Republican, 36, S. K. Waymire, Democrat, 19; assessor, Samuel Ramsay, Republican, 29, Charles Brown, Democrat, 20, J. Rodgers, Independent, 8; commissioners, D. H. Jaume, Republican, 59, M. V. Cole, Republican, 31, George Moeller, Republican, 28, Thomas Hudson, Democrat, 31 (resigned), Patrick Gaffney, Democrat, 29; treasurer, Robert L. Yantis, Republican, 42, Joseph Alexander, Democrat, 17; superintendent of public schools, Frank Capps, 21, George Lawhow, Democrat, 12; coroner, James Buchanan, Democrat, 29; road supervisor, John Rodgers, 31, C. Swendson, 30; justice of the peace, J. C. Hiltebrand, 53, S. Anderson, 31; constable, John Rodgers, 29. In 1873 William V. Heskett was appointed probate judge and at a special election held March 28, 1874, George Moeller and Irwin Anderson were elected commissioners to fill vacancies.

The official vote at the election of 1874 is missing, so that we are unable to present anything except a roll of the officers elected, which follows: councilman, William A. Goulder; assemblyman, W. B. Yantis; sheriff, John Rodgers; commissioners, George Moeller, D. H. Jaume, Swan Anderson; treasurer, R. L. Yantis; probate judge, William V. Heskett; assessor, Charles F. Brown; auditor and recorder, D. M. Fraser; justice of the peace, J. C. Hiltebrand. The following year several changes were made in Shoshone's official family. John Molloy was appointed sheriff on October 4, 1875; Francis Carle was appointed commissioner to succeed Swan Anderson, the date of his appointment being August 21, 1875; likewise, I. B. Cowan succeeded D. H. Jaume as commssioner, on October 4th. September 6th, D. M. Fraser qualified as superintendent of county schools.

The following campaign was marked by a stronger party organization than had prevailed in 1874, when considerable apathy was manifested. The canvassing board made the following returns: For delegate, John Clark, Republican, 39, S. S. Fenn, Democrat, 37; councilman, D. W. C. Dunwell, Republican, sole candidate, 61; representative, Edward Hammond, Republican, sole candidate, 68; district attorney, Jasper Rand, Republican, 46, James W. Poe, Democrat, 28; probate judge, D. L. Elliott, Democrat, 43, J. C. Hiltebrand, Republican, 22; sheriff, John Molloy, Democrat, sole candidate, 68; auditor and recorder, Frank Capps, Republican, 37, D. M. Fraser, also Republican, 33; treasurer, Martin Mauli, Democrat, 35, E. H. Gollings, Republican, 32; assessor, C. F. Brown, Republican, 38, George Baraman, Democrat, 31; commissioners, R. M. G. Bradley, Republican, 37, I. B. Cowan, Republican, 34, H. L. Gray, Republican, 34, W. B. Yantis, Democrat, 38, Herman Loewenberg, Democrat, 31; coroner, D. H. Jaume, Republican, 7; justice of the peace, John Kimble, 35; constable, C. Swandson, 37. The following November special election, held for the purpose of electing one commissioner, resulted in the choice of Herman Loewenberg for the office. Several resignations and appointments are recorded during the ensuing few months.

From a vote of 76 for delegate in 1874 the county's voting strength decreased to a vote of 30 for the same officer in 1878, showing a loss of more than fifty per cent. Under these circumstances it is not strange that the county had great difficulty in maintaining an organization during the ensuing six years; it is not strange that resignations and appointments became so numerous as to preclude a complete record of all who served the county as officers without a very exhaustive and unsatisfactory search. Frequently the office went begging for the man, thus rendering party organization an impracticability. Under these circumstances an accurate compilation of political history is a most difficult task, incomplete records rendering it still more difficult.

The returns for the election of 1878 show that George Ainslie, the Democratic candidate for delegate, received 28 votes in this county; Jonas W. Brown, Republican candidate, only 2; for councilman, W. B. Yantis, sole candidate, received 39 votes; for representative, Robert L. Yantis, Democrat, received 23 votes, Daniel McPherson, Republican, 20 votes; James W. Poe, Democrat, received 34 votes for district attorney; for probate judge, I. B. Cowan, Republican, received 26 votes, J. C. Hiltebrand, Democrat, 7 votes, D. L. Elliott, Democrat, 1 vote; Edward Hammond, Republican, was elected auditor and recorder, his vote being 37; for sheriff, Robert Templeton, Republican, received 22 votes, Patrick Gaffney, Democrat, 20 votes; for assessor, E. G. Cole, Republican, received 35 votes, being the only candidate; for treasurer, Martin Mauli, Democrat, had no opposition, receiving 30 votes; for commissioner, Abe Harpster, Democrat, received 33 votes, Thomas Wilson, Republican, 28, John Molloy, Democrat, 26, and Horatio L. Gray, Republican, 17; surveyor, Pierre Duboison, Democrat, received 10 votes; for coroner, Chris. Swandson received the total vote cast, 8; John Kemble, Democrat, was elected justice of the peace; and John Evans was chosen constable.

The vote for officers in 1880 follows: Delegate, Mason Brayman, annexationist, 39. George Ainslie, Democrat, 6; joint councilman, I. B. Cowan, Republican, 41; representative, William Nichol, Democrat, 27, Robert L. Yantis, Republican, 7. Horatio L. Gray, Republican, 7; district attorney, A. Quackenbush, Republican, 15, I. N. Maxwell, Democrat, 29; probate judge, Silas W. Moody, Republican, 36, D. L. Elliott, Democrat, 6; sheriff, John Molloy, Democrat, 35; public administrator, Herman Loewenberg, Democrat, 25; auditor and recorder, Edward Hammond, Republican, 33; treasurer, Aaron Kuhn, Republican, 22, Martin Mauli, Democrat, 20: surveyor, Pierre Duboison, Democrat, 35; coroner, D. L. Elliott, Democrat, 32; assessor, Patrick Keane, Republican, 26, Dominique Jaume, Democrat. 17; justice of the peace, J. C. Hiltebrand, Republican, 37; commissioners, Abe Harpster, E. H. Gollings, Patrick Gaffney, Democrats, 19, 32 and 4 votes, respectively, Theodore Thompkins, Robert Templeton, C. D. Jones, Republicans, 19, 23 and 16 votes, respectively; for annexation to Washington territory, 45 ayes, no nays. The tie vote for commissioner resulted in a special election being held November 13th, 1880, at which Thomas Wilson received 10 votes and Abe Harpster, 8 votes. Nearly all of the above candidates for office were placed in nomination at a citizens' convention held at Pierce City, October 6, 1880. The nominations were made irrespective of political parties.

A like policy was adopted in 1882, when the county's life was at its lowest ebb. As will be seen from the recapitulation which follows, the highest vote cast was 31. The election was simply a matter of form. Theodore F. Singer, the Republican nominee for delegate to congress, received 30 votes; I. B. Cowan, nominee for joint councilman, received 27 votes; O. A. Dodge, nominee for joint representative, received 28 votes; J. C. Elder, nominee for district attorney, received 28 votes; E. G. Call, nominee for probate judge, P. T. Dunwell, nominee for sheriff, D. M. Fraser, nominee for auditor and recorder, P. T. Lomas, nominee for treasurer, and W. G. Osborne, nominee for assessor, each received 28 votes; Francis Carle, C. D. Jones and Patrick Keane, nominees for county commissioners, received 27, 24 and 26 votes, respectively; J. C. Hiltebrand, nominee for coroner, received 28 votes, Theodore Tompkins and L. T. Reed, aspirants for the office of justice of the peace, received 19 and 12 votes, respectively; and Wellington Landon and D. W. C. Dunwell received 1 vote each for constable.

The discovery of the Coeur d'Alene mines and the great influx of population into that district in the fall of 1883 and the succeeding winter and spring, resulted in the complete transference of political power in the county to the northern end, where the balance of power still remains. Thereafter the northern portion, or the Coeur d'Alenes, were in complete control of the county's government for many years and only quite recently has the southern portion acquired such a large population as to return to it in part its old influence. Thousands flocked into the Coeur d'Alenes, while scores were settling along the Lolo and Clearwater and at Pierce. From a position of lowest importance among the counties of the state, Shoshone county has become one of the foremost in wealth and population. In 1882 the county's highest vote was 31; in 1902, 4,662 votes, including those of qualified women voters, were cast.

The influx of miners in 1883 and 1884 necessitated the creation of three new precincts, Beaver, Summit and Coeur d'Alene, all in the northern end of the county. There were three tickets in the field, the regular Republican and Democratic organizations and an independent ticket. The Republicans met at the Masonic hall in Murray, Saturday, October 11th, and placed in nomination a full ticket; the Democrats convened two days later at Murray, and the Independents, composed of ex-members of the old parties, held their convention at Murray on the same day. In making these nominations the southern end of the county was almost entirely unrepresented. Election day passed off very quietly and was marked by a long, heavy rainfall. There was considerable scratching of tickets indulged in by all parties. The largest vote polled in any precinct was that cast in Summit precinct, of which Murray was the center of population, 597; Beaver precinct cast 165 votes; Coeur d'Alene, or Eagle precinct, cast only 71 votes; while Pierce City precinct cast about the same vote as in 1882. The official count gave the following figures: For delegate, T. F. Singiser, Republican, 500, John Hailey, Democrat, 357; joint councilman, J. D. Wooden, Independent Democrat, 475, Silas W. Moody, Republican, 377; joint representative, William King, Republican, 522, Thomas Bentley, Independent Democrat, 348; district attorney, Albert Allen, Independent Republican, 471, W. T. Stoll, Democrat, 398; probate judge, R. E. McFarland, Democrat, 408, J. C. Harkness, Republican, 400, C. P. Tatro, Independent, 56; recorder, X. S. Burke, Independent, 298, T. E. McLelland, Republican, 297, Robert Neill, Democrat, 278; treasurer, Francis Jenkins, Republican, 398, Philip Markson, Democrat, 380, C. C. Higby, Independent, 91; sheriff, T. B. Guthrie, Democrat, 455, William Chambers, Republican, 233, T. L. Dunwell, Independent, 183; assessor, A. Kavanaugh, Democrat, 426, A. Renkert, Republican, 343, D. Doherty, Independent, 108; commissioners, C. T. P. Bass, Independent Republican, 506, M. C. Human, Republican, 447, Frank Grove, Democrat, 411, Patrick Mahoney, Democrat, 409, William Keeler, Independent Republican, 372, Charles Crossman, Democrat, 322, Edward Moffitt, Independent, 95; surveyor, Jerry Dunlee, Democrat, 446, John M. Marsh, Republican, 426; coroner, J. McLansing, Independent Republican, 495, J. A. Campbell, Democrat, 372.

In 1886 the main issue before the voter was the Mormon question, the Republicans being the most radical against that rapidly growing power. In this county the Republicans and Democrats divided honors, as will be seen from the following official summary of the vote cast: For delegate, F. T. Dubois, Republican, 921, John Hailey, Democrat, 893; joint councilman, Alexander E. Mayhew, Democrat, 972 (elected), W. H. Clagett, Republican, 838; joint assemblyman, John M. Burke, Democrat, 951 (elected), O. A. Dodge, Republican, 835; assemblyman, Dr. R. S. Harvey, Democrat, 977, Albert Allen, Republican, 818; sheriff, Thomas F. Hanley, Republican, 1,000, T. B. Guthrie, Democrat, 800; auditor and recorder, Thomas E. McLelland, Republican, 986, Robert Neill, Democrat, 806; treasurer, John Coumerilh, Democrat, 1,266, Warren Hussey, Republican, 508; assessor, J. B. Fenn, Republican, 1,058, G. V. Byrnett, Democrat, 743; district attorney, Walter A. Jones, Republican, 925, B. F. Stoll, Democrat, 854; superintendent of schools, W. W. Hammell, Republican, 909, A. O. Ingalls, Democrat, 894; surveyor, X. S. Burke, Democrat, 904, Frank C. Loring, Republican, 894; probate judge, G. M. Cone, Democrat, 916, Henry S. Gregory, Republican, 887; commissioners 1st district, T. J. Argyle, Democrat, 345, A. L. Scofield, Republican, 333; 2d district, W. C. Human, Republican, 101, J. H. Miller, Democrat, 93; 3d district, Patrick McGowan, Democrat, 516, Robert T. Horn, Republican, 403; coroner, J. C. Bolander, Democrat, 917, W. P. Couillard, Republican, 873.

The main features of the campaign of 1888, was the county seat contest, which we will not discuss here, in as much as the subject has been fully treated in another chapter of this history. The south fork of the Coeur d'Alene was rapidly becoming more populous than the north fork and naturally enough, an attempt was made to remove the county seat to a point on the former stream. The attempt failed. The Republicans held their convention at Wallace, September 20th and adopted a platform in accord with the national one. They also endorsed Dubois for a second term as delegate. The Democrats met at Wardner, Wednesday, October 3d. Their platform was also an endorsement of the national platform, besides which it endorsed Hawley for delegate. Both conventions ignored the annexation question, except in so much as to declare themselves in favor of statehood for the territory. The official vote follows: "

Delegate, James H. Hawley, Democrat, 737, Fred T. Dubois, Republican, 1,029, Norman Buck, Annexationist. 35; joint councilman, Alexander E. Mayhew. Democrat, 992, George T. Crane, Republican, 805; joint representative, John M. Burke, Democrat. 906, J. Rand Sandburn, Republican, 842; representative, Robert S. Harvey, Democrat, 794, Isaac C. Sargent, Republican, 985; sheriff, Richard A. Cunningham, Democrat, 920, Jerry Savage, Republican, 872; auditor and recorder, Frank Tibbals, Democrat, 899, Thomas E. McLelland, Republican, 890; treasurer, David Holzman, Democrat, 790, George W. Owens, Republican, 964; assessor and collector, James Ferguson, Democrat, 550, John B. Fenn, Republican, 1,241; probate judge, George M. Cone, Democrat, 863, John C. Harkness, Republican. 927; district attorney, Albert Hagan, Democrat, 780, Charles W. O'Neill, Republican, 1,008; superintendent of schools, Albert O. Ingalls, Democrat, 923, O. H. Culver, Republican, 863; coroner, Joseph A. R. Campbell, Democrat, 855, James C. Bolander, Republican, 930; surveyor, Xifery S. Burke, Democrat, 843, Frank C. Loring, Republican, 952; commissioners 1st district, Thomas Shuster, Democrat, 183, Fred A. Weber, Republican, 250; 2d district, William Gerrard, Democrat, 483, Nelson Martin, Republican, 267; P. J. Holohan, Democrat, 296, G. Scott Anderson, Republican, 302.

As showing the distribution of the voting population of the county at this time we give herewith the vote by precincts for delegate: Wardner, 399; Murray, 226; Delta, 71; Myrtle, 21; Eagle, 56; Carbon, 35; Milo, 124; Wardner Junction, 59; Kingston, 94; Osburn, 74; Burke, 244; Wallace, 202; Mullan, 118; Pierce, 17; Weippe, 21.

Another county seat contest marked the election of 1890, with the same result as in 1888,—the county seat remained where it was, at Murray. Both county conventions met at Wallace, the Democratic convention on August 18th, the Republican on the 12th. The platforms adopted were purely national in character. Below will be found the vote cast at this election in this county: Congressman, 51st congress, Alexander E. Mayhew, Democrat, 1,026, Willis Sweet, Republican, 1,149; 52d congress, Alexander E. Mayhew, Democrat, 1,019, Willis Sweet, Republican, 1,154; governor, Benjamin Wilson, Democrat, 979, George L. Shoup, Republican, 1,198; lieutenant governor, S. F. Taylor, Democrat. 988, N. B. Willey, Republican, 1,192; secretary of state, E. A. Sherwin, Democrat, 991, A. J. Pinkham, Republican, 1,185; treasurer, Timothy Regan, Democrat, 992, Frank R. Coffin, Republican, 1,186; state auditor, J. H. Wickersham, Democrat, 994, Silas Moody, Republican, 1,184; attorney general, R. Z. Johnson, Democrat, 1,005, George H. Roberts, Republican, 1,172; superintendent of public instruction, M. A. Kelly, Democrat, 996, J. Harroun, Republican, 1,181; justices of supreme court, F. E. Ensign, H. W. Weir, I. N. Maxwell, Democrats, 1,008, 981 and 992, respectively, Joseph W. Huston, J. T. Morgan and I. N. Sullivan, Republicans, 1,194, 1,164 and 1,190, respectively; state senators, W. W. Woods, Democrat, 1,008, Robert Neill, Democrat. 979, J. S. Langrishe, Republican, 1,156, John A. Finch, Republican, 1,182; representatives, J. W. McMullen, Peter Joyce, M. Maher, William Powers, Democrats, 965, 992, 1,009 and 1,023, respectively, James Cameron, C. D. Porter, A. L. Scofield, John Hanley, Republicans, 1,154, 1,175, 1,195 and 1,141 votes, respectively; district judge, Junius Holleman, Democrat, 1,117, M. C. Athey, Republican, 1,012; district attorney, R. E. McFarland, Democrat, 920, C. W. O'Neil, Republican, 1,150; clerk and recorder, Barry N. Hillard, Democrat, 1,432, M. J. Sweeney, Republican, 726; sheriff, R. A. Cunningham, Democrat, 1,231, George Hardesty, Republican, 923; treasurer, Fred Dutton, Democrat, 950, F. F. Johnson, Republican, 1,222; assessor, William Gerrard, Democrat, 938, John B. Fenn, Republican, 1,227; probate judge, A. O. Ingalls, Democrat, 973, H. S. Gregory, Republican, 1,195; commissioners, 1st district, C. N. Ferguson, Democrat, 152, Camil Kraus, Republican, 173; 2d district, Paul Hirlinger, Democrat, 253, George T. Crane, Republican, 315; 3d district, John W. Livers, Democrat, 640, W. S. Haskins, Republican, 620; surveyor, Jerry Dunlee, Democrat, 958, Frank C. Loring, Republican, 1,212; coroner, W. S. Sims, Democrat, 1,094, D. H. Brien, Republican, 1,084. From the foregoing it will be seen that the county was strongly Republican.

Still another county seat contest marked the campaign of 1892, in which Murray and Wallace were the rival candidates. Because of the aspirations of other towns on the south fork Wallace lost the county seat for the time being, through a lack of only 25 votes, as will be seen from the vote given below. In 1892, also, the Populist party first came into the local field, although it is true that no nominations for county offices were made until two years later. The Prohibitionists polled a vote of less than 10 in this county. Harrison received 936 votes; Cleveland, 971 votes. The vote for other officers was: For congressman, Willis Sweet, Republican, 887, Edward B. True, Democrat, 796, James Gunn, Populist, 175; supreme judge, Isaac N. Sullivan, Republican, 839, Francis N. Ensign, Democrat, 865, Thomas M. Stewart, Populist, 6; state senators, I. B. Cowan, Republican, 808, John R. Stephens, Republican, 810, Alexander E. Mayhew, Democrat, 1,030, Robert Neill, Democrat, 931; representatives, Robert E. Brown, William King, W. S. Sheill, Henry Drought, Republicans, 837, 935, 869 and 840 votes, respectively, Palmer G. Cartnell, W. H. Frazer, Charles Heim, Frank Gaffney, Democrats, 868, 834, 873 and 886 votes, respectively, Wilson R. Stokes, Independent, 65; governor, William J. McConnell, Republican, 198, John M. Burke (one of the pioneers of the Coeur d'Alene), Democrat, 902, Abraham J. Crook, Populist, 234; lieutenant governor, Frank B. Willis, Republican, 831, George V. Bryan, Democrat, 880, Junius B. Wright, Populist, 135; secretary of state, James F. Curtis, Republican, 802, James W. Wickersham, Democrat, 933, Benjamin E. Chaney, Populist, 113; attorney general, George M. Parsons, Republican, 830, William T. Reeves, Democrat, 888, John R. Wester, Populist, 103; treasurer, William C. Hill, Republican, 837, Philip A. Regan, Democrat, 906. Thomas J. Sutton, Populist, 101; auditor, Frank C. Ramsay, Republican, 839, William J. McClure, Democrat, 878, James H. Anderson, Populist, 103; superintendent of public instruction, B. Byron Lower, Republican, 830, John W. Farris, Democrat, 879, Leighton L. Shearer, Populist, 102; sheriff, Donald R. Cameron, Republican, 1,039, John K. Waite, Democrat, 919; assessor, Charles B. Halstead, Republican, 723, John T. Argyle, Democrat, 1,161; probate judge, Henry S. Gregory, Republican, 1,012, James E. Gyde. Democrat, 824; treasurer, Frank F. Johnson, Republican, 898, Harry R. Hall, Democrat, 962; surveyor, W. Clayton Miller, Republican, 935, Isaac S. Daly, Democrat, 874; coroner, M. W. Bruner, Republican. 893, W. F. Herrington, Democrat, 1,011; commissioners, 1st district, Fred T. Dutton, Democrat, 268, no opposition; 2d district, Al. Page, Republican, 390, John Pelkes, Democrat, 196; 3d district, Marenus Janse, Republican, 415, A. W. Steele, Democrat, 542.

The vote, by precincts, for the permanent location of the county seat was as follows: Wardner, for Murray 103, for Wallace 201; Wallace, for Murray 18, for Wallace 457; Mullan, for Murray 56, for Wallace 156; Burke, for Murray 41, for Wallace 92; Gem, for Murray 11, for Wallace 89; Kellogg, for Murray 52, for Wallace 457; Mullan, for Murray 56, for Wallace 7; Osburn, for Murray 76, for Wallace 28; Kingston, for Murray 17, for Wallace 43; Littlefield, for Murray 36, for Wallace 4; Delta, for Murray 72, for Wallace, 6; Eagle, for Murray 29, for Wallace 6; Lolo, for Murray 33, for Wallace 0; Pierce, for Murray 12, for Wallace 0; Weippe, for Murray 22, for Wallace 2; Elk, for Murray 6, for Wallace 2; total, 1,884 votes, of which Murray received 652, Wallace 1,232; vote necessary to choice, 1,256.

On December 8, 1892, John K. Waite filed a contest for the office of sheriff, alleging fraud and corruption in the precincts of Kellogg, Wardner and Wallace, that Cameron was not a citizen at the time of his election and that money had been used in his behalf for bribery purposes. At the March term of court, 1893, Judge Holleman dismissed the case.

Two years later the People's party in Shoshone county had attained so much strength that it was able to elect its candidates to every office except two, those of probate judge and county clerk. Every labor organization in the Coeur d'Alenes endorsed the People's party platform and nominees. The silver question was the paramount issue in this county, although the tariff received no little attention. The main struggle for office was between the candidates for sheriff, clerk and state representatives and senators. The People's party held its county convention at Wallace, July 23d; the Democrats convened at the same place a week later; while the Republicans did not meet until September 25th, holding their convention in Wallace, also. The official count of the election, held on November 6th, is given below.

For congressman, James M. Ballentine, Democrat, 232, James Gunn, Populist, 991, Edgar Wilson, Republican, 668; supreme judge, John C. Elder, Democrat, 243, Texas Angel, Populist, 904, Joseph W. Porter, Republican, 691.

The memorable campaign of 1896 witnessed the dissolution of the Republican party in Shochone county as it did in other counties in the state, also serious divisions among contemporary parties. Here as elsewhere the silver question was the paramount issue and as might have been expected of the greatest silver camp in the Northwest. Shoshone county cast an enormous silver vote, more than seventy-nine per cent of the total vote polled. The first division in the Republican party took place at the convention held at Wallace, August 17th, held for the purpose of electing delegates to the state convention. The gold wing under the leadership of Weldon B. Heyburn left the convention hall and assembled at the Carter house where delegates were elected to attend the regular convention at Boise. The silver wing adopted resolutions announcing its allegiance to the principles of bi-metallism, protection, reciprocity and restricted immigration, but asserting that the silver question was the main issue in this county, in the state and in the nation. At Boise the silverites combined their forces and placed in nomination a fusion ticket under the name of the People's Democratic party. September 18th, the Populist, Democratic and Silver Republican conventions assembled in Wallace. It was considered probable that the Populists and Democrats would effect a union of forces, but some misunderstandings regarding the distribution of offices arose and the parties were unable to agree. Thereupon the Populists nominated a straight party ticket. The Democrats then opened negotiations with the Silver Republicans, met with success and a union ticket was placed in the field. The Populists incorporated an equal suffrage plank in their platform. Eight days later the Republican county convention was called to order at Wardner and proceeded to nominate men pledged to suport the national platform. Among other resolutions passed, was one commendatory of Marion Kramer, prosecuted for perjury in connection with the trial of Walter A. Jones for murder. The convention declared him innocent and that he was the object of malicious persecution.

The official vote follows: Presidential electors, W. W. Woods, William F. Smith, Lorenzo L. Evans, People's Democratic party nominees, 1,760, 1,741 and 1,736 votes each, W. B. Heyburn, James F. Ailshie, George C. Parkinson, Republican nominees, 497, 493 and 496 votes each; congressman, James Gunn, Populist-Democrat, 1,067, William E. Borah, Silver Republican, 525, John T. Genoway, Democrat-Silver Republican, 751; amendments, for woman suffrage, 625, opposed, 582, for the creation of the office of county attorney, 670, opposed, 356, for the separation of the offices of probate judge and superintendent of public instruction, 658, opposed, 379. The Prohibition vote for any one officer did not exceed 10.

Conditions obtained in 1898 similar to those in 1896. The Democrats and the two wings of the Republican party held their conventions in Wallace about the first of September. A long and determined effort was made by the Silver Republicans and Democrats to effect fusion, but without success. Finally the Silver Republicans and the Gold Republicans agreed to nominate a joint ticket, which was done forthwith. The Democrats adjourned until September 15th when they nominated an independent ticket. The Populists convened at Mullan September 12th. Among other candidates they placed before the people were two women, nominees for treasurer and superintendent of public instruction. From the official vote given below, the political condition may be better judged: For congressman, James Gunn, Populist, 1,526, Weldon B. Heyburn, Republican, 734, Edgar Wilson, Silver Republican, 968, William G. Boone, Prohibitionist, 22; for governor, James H. Anderson, Populist, 1,518, Albert B. Argyle, Democrat, 382.

In 1898, also, the county seat was removed from Murray to Wallace, by the following vote: Murray, 864, Wallace, 2,471.

The campaign of 1900 was not as demonstrative a one in this county as the campaign of 1896 or that of 1898. The silver question dropped into the background, its place being taken by those of "imperialism" and other administration policies. The Silver Republicans in this county disbanded their party organization and individually joined one of the other parties. The Democratic party, after adjusting factional differences between the Clark-Barton and the Murphy wings, fused with the Populists and nominated a union ticket September 4th. The official vote cast at the election follows:

For presidential electors, Joshua G. Rowton, Republican, 2,378, George M. Parsons, Republican, 2,360, Weldon B. Heyburn, Republican, 2,347, James W.

Reid, Democrat, 2,901, Edward J. Dockery, Democrat, 2,868, Samuel J. Rick, Democrat, 2,870; congressman, John T. Morrison, Republican, 2,446, Thomas L. Glenn, Democrat, 2,654; supreme judge, Edgar C. Steele, Republican, 2,474, C. O. Stockslager, Democrat, 2,610; governor, Drew W. Standrod, Republican, 2,505, Frank W. Hunt, Democrat, 2,791; lieutenant governor, Addison A. Crane, Republican, 2,479, Thomas F. Terrell, Democrat, 2,759; secretary of state, Martin Patrie, Republican, 2,476, Charles J. Bassett, Democrat, 2,742; auditor, Henry J. Syms, Republican, 2,454, Egbert W. Jones, Democrat, 2,742; treasurer, George H. Kester, Republican, 2,470, John J. Plumer, Democrat, 2,739; attorney general, George E. Gray, Republican, 2,571, Frank Martin, Democrat, 2,691; superintendent of public instruction, Jessie Riley, Republican, 2,455, Permeal French, Democrat, 2,737; mine inspector, Robert D. Bell, Republican, 2,457, Martin H. Jacobs, Democrat, 2,720; state senator, John L. Dunn, Republican, 2,482; Charles S. Moody, Democrat, 2,773; representatives, John Johnston, Isaac M. Busby, James R. Green, Elias E. Horst, Republicans, 2,540, 2,562, 2,538 and 2,535 respectively, Glenn P. McKinlay, Edmund R. Oxley, Thomas Henley, John Kelley, Democrats, 2,642, 2,636, 2,710, 2,632, respectively; county attorney, R. N. Dunn, Republican, 2,634, James M. Addle, 2,581; commissioners, Albert Otto, Henry Drought, Israel B. Cowan, Republicans, 2,566, 2,489 and 2,581, respectively, Moses S. Simmons, John M. Elliott, Frank Gaffney, Democrats, 2,607, 2,696 and 2,576, respectively; sheriff, Angus Sutherland, Republican, 2,807, James Lyle, Democrat, 2,505; treasurer, Musa K. Howes, Republican, 2,483, Anna Connor, Democrat, 2,731; probate judge, Henry P. Knight, Republican, 2,596, Alexander D. McKinlay, Democrat, 2,587; superintendent of public instruction, Charles W. Vance, Republican, 2,610, Helen L. Young, 2,619; assessor, Charles S. Perrin, Republican, 2,349, George Miner, Democrat, 2,853; coroner, Abraham L. Lehman, Republican, 2,499, Tracy R. Mason, Democrat, 2,667; surveyor, David B. Porter, Republican, 2,553, John Nordquist, Democrat, 2,574.

The last election is of too recent date to require a detailed discussion of the platforms and policies of the different parties. The Republicans met at Wallace September 16, 1902. They pledged their candidates for the legislature to support W. B. Heyburn for United States senator and also to support the movement under way for the segregation of the southern portion of the county. The Democrats convened at Wardner, September 22d. They indorsed the Pocatello platform, and pledged themselves to economically administer county affairs should their nominees be elected. The Populists and Prohibitionists each placed a ticket in the field, but the support given them by the voters was immaterial in determining the general result in the county. The official canvass of the Democratic and Republican votes follows:

For congressman, Burton L. French, Republican, 2,813, Joseph H. Hutchinson, Democrat, 2,085; governor, John T. Morrison, Republican, 2,702, Frank W. Hunt, Democrat, 2,260; lieutenant governor, James M. Stevens, Republican, 2,754, William E. Adams, Democrat, 2,125; secretary of state, Wilmot H. Gibson, Republican, 2,776, Charles J. Bassett, Democrat, 2,108; state auditor, Theodore Turner, Republican, 2,758, John C. Callahan, Democrat, 2,112; state treasurer, Henry N. Coffin, Republican, 2,748, Edward P. Coltman, Democrat, 2,111; attorney general, John A. Bagley, Republican, 2,753; Fred D. Culver, Democrat, 2,105, superintendent of public instruction, Major L. Scott, Republican, 2,736, Permeal French, Democrat, 2,183; mine inspector, Robert Bell, Republican, 2,672, John H. Nordquist, Democrat, 2,206; supreme judge, James F. Ailshie, Republican, 2,738, Frank E. Fogg, Democrat, 2,083; state senator, Bernard F. O'Neil, Republican, 2,864, Patrick H. Blake, Democrat, 2,028; representatives, Ole A. Anderson, James R. Greer, Howard R. McBride, Alfred Page, Republicans, 2,716, 2,634, 2,763 and 2,641, respectively, Mills W. Hoyle, Daniel Harrington, Mrs. Mary A. Hutton, Sumner Rigdon, Democrats, 2,097, 2,132, 1,963, 2,137; district judge, Ralph T. Morgan, Republican, 2,649, Liguori A. Doherty, Democrat, 2,200; county clerk, Stanley P. Fairweather, Republican, 2,759, John P. Sheehy, Democrat, 2,169; commissioners, 1st district, Fremont S. Rowe, Republican, 2,715, James J. Purcell, Democrat, 2,118; 2d district, Ewen McIntosh, Republican, 2,632, Edward Bolger, Democrat, 2,110; 3d district, Israel B. Cowan, Republican, 2,695, Edward J. Clark, Democrat, 2,108; sheriff, Charles Manley, Republican, 2,940, Thomas Heney, Democrat, 2,042; county attorney, Robert N. Dunn, Republican, 2,593, Henry P. Knight, Democrat, 2,290; treasurer, Hans J. Rice, Republican, 2,521, Mrs. Carrie Shearer, Democrat, 2,357; probate judge, Thaddeus C. Riddle, Republican, 2,758, John H. Wourms, Democrat, 2,062; superintendent of schools, Mary O. Wickersham, Republican, 2,627, Mrs. Helen L. Young, Democrat, 2,293; assessor, William T. Hooper, Republican, 2,702, Charles Heim, Democrat, 2,117; coroner, D. E. Keep, Republican, 2,688, Franklin P. Matchette, Democrat, 2,087; surveyor, David A. Porter, Republican, 2,736, William A. Hesse, Democrat, 2,112.

At the last session of the legislature Shoshone county was signally honored by the election of one of her foremost citizens, Weldon B. Heyburn, as United States senator for Idaho. This recognition is both deserved and popular and because of it Shoshone county will doubtless come into a national prominence in politics during the next few years as the home of one of Idaho's able senators.

CHAPTER V.

CITIES AND TOWNS.

WALLACE.

Congressman Proctor Knott once described the city of Duluth, Minessota, as a glorious metropolis, "sitting at the feet of her own possibilities." Far more aptly would this apply to Wallace, the capital of Shoshone county, for the Coeur d'Alenes are her possibilities, and among them she nestles, the prettiest, best groomed municipality in northern Idaho. To the Eagle, a small sheet published temporarily at the mining camp of Eagle, Wallace owes the first notes from the trump of journalistic fame. On May 10, 1884, the Eagle said, under headline of "Placer Center:"

"This is the name of a new town started on the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene, at a point about seven miles up the road from Evolution. The town is situated in a good location and commands the Canyon creek mines and other tributaries of the South Fork, wherein mining in a small way is going on. The town will be a good point for prospectors who intend to put in a summer's work on the range between the Coeur d'Alene and St. Joe, and its permanency is assured from the fact that it is on the Mullan road, which is the main emigrant road on the Bitter Root divide."

"Placer Center" is the Wallace of today, a city of handsomely paved streets, substantial business blocks, elegant, home-like residences, pure water in ample quantity, and supplied with all modern municipal improvements. At a meeting of the Shoshone county commissioners, May 2, 1888, J. C. Harkness presented a petition from citizens of Wallace praying for incorporation of the town, consisting of eighty acres, originally held by Colonel W. R. Wallace, by virtue of Sioux half-breed scrip. This petition was granted. The commissioners named as trustees W. R. Wallace, D. C. McKissick, Horace King, C. M. Hall and C. W. Vedder.

The city of Wallace is located on portions of two sections, 34 and 27. The former section comprised a part of the original filing for townsite purposes, of Col. W. R. Wallace; the latter, railroad land owned by the Northern Pacific railway company. The energy and patience manifested by Col. Wallace in securing the townsite of the city which bears his name, was not rewarded, so far as he was, financially, concerned. His claim was successfully contested, and he lost the fruits of his labor. In a letter to the editor of the Murray Sun, dated March 1, 1889, Col. Wallace recites his side of the controversy as follows:

For two years I held the land on which the town was built, on an agricultural location, and with my own hands split the rails and segregated the land from the public domain, and when I had secured the title to the same by the location of Sioux half-breed scrip, the outside fences were left standing, and those on each side of the old Mullan road were taken down, as the title was unquestioned. And from all past precedents as good as any patent could make it. The department never claimed that the scrip was other than genuine, but in 1887 it made, through the general land office, a decision that, because the scrip had been located by a duplicate in Dakota, the original and genuine scrip was canceled. I can prove by the American consul, at Winnipeg, that the scrip was located by the original owners, Walter Bourke and wife; that he made oath, and still lives to verify the same; that he had never parted with the original, and never gave anyone power to use his name in any other location; never knew of any entry of this (his scrip), and under this I felt perfectly secure that the title would be made to the "Wallace Townsite Company" instead of the claimants in Dakota, and steps were taken to this end last November by D. C. Corbin, who employed the Hon. Luther Harrison, of Washington, D. C. * * * * The present jumping of the site is unjust, and in line with other attempts made in the past to defraud our pioneers of their property. * * * * I have built roads leading here, and borrowed money to pay for the same that the community might thrive. I have lived here through dark and gloomy days, when none would take part in the present townsite as a gift, and I have been called a fool and crank because I could see in the future an opportunity to build a prosperous town, while they could not. But after I have proven the prophecy of five years ago, by my energy and work, they would rob me of what little I have left of the hardships and privations of pioneering. The mob has tried my case without my being allowed a defense. The higher courts will ere long decide the validity of the claimants. Respectfully yours,

W. R. WALLACE.

Results of the decision of the Department of the Interior were sensational. Incidental scenes were thus graphically portrayed in the Wallace Miner:

On the night of February 19, 1889, the ground upon which the town of Wallace now stands suddenly reverted from patented ground to the public domain, and hundreds who had paid for government title to lots found themselves with nothing but squatters' rights. * * * * The excitement in Wallace that night was great—greater than on any other former occasion. Lot jumping had grown to be quite an industry in our neighboring town of Mullan; it had thrived for a time in Burke, but no man had dared to squat upon a foot of Wallace. Sioux half-breed scrip had been placed on this eighty-acre tract for the sole benefit of the half-breed, Walter Bourke and his heirs, and the government would protect him in his right and title. W. R. Wallace and his company owned the land, and they had established an undisputed ownership.

But when the secretary of the interior decided against a certain Sioux scrip location, near Glendive, Montana, a few of our citizens concluded that if that location was defective this one here must be. It was not, necessarily, a logical conclusion, but it was sufficient for the purpose. One of the more daring looked over the town plat, and finally concluded that the lots on the corner of Cedar and Sixth streets possessed superior advantages as a business location, so he quietly walked over and took possession of it, posting a notice in a conspicuous place, asserting his claims. This was between nine and ten o'clock in the evening. This was the beginning. The corner of Bank and Sixth was next taken. The jumping became general. Business men, laboring men, hoboes and rounders all joined the wild scramble for lots. Choice business locations went first, then outside property. Excitement was intense. Hurriedly written notices claiming so many feet of ground were placed on every available lot. It was astonishing to see how excited some men got over the affair. A few were cool-headed and quiet in their demeanor. Notable among these was Henry Howes, who, viewing the wild uproar all around him, quietly said he had been working here hard for three years, and had finally secured a place to build a home. D. C. McKissick and C. B. Halstead were two other cool ones. They quietly took possession of three fine lots, corner of Cedar and Fifth, built a bonfire and sat up all night.

When morning dawned and our citizens realized the great change that had taken place in the ownership of property, it was regarded by some as a huge joke, so great was the confidence in the word of W. R. Wallace. The hobo element was going to hold the ground, right or wrong. Possession was all they wanted, and this they had. The conservative element, which included the mass of the inhabitants, realized that the state of affairs was a serious thing for the town, so long as the status of legal right to the ground was unsettled. Mass meetings were held, records examined and the conclusion reached that the land was public domain, subject to occupancy by any citizen of the United States. The secretary of the interior has just decided that they were right, and the applications now in for a patent will, in all probability, settle the matter beyond a doubt.

The foregoing article, published in the white heat of the excitement attending the decision of the secretary of the interior, must be accepted with due consideration. Many respectable citizens were compelled to "jump" lots in order to protect their rights and the homes they had established. In order that a full understanding of this case may be presented to the reader, the following ruling by the commissioner of the general land office concerning this matter is herewith given:

Pages 27 to 32 of the decision of the commissioner (of Sept. 6) is as follows: By act of congress approved July 17, 1854, this class of scrip was authorized and the commissioner of Indian affairs issued the same. To the said Walter Bourke were issued five pieces of scrip for 480 acres of land. Said scrip, numbered 430, letters A, B, C, D and E., A and B for forty acres each, C for eighty and D and E for 160 acres each.

Upon representation made, that to 430 C had been lost, commissioner of Indian affairs issued a duplicate thereof; said duplicate was duly located March 9, 1880, and a patent for the land embraced in the location was properly issued as hereinbefore set forth. Thereafter, on the fifth of June, 1886, the register and receiver of the Coeur d'Alene land office, Idaho, allowed a location by W. R. Wallace, attorney in fact, with the original of said piece of scrip, for a tract of land, and on the seventeenth of said month transmitted the paper in the case for the action of this office in the matter. Said act of congress declares that no transfer or conveyance of any of said certificates, or "scrip, shall be valid."

In the case of Gilbert vs. Sharpson (14 Munn, 544) the court held that a "power of attorney as far as intended to operate as a transfer would be of no avail; the right of the half-breed in the scrip and the land would remain the same; it could not be made revocable nor create any intent in the attorney. Therefore the matter is solely between the government and scripee. It is claimed by the scripee that he did not locate the duplicate of said scrip and receive a patent for the land embraced in the location as herein stated, and the papers therein appear regular; therefore, it is reasonable to conclude that the location made with the duplicate scrip was properly made and that the patent therein was in full satisfaction of the claim of the scripee against the government as represented by the piece of scrip.

The government having thus discharged its obligation to the scripee, the original scrip was thereby rendered of no effect, and the location made therewith was fraudulent and void in its inception; and the cancelling of the same by this office as herein set forth, is authorized by the decision of the supreme court of the United States in the case of Harkness and wife vs. Underhill (Black, 316). Under date of March 13, 1889, the Register reports that Mr. Wallace was duly notified of the said decision of this office in this matter, but no appeal was properly taken therefrom. In view of the foregoing, and after a careful consideration of the arguments submitted by the counsel on both sides, I conclude that the action of this office was properly taken and the petition of Mr. Wallace is denied. Action is suspended under Rule 80, of practice.

On June 11, 1892, a townsite patent for the Wallace location was issued to John L. Dunn, John B. Cameron, George P. White, Henry E. Howes and Thomas A. Helm, trustees of Wallace, for the north half of the northeast quarter of section 34, township 48, north range 4, east Boise meridian, containing eighty acres. This tract embraced the greater portion of the present townsite. The land on section 27, north of an alley between Pine and Cedar streets, was railroad land. This has been sold to Wallace citizens, a portion, lying along the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene river, having been donated to the city for park purposes by the Northern Pacific railway company.

Following the contest on July 12, 1892, was filed the original town plat, surveyed by J. M. Potter. Additions, preceding and subsequent to, the filing of this plat, are as follows: Mountain View, October 24, 1890; Knob Hill, June 3, 1891; Sunnyside, July 11, 1895; Huttons, October 1, 1891; Teal's, October 14, 1893; Park, June 15, 1899.

In 1889 Governor Stevenson said in his report:

"The town of Wallace, one thousand population, is situated in a beautiful basin of the South Fork Valley, at the junction of Nine Mile, Placer and Canyon creeks, and is the supply depot of the great mining interests of these gulches. It is the railway transfer point of all the tributaries of the upper south fork and has many well supplied and substantial business houses in every branch of trade. It has two first-class hotels, several societies, good schools, and an able and enterprising tri-weekly paper, the Wallace Free Press. Wallace will more than double in population the coming year from the fact of its situation and selection as the division terminus of the through railroad, now building toward Missoula, Montana."

The death of Col. W. R. Wallace, founder of the prosperous city which bears his name, occurred in November, 1901, at Whittier, California, whither he had gon in search of health.

During the five years previous to 1893 the town of Wallace was governed by a board of trustees. In that year it was organized under a city charter. W. S. Haskins was the first mayor elected. The succeeding mayors up to the present period have been Oscar Wallace, son of Col. W. R. Wallace, now a resident of Spokane, Washington, Jacob Lockman, Herman Rossi, T. N. Bernard, Frederick Smith, who served three terms, and T. Connor, present incumbent. At the present writing, July 1903, the municipal administrative officers of Wallace are, T. D. Conner, mayor; J. F. Whalen, city clerk; H. P. Knight, attorney; Maurice H. Hare, treasurer; George A. Cunningham, police judge; P. F. McGovern, chief of police; P. F. Smith, assistant. Councilmen: First ward—H. M. Thostensen, W. H. Turner; second ward—John Pressly, Davis Walford; third ward—E. Burnham, James H. Taylor; fourth ward—John Hogus, Herman J. Rogers. From the date of the organizaton of the city government, in 1893, until 1900, Wallace contained but three wards. In 1889 an excellent sewer system was added to the municipal improvements, at a cost of $20,000. The work was completed under direction of Contractor Thomas Olson.

The earliest pioneer in Wallace, in a business sense, was Alexander D. McKinlay, who came here April 16, 1885, accompanied by Peter J. Holohan, a partner with whom he has been associated twenty-eight years, in Idaho and other states. Mr. McKinlay recalls the fact that he was obliged to cross the swampy area of Cedar street by leaping from log to log and stump to stump in order to pass over dry shod. In 1886 Messrs. Howes & King located in "Placer Center," and opened a general store in a log building, having purchased the grocery business of A. D. McKinlay and J. P. Holohan. E. D. Carter, the same year, erected the first sawmill, which, as may be readily imagined, enjoyed a handsome patronage. The initial drug store was opened by E. A. Sherwin, and the first hardware concern by J. R. Marks, William Hart, and E. H. Moffitt, whose pioneer institution is now the Coeur d'Alene Hardware Company. John Cameron arrived in the "camp" in the winter of 1886-7, and he became the proprietor of the original saloon on the townsite. The first business lot purchased from Col. Wallace was bought by E. D. Carter, in 1886, on which he erected a frame hotel. The first livery and transfer business was controlled by Southerland & White. In 1887 William S. Haskins arrived from Kingston, with a fair stock of general merchandise. Subsequently he disposed of his goods and business to O. C. Otterson. The Dunn Brothers, A. J. and J. L., were the pioneer editors and proprietors of newspapers in Wallace, their first venture being the Wallace Free Press. This plant they sold out and placed the Miner in the field in the fall of 1890. At present the press of Wallace is represented by the Idaho State Tribune, edited by J. R. Sovereign, and the Wallace Press, E. B. Reitzel, proprietor. In December, 1886, the Carter Hotel was completed and M. D. Flint assumed charge of the same as proprietor. What might be termed the spontaneous growth of the young city is described in the Murray Sun, of December 4, 1886:

> The town of Wallace is more than holding its own in the way of solid and rapid improvement. One of the finest, if not the largest blocks in the Coeur d'Alenes is now in the course of erection by Col. Wallace. It is seventy-five by eighty feet in size. The ground floor will contain three spacious apartments finished in the very best manner, and the second will be devoted to a large public hall. Carter's saw mill cannot supply the demand for lumber. Flint's hotel is to be enlarged. George & Human, of Delta, have bought two choice lots and intend building on them. Charles Seelig has purchased a location with a view of building a brewery thereon. Three saloons are doing a flourishing business. The work of clearing Main street is being pushed with vigor. The use of giant powder is clearing the town of stumps.

The excellent school facilities at present enjoyed by Wallace are developed from humble and primitive origin. In the fall of 1887 the first school was opened in a log building on the corner of Cedar and Third streets, with Miss Annie Angell as teacher. Here school was continued for one year, when a frame building was exchanged for a log "shack" on Pine, between Fifth and Sixth streets. One year later the trustees of the school district erected a building for school purposes which was subsequently converted into a residence by O. B. Olson.

In June, 1892, the trustees purchased six lots on the northeast corner of Third and River streets, comprising an area of 100x150 feet, and a most eligible site for school house purposes. The price paid was $1,750. The same year a handsome brick building, two stories in height, surmounted by a tower of Moorish design, was erected. During the spring of 1901 an annex to the original edifice was built, somewhat larger, but of the same style of architecture and general design. It is, at present, one of the most attractive structures in the city.

From this institution, on May 17, 1895, was graduated the first class in the history of the Coeur d'Alenes. The exercises took place at the Methodist Episcopal church under the direction of Prof. C. W. Vance. The graduates were Myrta Howes, Nina Hogan, Katie Hanley, Katie Baldwin and Luneti Worstell. With the exception of two slight epidemics of diphtheria the Wallace schools, in District No. 8, enjoyed uninterrupted success during term time since 1892. At the present writing, 1903, the officers and faculties of the grades are as follows: Superintendent, H. M. Cook; principal of high school, Mrs. Edna Clayton Orr; music teacher, Miss Grace Jenkins; grade teachers, Kathryn Cunningham, Mollie Fulmer, Myrta Howes, Sadie Skattaboe. The high school enrollment in 1903 was, boys, eighteen; girls, twenty-four. The average attendance is twenty-nine. During the past nine months there have been no graduation exercises, Charles Dunn, eligible to that honor, having been appointed to the naval academy, Annapolis, and dropping out without formal graduation from the high school.

The following comprehensive resume of existing conditions in Wallace in 1900 was furnished by the Coeur d'Alene Mining Journal, of date January 1, 1901:

> The year 1900 gave to Wallace its greatest measure of advancement for a single year in material improvement and general enlightment, and her citizens cross the threshhold of a new year satisfied with the treatment they have received at the hands of the departed year. * * * * * Suffering nearly total destruction by fire on July 27, 1900, the town has made better progress than formerly, until it has become what the severe critic would term an "ideal mining town," possessing all the embellishments of modern civilization, splendid buildings, superb electric light and water plants, all the standard fraternal organizations and religious societies, good public schools, a magnificent Thespian temple, etc. The city's population today is only two thousand, but the next five years assures an increase of not less than five thousand, and proportionate expansion along other lines.
> Wallace made permanent progress during 1900 in every commendable respect, truly reflecting the unprecedented prosperity in local mining circles. The municipal improvements, new cross walks, leveling, grading and macadamizing of streets, made during the year, cost $14,450.29, every dollar of which was judiciously expended. The city officials, led by Mayor Smith, have made a splendid record. Municipal affairs have been well managed, and let it be said incidentally that the city's indebtedness is only $8,000, a bond obligation created to furnish the city with a first-class sewer system. And it should also be stated in this connection that the Wallace Manufacturing, Electric & Power Company has a splendid combination light and water plant, which has a patronage of 3,000 incandescent and eighty arc lights, and 600 faucet and surface connections. The double plant is one of the best and most perfectly equipped in the west, worth $150,000, and is under the management of H. W. Fellows, the officers of the proprietary company being A. B. Campbell, president; Richard Wilson, vice-president and F. F. Johnson, secretary and treasurer.
> The business of the Wallace postoffice for 1900 was one-third greater than for the previous year, which very accurately reflects the general advancement of the community. According to comparative population of Idaho towns, the Wallace postoffice easily ranks first. But the record of the First National Bank is another evidence of the permanent advancement of the city. By the official report of the First National, issued December 15, it was learned that the individual deposits were $552,313, against $466,523 for the corresponding month of the previous year, while the deposits, subject to check, in September, 1898, were only $272,703. * * * The First National began business August 8, 1892, and closes the year 1900 with resources of $784,513.

The building record made by Wallace during 1900 eclipsed that of any preceding year, the money expended in the erection of business houses reaching close to the $100,000 mark, while the erection of dwellings and handsome cottages absorbed about $50,000. The new business structures included:

Holohan-McKinlay block, two-story brick, with fine store rooms on the first floor, $20,000; Sunset brewery, four-story brick block, erected and owned by ex-Mayor Jacob Lockman and association, $15,000; brick warehouse, by White & Bender, $12,000; Coeur d'Alene Hardware Company, warehouse No. 2, fac simile of No. 1, $7,000; Furst block, two-story brick, by John Furst, $7,000; Otterson, two-story brick, 50x100, by O. C. Otterson, $12,000; Heller, two-story brick block, by Mrs. Eliza Heller, $7,000; Carl Mallon, brick and stone brewery, $6,500; Mayor P. F. Smith, warehouse, $3,500; Jones & Deane, addition to second story, $5,000; Coeur d'Alene Iron Works, two-story frame, 35x100, $3,000; fifty feet addition, two-story, to Odd Fellows Hall, $3,000; Wood & Keats, two-story frame, 25x60, $2,500; M. C. Murphy, lodging house, $2,500; Fred Kelly, lodging house, $2,500; George F. Moore, improvements on furniture store, $2,000; total, $97,000. The new residence buildings included: William Hart, $7,500; E. Proesting, $6,500; Dan McGinnis, $5,000; Mrs. Moriarty, $3,000; George Garrett, $3,000; W. D. Powers, $2,000; John Pressley, $2,000.

Among the business houses represented in the Wallace Press in November, 1890, were these:

Hotels: Carter House, E. D. Carter, proprietor; the Idaho, N. R. Penny; the Crazy Horse, Simnett & Webster; Hanley House; American House, George H. Heller; Michigan House, Charles Mehl. Liveries: Sutherland & White, Red Front, McDonald & Johnson. Clothing houses: The O. K., Julius Kohn, manager; the Colorado, Sam Heller, proprietor. Restaurants: The Cedar Street, Mesdames Hogan & Place, proprietors; the Frankfurt. City transfer: Paul F. Smith, William H. Otto. Jeweler: Eli Ritchott. Meat markets: Silver Belt, Barger & Sears, proprietors; Follet & Harris. Hardware: Holley, Mason Marks & Company. Furniture and undertaking: William Worstell. Bank: Bank of Wallace, Charles Hussey, proprietor, C. M. Hall, cashier. Ice: Carl Mallon. Dry goods, Mrs. A. A. Schofield; Galland Brothers; Chicago Beehive. Blacksmith: James Hennessy. Real estate: N. Witner. Bakeries: City Bakery; Muir & Dicks, proprietors; Walalce, Woods & Keats; Bank Street Bakery, Paul Herlinger & Company. Tin shop: K. B. Sauter, proprietor. Photography: T. N. Barnard's Studio. Lawyers: Walter A. Jones and J. C. Harkness: Henry S. Gregory; W. B. Heyburn; A. L. Dunn. Building contractors: Fuller & Warren. Cigars and tobacco: W. H. Leghorn & Brother. Sash and door factory: H. Wood. Painters: McFadden & Langrell. News stand. Tabor & Vinos. Harness shop: J. M. Carmelius. Justice of the peace: A. E. Angel. Doctors: U. T. Campbell, A. Boston. Engineers: W. Clayton Miller; George R. Trask. Grocers: White & Bender; Howes & King. Tailors: Pister & Wassenberg. Wholesale liquors: D. C. McKissick. Brewery: Carl Mallon. Street lighting: Wallace Manufacturing, Electric & Water Company. Newspapers: The Wallace Press; the Wallace Miner. Bottling Works: Staley & Zweifel. Harness and saddlery: J. M. Carmelius. There was also the American Loan Company. The saloons of Wallace at that period numbered twenty-seven. General merchandise was represented by Dobsen & Nottingham.

The Wallace Board of Trade, in March, 1902, completed all necessary details for the establishment of a publicity bureau, taking cognizance of the mines of this particular district. To prospectors and small property holders blank forms were forwarded, with a request that as full information as possible be furnished the bureau concerning mines, prospects and other holdings. Responses have been full and complete, and the enterprise is a commendable success. Free postal delivery is not yet a fact in Wallace, but should the increase in postoffice business for the succeeding two quarters equal the last two, free delivery will, undoubtedly be established. The census of 1900 gave Wallace a population of 2,265, and today it is claimed, on fairly substantial atuhority that there are within its limits 3,000 inhabitants.

The first serious loss by fire in Wallace occurred Sunday evening, July 27, 1890. This overwhelming disaster originated in the Central Hotel, on Sixth street. When the end came Wallace was, practically, in ashes. Ten minutes' service by the fire department resulted in exhausting the water supply, and the young city was at the mercy of the flames. Fanned by a stiff gale they spread up Sixth to Cedar street, leaped Cedar, and in a few minutes later the Hanley House and Club theater were ablaze. From this period the fate of the doomed town was assured. With the single exception of one building six blocks were destroyed, the one solitary edifice remaining in this section being the Pavilion, corner of Cedar and Fifth streets. Giant powder was brought into service to check advancing flames by blowing up buildings, but such efforts proved futile. So rapid was the work of destruction that absolutely nothing of immense stocks of goods was saved. One fatality resulted: An Italian, Centimio Denarco, was burned to death while in a drunken stupor in the New State saloon, on Sixth street. Within the boundaries of Fifth street the river on the east and north, and the hills to the south, every business house and residence was destroyed. The loss, as estimated by the Murray Sun, was $500,000, with insurance of only $43,750. The business houses and dwellings burned were:

Sixth street, south of depot—Doell Bros.' saloon, Denver Shorty's saloon, Central Hotel, tailor shop, Utley's Hall (I. O. O. F. building), bakery, millinery store, office of Grace & Horbress, Wallace Hotel, Hanley House, Tim Morcarity's barber shop, Al. McHorter's barber shop, Tabor & Vinas' fruit store, J. M. Carmelius' harness shop, O. K. Clothing store, Joseph & Carlson, Julius Kline's saloon, G. H. Leghorn's cigar store, aHthway building, Flaherty & Williamson's saloon, Rayner's saloon.

West side of Sixth street, south of depot—Carpenter shop, New State saloon, Bee Hive clothing store, Louis Kosminsky, tailor, residence, Sutherland & White, livery, Barnard's studio, Eli Rechott, jewelry, K. B. Sauter, tin shop, shoe store.

Cedar street, from Fifth street east, north side—Myer's butcher shop, Pennly Hotel, McDonald & Johnson, livery stable, J. B. Cameron's saloon, Jamison & Horton, saloon, William Kellem, restaurant, Steward Fuller's saloon, Palace restaurant, two dwellings and two other saloons.

Cedar, from Fifth street east, south side—Blacksmith shop, two residences, D. C. McKissick, wholesale liquors, Barger & Sears' butcher shop, vegetable store, Liverpool saloon, J. C. Boyer's barber shop, McKissick & Fitz's saloon, Club theater, three residences, Carrie Young's saloon.

Bank street, from Fifth east, north side—W. C. Human's residence, Wallace block (W. T. Stall's and W. C. Miller's offices), Portland Manufacturing Company's office, telephone exchange, McNab & Liver's drug store, Coeur d'Alene Clothing store, Mrs. Schofield's dry goods store, Bolander's restaurant, Langwell's residence, William Worstell's furniture store, ice house and new building.

Bank, from Fifth street east, south side—Scott Anderson, surveyor, Wallace Free Press office. Drs. Watkins & Sims' office, C. D. Porter's residence, Bank of Wallace, George & Human's block, including offices of Dr. Boston, W. A. Jones, Henry Ford and Henry L. Gregory, White & Bender, Howes & King, postoffice, Heller Hotel, Vedder & McElroy, R. M. Dryden's saloon, barber shop, Holley, Mason, Marks & Company, office of sampling works, D. C. Stetson, dry goods, clothing, etc., E. D. Carter's saw mill.

Hotel street, north side, from Sixth street, east—Coeur d'Alene Miner office, E. D. Carter's office, three vacant buildings.

South side—Carter Hotel, stables, F. M. Frank's office, laundry.

Several warehouses, supposed to have been fireproof, were, with the single exception of White & Bender's, destroyed, as were all the records of the postoffice, registered and ordinary mail, money orders, etc. Although Postmaster Dunn had removed this property to what he considered a place of safety, the flames insiduously crept toward that point and licked it up. In speaking of the generous proffers of aid the Murray Sun, of July 30, 1890, said:

"The towns of Mullan, Wardner and Osborn being on the line of railroad, and in easy communication with Wallace, sent car-loads of provisions early Monday morning. Offers of assistance were telegraphed from Spokane and other towns, but were declined with thanks, the surrounding towns being amply able to relieve the temporary necessities of the people. The disaster was an appalling one, but not enough to injure the town temporarily, as the work of rebuilding will be on a larger scale than before. Petitions have been presented to the board of trustees of Wallace, praying that only iron, stone and brick buildings may be erected in certain down town districts, and these petitions have been granted. Thus far the Coeur d'Alene Clothing Company is the only one that has failed, as a result of the fire."

Early in the morning of November 11, 1898, the Idaho Hotel, John B. Cameron's and Thomas Reynolds' saloon buildings, all two-story frame structures, were destroyed by fire, and the Fuller House badly damaged, involvnig a loss of $12,000, with insurance of only $500 on the Idaho Hotel's furniture. The latter property, owned by Glen McDonald, and leased by Johnson & Wilmot, contained forty-one rooms, all of which were occupied. In this disaster a rare quality of heroism was displayed by Gus Enz, the night clerk. Discovering the fire he ran up stairs and awakened the sleeping guests, all of whom, with the exception of John F. Moore, a waiter, and W. H. Dwyer, a cigarmaker, escaped. These two, and Enz, the faithful, courageous night clerk, were burned to death, the latter laying down his life to save others, and thus giving force to the words of the immortal stanza:

"Whether on the scaffold high,
Or in the battle's van,
The noblest place for man to die
Is where he dies for man."

Mrs. Alice Finnegan, chamber maid, George W. Mitchell and William Palmer were seriously burned. As in the case of the great fire of 1890, immediate steps were taken to repair the damage sustained in the disaster of 1898. In both events Idaho pluck and energy were in evidence, and scarcely were the ashes of the 1890 conflagration cold ere temporary buildings sprung up to be soon replaced by more substantial structures. The sentiment of the people of Wallace concerning the ramarkable progress in rebuilding the town is fittingly voiced by the editor of the Free Press in the issue of November 29, 1890:

Yesterday, four months ago, there were few men in Wallace who looked forward to such a cheerful and happy Thanksgiving as the one enjoyed on Thanksgiving last. On the twenty-eighth of July the town presented a scene of desolation. On Thursday last there was a rebuilt city, with substantial brick blocks and frame buildings from one end of the burnt area to the other, covering nine squares. In the face of limited transportation, lack of building materials and labor suitable for the work to be done, the recovery from a bed of ashes in so short a time borders on the magic. The transformation is complete. Wallace is today a more substantial city than before the fire; more solidly built and more thrifty. Much of this is due to the handsome brick buildings that have been erected, which stand as monuments of enterprise in our pretty mountain home.

Among the most prominent of these edifices are the Hardware Block, erected by Holley, Mason, Marks & Company, D. C. McKissick's wholesale liquor block, Colonel Steward Fuller's new hotel, the National Bank block, the Bank of Wallace block, L. Manheim's block, Howe & King's, O. C. Otterson's White & Bender's and Mrs. A. A. Schofield's blocks. These are all new brick blocks, modern and completely furnished. Their cost is not less than $100,000, which is very good testimony to the vitality of the business men of Wallace and their unshaken faith in the grand future of the town.

Following the terrible trial by fire of July 27, 1890, a new hose company was organized to replace the old fire department, which had been practically innocuous since that event. It was named Wallace Hose Company No. 1, and comprised a membership of twenty active men, with Adam Aulbauch as foreman. It came into being at a public meeting held November 2, 1890. Of the old department Scott McDonald had been chief. The new company comprised, aside from Foreman Aulbach, Scott McDonald, first assistant, A. P. Horton, second assistant, Julius Kline. Jacob Lockman, James Hennessy, John Frazer, pipemen; Peter Holohan, Jesse Tabor, hydrant men; George Heller, H. D. Sawyer, Ed Sarbin, Louis Kosminsky, Charles Woodman, O. C. Otterson, Al Honeke, Harry Germond, A. H. Utley, Augustus Sutherland and J. M. Carmelius, hosemen. The present organization is partly a volunteer department, of which Fred H. Kelly is chief and M. C. Murphy assistant. The excellent water system was established in 1890, water being led from Placer creek, the reservoir being on a high elevation south of the city, and affording a pressure of 450 pounds.

As early as 1889 a company was organized in Wallace for the purpose of exploring a system of light and water works. Some progress had been made in the enterprise, but the fire of 1890 consumed the rather rudimentary plant, and seriously embarrassed the new organization. The franchise and such property as remained were secured by E. D. Carter, who rebuilt the lines and began to develop the system. In 1897 the Wallace Light & Water Company bought the interest of Mr. Carter. This company comprised J. A. Finch, A. B. Campbell, F. White, Richard Wilson and F. F. Johnson. At present the company is officered as follows: F. F. Johnson, president; R. E. Strahorn, of Spokane, vice-president and manager; E. J. Dyer, secretary and treasurer, and D. C. McKissick, local superintendent. The capital stock is $125,000.

Quoting from the Murray Sun, of March 25, 1893: "The Providence Hospital at Wallace is an institution which has no equal of its kind in the state of Idaho, and no superior of its size in the United States." In May, 1891, a temporary Miners' Union hospital was located in the American House building on East Bank street. Its financial condition was excellent, each miner connected with the various mines, with the Bunker Hill & Sullivan, having agreed to pay into the hospital treasury monthly dues of one dollar each. But at that period plans for a more elaborate institution were being prepared. On June 6, 1891, a committee of the Miners' Union and a citizens' committee met with Sisters Joseph and Madelaine, of Montreal, in the parlor of the Carter House to consider the question of the proposed new hospital. The citizens' committee comprised Messrs. McKissick, Gibson and Aulbach. They were asked by representatives of the Miners' Union if there was any valid objection to a transference by the miners of the hospital scheme to the sisters. There being none, the plan was consummated, which provided that the Sisters expend the sum of $30,000 in the erection of a handsome, four-story brick building, with Mansard roof and a frontage of 100 feet, not including the verandas. It was provided that the depth of the building should be from forty to eighty feet, the basement to be of stone, ten feet high. It was estimated that the structure would require 250,000 brick. Ground was broken for the new institution July 9, 1891. Concerning this handsome structure the Murray Sun of March 25, 1893, said:

The origin of this hospital was with the miners' unions. It had become an imperative necessity. Sickness was prevalent, accidents numerous, and there was no place to take proper care of the unfortunates under their direction. The large membership of the unions justified the hospital, and in 1891 it was put under way. The generous offer of the people of Wallace was accepted, and the site located. This created serious opposition in Wardner, which town also wanted the hospital, and the friction between the factions led to the outbreak of the Coeur d'Alene strike in 1892. The miners, however, ignored the Wardner feud, and a temporary hospital was established in Wallace and arrangements made to erect a $10,000 building, this being the agreement made with the citizens of Wallace. The miners, through the conduct of the temporary hospital, for seven months, found that it was almost impossible for them to make a success of it. Several meetings of the executive committee were held and it was seriously proposed to give up the entire project and let each union take care of its own unfortunates. Then it was decided to enlist the aid of the sisters of mercy, and accordingly three sisters, including Sister Joseph, the present Lady Superior of the hospital, came to the Coeur d'Alenes on a tour of inspection and decided to accept the offer. The citizens committee of Wallace transferred the agreement to the sisters. At first only a temporary building was erected, a large, two-story frame structure. Finally, after numerous vexatious delays, work was commenced on the new brick building, pledged to cost $35,000, and this is now a reality. The citizens of Wallace have turned over a deed for the ground and water privileges.

The building is located on a block in the eastern portion of Wallace. It is substantially built of brick, with granite foundation It is practically four stories high, as the basement is lofty and as pleasant as any of the upper three stories. All the stories are hard finished and divided into large wards and single rooms, which are as cheerful as it is possible to make them. The hallways are broad and stair-ways of easy grade, and a hydraulic elevator is always in operation. Every modern convenience has been introduced, including hot air furnaces, dumb waiters, electric lights, etc. The capacity of the hospital is about 125 patients. The hospital was only put in complete running order last week, although occupied for nearly a year.

On Saturday, September 10, 1887, the first railroad to reach Wallace was completed to this point. It was a narrow gauge line, exploited by D. C. Corbin and associates, of New York City. At that time the Burke extension was contemplated, but right of way had not been secured. A depot, 24x80 feet, had been constructed, and regular trains were running to Wallace on September 19, 1889. This road was subsequently sold to the Northern Pacific company, washed out and abandoned in 1890.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company ran its initial train from Missoula to Wallace, in August, 1890. In 1900 a new round house, with a capacity sufficient to accommodate six engines, replaced an inferior structure. December 29, 1901, the company's officials first occupied the new depot, an elegant brick and concrete edifice, ornate and picturesque, located on Sixth street, on the north bank of the South Fork of the Coeur d'Alene river. The concrete, of which the greater portion of this building is constructed, is composed of "tailings" from ore concentrators, and cement. Its cost was between $8,000 and $10,000. A new addition to this building is contemplated.

On December 9, 1889, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company brought its first train in from Tekoa to Wallace, the terminus of the Tekoa division. At present, however, O. R. & N. business is carried as far east as Mullan, by special arrangement with the Northern Pacific Company. Both the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company and the Northern Pacific Company have standard gauge extensions up Canyon creek to Burke, a distance of seven miles. The new depot of the O. R. & N. was built in 1901. G. A. Newell, the present local agent at Wallace, has been with the company fourteen years, coming here June 11, 1889.

The banking history of Wallace is marked by conservatism and business sagacity fully equal to that of any other town in Idaho, and superior to many. Unsettled financial conditions in 1893-4, of course, reacted upon all the banking centers of the Coeur d'Alenes, but in Wallace, particularly, recovery was rapid and financial loss far below the average. On January 2, 1891, articles of incorporation of the Coeur d'Alene Bank, of Wallace, were filed in the office of the recorder of Shoshone county, by virtue of which the institution was authorized to transact a general banking business in the state of Idaho. The capital stock was $50,000; the directors John A. Finch, Amos B. Campbell, Patrick Clark, Charles M. Hall and Joseph K. Clark. In 1893 the bank appears to have passed into the hands of George B. McAulay and Van B. DeLashmitt, who owned, also, the Miners' Exchange, of Wardner. In April, 1893, the Bank of Coeur d'Alene asked for a receiver, attributing the cause af failure to bad debts, universal hard times and closing down of imporant mines. The liabilities were $70,679.73, of which $19,014.67 was due depositors, $18,561.25 to creditors holding certificates of deposit, and remainder to outside state banks, including $42,429.07, overdraft on Bank of Wardner. In the Bank of Coeur d'Alene Shoshone county had on deposit $18,435.22. This was secured by attaching the bank building in Wallace. Assets were, personal property, including notes, loans, discounts, etc., $72,729.20, and bank building at Wallace, $20,153.92.

In December, 1890, the Bank of Wallace had closed its doors, subsequent to a run which, for the time being, had been successfully withstood.

August 8, 1892, the First National Bank of Wallace was organized with a capital of $50,000. The officers were F. F. Johnson, president, Henry White, vice-president, Horace M. Davenport, cashier; Charles W. O'Neil, R. R. Neill, Richard Wilson, Albert Johnson, Henry White, C. E. Bender, and F. F. Johnson, directors. In 1903 M. J. Flohr succeeded Horace M. Davenport as cashier. The capital stock is $50,000; surplus fund, $10,000; undivided profits, $5,148 and circulation $42,700. President Johnson is treasurer of Shoshone county, president of the Wallace Light & Water Company and cashier of the Bank of North Idaho, at Murray.

The State Bank of Commerce, successor to the Bank of Commerce, which was organized in 1901, came into existence May 1, 1903. It is officered by Bennett F. O'Neil, president, Maurice H. Hare, cashier, Thomas L. Greenough, vice-president, and Charles Z. Seelig, assistant cashier. The directors are Thomas L. Greenough, Albert Burch, Ewen McIntosh, August Paulson, G. Scott Anderson, Maurice H. Hare and Bernard F. O'Neil.

Erection of the Masonic Temple, in 1896, was an event worthy of the originators of the project, and the result creditable to the city of Wallace. Shoshone Lodge, No. 25, A. F. & A. M., appointed a committee in May, of that year, to arrange for the building of a combination temple and opera house. The resultant organization was known as the "Masonic Building Association, Ltd." Estimated cost of the structure was $7,000, half of which amount was pledged by members of the association. For the remainder bonds of the denomination of $25, drawing six per cent interest, due in ten years, were issued. The committee in charge of building operations were, A. B. Campbell, chairman, F. F. Johnson, secretary, George Steward, E. H. Moffitt and L. W. Hutton. January 1, 1897, the Temple was dedicated with appropriate Masonic ceremonies by members of Shoshone Lodge and chapter, O. E. S., and several officers of the grand lodge of the state of Idaho. Spokane talent, mainly, was employed in the construction of this imposing edifice. The building was erected by Huber & Huelter; plastering by John Coleman; the heating apparatus was provided by the Griffiths Heating Company; the painting and interior decorations were the work of John McFarlane; the scenery was painted by Herman Ludcke, while the stage mechanism was under direction of F. Thompson. Electrical appliances were provided by E. C. Morrow, of Wallace; Prusse & Zittel, of Spokane, were the architects. Total cost of the building was $20,000. The seating capacity of the opera house is 660; the stage is 58x28x45 feet in size, there are seven exits, toilet rooms, galleries and dressing rooms. The electrical plant consists of fourteen circuits, 350 ten and sixteen candle power. The second floor is divided into a lodge room, banquet hall, paraphernalia rooms and kitchen. Nearly all the fraternal societies of the city convene here, and, at present, the hall is utilized as a court room.

During the year 1892 a county seat contest was sprung, ostensibly between Murray, Osburn and Wallace, but in reality between Murray, the county seat, and Osburn. Wallace threw the weight of its influence and votes in favor of Murray, and the contest proved unavailing. But in 1898, at the expiration of the six-year limit, provided by law, to intervene between county seat imbroglios, the people of Wallace joined in a petition asking for removal of the capital of Shoshone from Murray to Wallace. Practically there was no contest. Sentiment was universal that the county seat should be located on the South Fork of the Coeur d'Alene river. Consequently Wallace was the only real contestant. Of 3,335 votes cast, Murray received 864; Wallace, 2,471.

In December, 1902, the Wallace Public Library, near the corner of Sixth and Bank streets, was opened with pleasing social demonstrations. To the efforts of Rev. J. B. Orr, pastor of the Congregational church, the foundation and success of this institution are due, and he, at present donates his services as librarian. At its inception he paid the first month's rent, $30. On going to a coal dealer he was informed that the dealers in the city would undertake to heat the building gratuitously. Thus it was with the electric light company, and Mayor Connor's suggestion that Mr. Orr apply for aid in paying the rent met with a cheerful response from the city council. Contributions of books flowed in, Mr. Orr taking the initiative with a liberal donation of volumes, and he was followed by the Episcopalians, who placed a generous addition in the city library. A free traveling library is sent out from the parent institution. No fees are charged for the use of books. Two committees are assisting in this commendable work, the male members being representatives of fraternal societies in the city, viz.: George Warren, Masons; Otto Freeman, Odd Fellows; William Wourms, Woodmen of the World; Al. Crawford, Knights of Pythias; J. R. Sovereign, Eagles; William Stoehl, Socialists; Robert A. Marshall, Order of Washington; William Adamie, Shoshone Club. The ladies' committee comprise Mrs. W. W. Wood, chairman; Mrs. A. R. Carpenter, treasurer; Miss Carrie Sovereign, Mrs. Harry Wood, Mrs. R. E. Seysler, Miss C. M. Hathaway, Miss Mamie Turner, Miss Agnes Sutherland. The library contains over 1,000 volumes, and the patronage of Wallace and surrounding country is increasing.

In August, 1891, Company A, Idaho National Guards, a Wallace organization, was mustered into service by Captain Langdon, of Company C, Moscow. The company comprised forty-three members, officered as follows: Captain, Thomas A. Linn; first lieutenant, Robert Short; second lieutenant, E. G. Arment; orderly sergeant, A. D. Short; second sergeant, William Hood; third sergeant, A. G. Larsen; fourth sergeant, A. H. Utley; fifth sergeant, Fred S. Bubb; first corporal, Robert Duncan; second corporal, Hugh Ross; third corporal, Jacob Lockman; fourth corporal, John Van Dorn. Musicians, William Fitzpatrick, W. B. McCrary.

In response to a call of the citizens, signed P. F. Smith, chairman, a meeting was held at Masonic Temple, July 1, 1902, at which was organized he Wallace Board of Trade. The following officers were chosen, who, with the membership, comprise the only board of trade in the Coeur d'Alenes: P. F. Smith, president; O. D. Jones, first vice-president; T. D. Connor, second vice-president; Herman J. Rossi, secreary; L. L. Sweet, treasurer; executive committee—T. D. Connor, W. W. Hart, L. L. Odell, J. R. Sovereign, J. A. Allen, H. E. Howes, M. M. Taylor, M. J. Flohr, Theo. Jamison, H. J. Read, O. D. Jones, Harry White, George S. Warren, Jacob Lockman, W. A. Jones. The board has a membership of ninety, meeting the first Tuesday in each month at the city hall. Harold J. Reach, chairman, P. F. Smith and Herman J. Rossi comprise a special committee on mining. Among future exploitations contemplated by the board are a street railway for Wallace, and electric lines from Wardner to both Burke and Mullan, requiring forty miles of rails, together with a wagon road, twenty-three miles in length, to tap the St. Joe timber belt, extending up Placer creek, over the divide, directly south of Wallace. The highest grade, near Summit, is ten per cent. In this vicinity several claim owners are now engaged in logging. The board has already constructed six miles of this road at an expense of $3,000. Annual dues of members are $10.

The primary church organization in Wallace is the Episcopalian, the South Methodists coming next, who in turn, were followed by the Methodist Episcopalians. Subsequently the Baptists purchased the building of the South Methodists.

The Congregational church, of which Rev. J. B. Orr is pastor, is a thriving organization of five years' growth. Previous to 1898 Rev. Jonathan Edwards, at that time of Wardner, came occasionally to Wallace and preached to the Congregationalists, as did, also, Rev. Samuel Green, state Sunday school superintendent of Washington. At present the Congregationalists, are holding services in Masonic Temple and other halls, but in August they will occupy a new church building, now in process of erection, corner of Fourth and Cedar streets, costing $3,500, exclusive of the lots. One lot is reserved, adjoining the new church, on which will be erected a gymnasium and bath rooms. The Congregational Sunday school numbers seventy-five pupils. On alternate Sundays Rev. Orr preaches at Kellogg.

Organization of the Methodist Episcopal church dates from September, 1894, when Rev. J. W. Craig, appointed to Wardner, Wallace, and at intervals, to Murray, Kingston, Gem and Burk, held services in this city. Rev. Craig, also, organized the local Epworth League. Rev. W. H. Selkirk came in 1895, succeeding Rev. Craig, from Pendleton, Oregon. He was appointed by Bishop Bowman, the annual conference sitting at Spokane. Rev. Selkirk was returned the second year, and was succeeded by Rev. R. W. Moore, Jr., and in turn was succeeded by Rev. M. R. Brown, in 1899. The latter remained in the Wallace field until 1902, when Rev. H. M. Hobbs, appointed by Bishop Earl Cranston, arrived in Wallace, September 14, and is the present pastor of the M. E. congregation. The organization has a pretty and commodious church building on the corner of Fourth and Pine streets, one block north from the new Congregational building.

The Catholic church of Wallace, now in charge of Father Becker, assisted by Father Beusman, was dedicated by Bishop Glorieux, Sunday, October 20, 1896. This was the second church organization in the county, of that denomination. The present church edifice, corner of Pine and Second streets, was built under direction of Father Keyzer, who was the first clergyman in charge. Father Becker, present incumbent, came to Wallace, May 11, 1897. The labors of Fathers Becker and Beusman are not confined to Wallace. They visit the outlying missions of Wardner, Mullan and Burke. The church organization of Wallace comprises fifty families.

The Baptist denomination has a regularly organized church in Wallace, holding services in what was once the Methodist Episcopal church, on Bank street. In 1896 it was in charge of Rev. Lewis Smith, of Spokane, assisted by Rev. A. M. Allyn, at that period district missionary for Washington and northern Idaho.

Rev. George E. Graves, rector of Trinity Episcopalian church, Wallace, assumed charge of this pastorate in May, 1902. This church is the primary organization of the city, having been established in 1890. The predecessor of Rev. Groves was Rev. Freeman Daughters, who was stationed at this point four years. Rev. Groves holds services also in Wardner, Mullan and Burke. The church edifice, corner of Cedar and Fourth street, as well as others throughout the county, were built under direction of Bishop Talbot.

In March, 1901, a new brewery, and the only one at present in Wallace, was thrown open to the public. The three principals buildings were erected in 1900, solid, substantial brick structures, located east of the Carter House, at the termination of the O. R. & N. Company's warehouse tracks. The office is a single-story brick building, 27×62 feet in size. The brewery, a twin building, has a frontage of fifty-six and a depth of eighty-six feet, and is four stories high. It has an annual capacity of 80,000 pounds of malt, rice and hops and, with the adjoining bottling plant, cost $50,000. It is the property of the Sunset Brewing Company (Incorporated), and under control of the following board: David Holzmann, president, Jacob Lockman, secretary, treasurer and manager, J. Henry Beckman, Freida Lockman and Joseph A. Rubens.

WARDNER.

Since 1892 the prominent mining town of Wardner, one mile south of Kellogg, has been a point of historical interest, and a remarkable feature in the "Winning of the West." The wealth of its surrounding mineral district, its picturesque location in the lower levels of a deep canyon, known as Milo Gulch, the sensational scenes incidental to industrial troubles in the past, have combined to lift Wardner from the realms of the commonplace to a position of national significance.

The second largest town in the Coeur d'Alene district Wardner ranks next to Wallace. It controls a lucrative trade from Government Gulch, and mines on Pine creek and Grouse Gulch, and is a distributing center for many surrounding mines. Aside from the business prosperity of Wardner, influenced greatly by the Bunker Hill & Sullivan and Empire State mines, the town owes much to adjacent locations of the Wyoming, Black Hawk, O. K., Stewart and other great properties in that vicinity. The census of 1900 accorded Wardner a population of 2,000, but conservative citizens say that the town, at present, contains fully 2,500 inhabitants.

In 1889 the governor of Idaho, in his report to the department at Washington, D. C., said:

"Wardner, in Milo Gulch, about two miles from the South Fork, is the business heart of the great group of working mines which have gradually opened in that district since the first discovery of the famous Bunker Hill & Sullivan. The population is 800. It has schools, societies, fire department and an excellent weekly mining journal and newspaper, the Wardner News. Its population will largely and quickly increase with the advent of railroads."

But the Wardner of 1903 is the "Kentuck" of 1885.

October 10, 1885, a meeting was held in the cabin of "Dutch Jake," on Milo creek, for the expressed purpose of laying out a townsite and naming the same. James Kelly served as chairman and Robert T. Horn as secretary. There were also present, Philip O'Rouke, "Dutch Jake" (Jacob Goetz), Jack Fitzgerald, Thomas Hanley, L. F. Robinson and Thomas Irwin. At this meeting the name of Yreka was bestowed upon the district, and "Kentuck," or Kentucky, upon the town, the latter in honor of the owners of the famous Golden Chest mine, at Murray, who were Kentuckians.

Near the Last Chance mine James Kelly built the first cabin in the place, November 1, 1885. A second and third cabin were run up by "Dutch Jake," and Mr. Horn, respectively, and the first store building, a cabin roofed with canvas, was built hastily by Thomas Irwin and Tony Tubbs. During the succeeding holidays a small stock of general merchandise was exposed for sale by them. "Kentuck" grew rapidly. January 1, 1886, it could boast of one hundred inhabitnats; by March the number was increased to 300, and by July 4, one thousand people, all residents, could have assisted in celebrating the day. During the Thanksgiving holidays of 1886 Abe Goldstein opened a hotel and lodging house, Paul Herlinger was proprietor of the original bakery, and Tom Henly of the first saloon. Thereafter other business men arrived rapidly.

A mass meeting of the citizens of Kentucky was held Sunday afternoon, April 4, 1886, for the purpose of consultation and heart to heart talks concerning the necessity of changing the name of the town. This move was rendered compulsory by the postal authorities at Washington, D. C., who declined to establish an office there named Kentucky. At the meeting the names "Irwin," "Bunker Hill" and "Wardner" were proposed, each finding enthusiastic sponsers, and following a free discussion of the respective merits of each, it was unanimously agreed that the town should be known in the future by the name of "Wardner," in honor of James Wardner, a widely known and popular citizen who did much toward advancing the prosperity of the young but ambitious town.

In March, 1886, the editor of the Spokane Review printed in his paper the following impressions of the new location:

> Some three-quarters of a mile up the gulch (from Milo) we reached Kentucky, or, as it is more familiarly known among the denizens, "Kentuck." It was the earliest camp in the mountains at the time of our visit, but on every hand men were at work putting up houses, and under the pushing influence of two mines its growth promises to be phenomenal. The nature of the ground would hardly hold out inducements for its selection as a town site, but the presence of mineral would build a town anywhere. The gulch is narrow, broken and covered with fragments of broken rock and a labyrinth of fallen timber. * * * * There are a few log cabins covered with shakes, but most of the dwellings are tents, or log walls with tent roofs. Tom Irwin, whose name has been closely associated with the Coeur d'Alenes, keeps the only eating house, and is assisted by Tony Tubbs, the once land prince of Coeur d'Alene City. While Irwin's eating house was the only one in Kentucky at the time of our visit, others were in course of construction, and the town is full of them by this time. The lodging house consisted of a double tent, with a bar in front. The night we stayed there every bed and every floor was covered by lodgers.

Such is a fairly accurate and unbiased account of the municipal status of Wardner in the earlier days of its history. In May, 1886, one hundred and seventy-five buildings had been erected, a "Main" street established and, in the language of the Murray Sun, "the town was booming right along." Between Wardner and the Mission a telephone line was established by C. B. Hopkins, and the Wardner News had issued its first number. Thursday, June 24, 1886, was a red letter day, for it was the date of the successful trial of the Bunker Hill concentrator, and this event was the occasion of universal rejoicing and celebration. The Bank of Wardner opened its doors for business in November, 1886. The officers were N. S. Kellogg, president; J. F. Wardner, vice president; H.M.Davenport, secretary and cashier. The directors were A. M. Mason, N. S. Kellogg, J. F. Wardner, E. C. Gove, H. M. Davenport and C. T. Crane. On November 11, the same year, Wardner polled 462 votes, three less than the town of Murray, and about this time was completed the Wardner water works system. December 25, 1886, a postoffice was established and A. B. Goldstein appointed postmaster.

March 23, 1887, the Murray Sun claimed Wardner's population 1,500. Undoubtedly this estimate included many residents of the gulch whose habitations were outside the limits of the original townsite. Yet even on this basis it will be seen that the anticipations of the pioneers of Wardner were not too sanguine. Lumber was purchased as quickly as it was available at the mills; limits of the business portion of the town embraced five blocks, while between Wardner and Milo, a distance of one mile, cabins lined the roadway. Town lots that a year previous had sold at from $100 to $200, were held at $800 up to $3,000 apiece. Yet it was at this period generally acknowledged that the inflation of prices was due, largely, to a sudden influx of enterprising and ambitious visitors, and encouraging appearance of the adjacent mines. In 1887 the growth of Wardner was, as claimed by the editor of the Murray Sun, "ahead of development of mineral resources."

Aleck Monk and Scott McDonald, in May, 1887, entered into a contract with the town authorities to replace the original water works with a complete new system. The contract was given to J. R. Monk & Co., of Murray, the estimated cost of which was $10,000. The new system was named "Silver Creek Water Works." Of six and five inch mains 2,300 feet were laid, leading from a supply tank of 50,000 gallons capacity. There were five hydrants; the highest pressure attained being 250 feet.

January 4, 1890, the most disastrous conflagration that had, at that date, occurred in the Coeur d'Alenes, broke out in Wardner. During a fateful period of four hours the fire raged furiously, and within that time a number of the best business houses and several residences were destroyed. The alarm met with immediate response from hundreds of people, including the fire department, but with the deepest chagrin it was discovered that no water was available. And then the panic-stricken populace began fighting the flames with snow, which was thrown upon the burning structures. In a laundry, at the rear of the Mint restaurant, the fire originated, and it is claimed that, had there been a water supply the flames could have been checked at this point. Retarded somewhat in their course by the small avalanches of snow heaped upon them, the fire slowly but surely ate its way along the lines of business houses, destroying the telephone office, the Moore block, and, extending up the street, attacked the main business district of the town. Giant powder was resorted to for the purpose of blowing up the Grand Hotel and buildings lower down the street, but this plan failed of the desired effect, and not until the store of Samuel A. Fischer was destroyed was the progress of the fire checked.

It is a pleasing commentary on the intelligence and good sense of the residents of Wardner that during this trial by fire the best of order was maintained throughout the city. Following is a list of the buildings destroyed, with approximate losses:

Smith Sisters, building, $1,200; Higby & Boyer, building and stock, $8,000, insurance, $3,000; C. W. Weber & Co., building and stock, $2,000; Holley, Mason, Marks & Co., building and stock, $16,000, insurance, $8,500; Moore block, four buildings, $7,000; Al Page, stock and fixtures, $2,500; Norman's telephone office and fixtures $350; Mrs. Snyder, building, $300; Mrs. Smith, laundry, $150; J. A. Mayer, Grand Central Hotel, three-story building and furniture, $10,000; William Bolger, club rooms, $1,200; Charles King, restaurant fixtures, $150; D. L. Harley, cigar store, $700; Costello & Sullivan, restaurant, $225; J. A. Currie, two buildings, $2,000; Comer & Parker, building, $2,000; James Colligan, saloon fixtures, $200; William Williams, building, $1,000; Joseph Stehle, beer hall, $600; B. Flaig, jewelry, $250; Follett & Harris, two buildings, $1,500; G. M. Spenar, barber shop, $500; C. T. Anderson, tailor, $150; Edward Bolger, sample room, $250; White House building, $7,000.

The buildings partially destroyed were Jacob Abraham's, loss $500; H. Pressy's, $500; and E. Rupert's, postoffice fixtures, stock, etc., $500.

Among the more enterprising citizens of Wardner an enthusiasm prevailed for more advanced municipal features, and on Monday, April 13, 1891, the commissioners of Shoshone county granted a petition, signed by a majority of tax-paying citizens, asking for incorporation. For the first year Alexander Monks, A. E. Carlson, Charles Sweeny, Al Page and H. Drought were named as trustees.

Agitation in behalf of a street railway was begun in November, 1898, but is was without tangible result. The Wardner-Kellogg Electric Railway Company filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state, the amount of capital stock being placed at $500,000. The board of directors comprised Bartlett Pressley, and Margaret Pressley, of Kellogg, Lawrence O'Neil, of Murray, B. Flaig, of Wardner, and William Woods, of Wallace. It was the announced purpose of this company to construct an electric system from Kellogg, on the South Fork of the Coeur d'Alene river, through Wardner to the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mines, and also from Kellogg to Government Gulch. Owing to insurmountable difficulty in securing a right of way the project was abandoned.

On New Year's Day, 1901, responsible citizens claimed for Wardner a population of 2,000. Throughout the year previous the town had forged ahead wonderfully; local merchants enjoyed an excellent business; many new buildings were erected and an atmosphere of prosperity prevailed throughout the Yreka mining district. Although a postoffice had been established at Government Gulch, handling a portion of the business that was formerly controlled by Wardner, the amount of mail received and dispatched increased twenty per cent. For the year 1900 the estimated output of the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mine, from figures compiled by the Coeur d' Alene Mining Journal, was 29,717.66 tons of concentrates and crude ore, containing 30,000,000 pounds of lead and 606,000 ounces of silver, valued at $1,750,000. It is only in the contemplation of such figures that one can appreciate Wardner's phenomenal development.

Officers of the present city government of Wardner are as follows: Dr. Hugh France, mayor; W. H. North, city clerk; W. J. Baker, city treasurer; Fred Decker, chief of police. The councilmen from the three wards in the city are: Al Page, Dr. E. W. Peebles, R. C. Parry, J. H. Collins and Edward Bolger. In the two precincts of the city are four justices of the peace, viz.: First precinct, R. S. Kelly, Henry A. Jones; second precinct, John A. Parsons, Charles H. Wentz. Fred Decker serves as constable in the first and J. A. R. Campbell in the second precinct.

An excellent water system has been provided for Wardner, owned by Alex Monk, at present a resident of Ireland. The system is under the local management of Edward Bolger.

The pioneer church edifice in Wardner is St. Peter's Episcopal church, located below what is known as the "old town." It was dedicated Saturday evening, November 29, 1895, by Bishop Talbot, assisted by Rev. P. Murphy, rector of St. Mark's church, of Moscow, and Rev. A. J. Holworthy, of Trinity church, Wallace. At present there are four church organizations, the Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Episcopalian and Catholic, and an Epworth League society. Rev. D. W. Raines is the resident pastor of the M. E. church; Rev. George E. Groves, rector of Trinity church, Rev. J. B. Orr, pastor of the Congregational church, and Father Becker, of the Catholic church, all of Wallace, hold service at Wardner on alternate Sundays.

The fraternal societies in Wardner are represented by the Wodmen of the World; Eagles, Aerie No. 170; Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Improved Order of Red Men and Wardner Industrial Union.

PIERCE CITY.

To Pierce City belongs the distinction of being the oldest placer mining camp in Idaho. Few places in the northwest possess such an interesting and remarkable history. In this section of the west there are only half a dozen of these historic towns, and around their misty past have been woven many a romance, not infrequently containing more solid truth than fanciful imagination, dealing with the golden days of old, when Dame Fortune was in a most capricious mood. Wonderful tales they are, of fabulous fortunes, the exploits of hundreds of desperadoes who ruled the region, the free and strenuous life led by these dauntless gold seekers. One cannot enter the precincts of these old camps, having read and heard of their history, without being somewhat awed by the scenes before him, and when he considers that thousands, perhaps tens of thousands of pioneers have trod the ground on which he walks, and that millions of gold have been washed from the soil beneath his feet is it strange that his emotions should be stirred?

From the crest of the hill overlooking Pierce City from the southwest one can view the little valley beneath through which courses Orofino creek. This is the famous stream that drew to its shores the pioneer miners of Idaho. Half a mile down the creek stands the cluster of buildings forming the town of Pierce City. From all sides of the town, except where a narrow meadow lies along the banks of the creek, pine-clad hills and mountains rise and fall gracefully back against the horizon. Here and there can be seen enormous piles of "tailings," debris of fallen timber in a gulch whose sides have been eaten away by the energetic toil of the ambitious miner of days gone by, showing where a portion of the millions yielded by this district have been secured. A well constructed bridge crosses the Orofino, the road passing along the bottom lands, and into town. As is usual in small towns located in this section, there is but one street in Pierce City, on each side of which are a majority of the buildings in the place. Several new, commodious buildings, mostly for business purposes, indicate that Pierce City is growing, and large stocks of goods testify that it enjoys a commercial importance. And yet, on all sides are to be seen many of the picturesque cabins of pioneers, combining to accentuate the fact that this is a historical town. On the eastern side stands the old court house, a substantial, two-story log building, erected in 1862, and which at one time served as the county's official building until 1884. It cost between $3,500 and $4,000; such was the low value placed upon town property after removal of the county seat, in the later year, that this "court house" was sold for less than $50 to Edward Hammond. Financially Mr. Hammond did well by holding the property until the arrival of more prosperous times. The altitude of Pierce City is a little over 3,000 feet; its normal population between 150 and 200.

The town has four large general stores, owned respectively by T. B. Reed & Co., Samson Snyder, W. H. Dahl and A. M. Roberts; a grocery presided over by Duck Lee, a Chinaman; a Chinese store, owned by Lune Wah; two excellent hotels, the Pioneer, conducted by John Lane, and the City Hotel, A. S. Warren, proprietor; a well stocked drug store, the property of C. Smith; a meat market, belonging to Saling & King; two blacksmith shops, conducted by J. Barney Richardson and I. D. Cleek; three livery and feed barns, controlled by Col. John Lane, A. S. Warren and William Curry; two lodging houses, kept by William Dahl and Samson Snyder; a barber shop, the property of E. B. McElwain; a postoffice and express office, under the care of A. M. Roberts; a saw mill of 5,000 feet capacity, operated by the American Placer Mining Company, on Canal Gulch, and three saloons. Besides these business institutions we must not overlook the Pierce City Miner, a newsy little paper published weekly by the Miner Publishing Company. D. M. Nulty edits the journal and manages the property, which is creditable to the camp and an excellent exponent of this section's advantages and resources. All of these concerns are doing a gratifying business and sanguinely looking forward to more prosperous periods than ever before experienced in the later history of the camp. In 1896 was erected a comfortable school house, at a cost of $500, in which nine months' school is maintained. Mrs. Fred Roos is the present instructor. This building, standing on the hillside, occupies the site of the old fort built at the time of the Indian war of 1877. As yet there are no church societies in the town, but the generous, whole-souled hospitality and social qualities of the inhabitants indicate a congenial, satisfied and well-purposed community. And in this Pierce City is but typical of all mining towns of Shoshone county.

With the outside world Pierce City is connected with telephone, and also by a passenger and mail stage making six trips a week between Greer and the former place, a distance of twenty-nine miles. The telephone system is a private line installed last year. There is a wagon road between Orofino and Pierce City, a much travelled summer route, though not so popular as the Greer-Weippe road. Four years ago Pierce City suffered a severe loss by fire, flames breaking out in the store of Lee Duck, a Chinese merchant. This resulted in the destruction of Lee Duck's emporium, Charles Smith's saloon, Jim Fee's store and two vacant residences, all on the east side of Main street. Fortunately there was considerable snow on the ground, and by keeping William Davis' saloon building wet with snow and water, progress of the fire was stayed and the town saved. The log buildings destroyed were soon replaced by frame structures, and the fire history of more ambitious towns was repeated in Pierce City. None of the losses was covered by insurance. In March, 1903, the store of A. M. Roberts caught fire and a more serious loss than that of 1899 was narrowly averted. As early as 1865 a fire company was organized, consisting of between thirty and forty men, equipped with buckets, hooks and ladders, but this primevial department has long since passed away, remembered only by the earliest pioneers. Another company on more modern lines will, probably, be put in the field at an early date.

Until 1894 not sufficient was thought of the townsite of Pierce City to warrant any one in claiming possession of it. But that year Francis Carle and Augustus Erickson filed mining claims upon the land, and subsequently Frank Gaffney entered a portion as a mining claim. In December, 1901, these claims were platted in a townsite, and in July, 1902, the land was patented and deeds given the claim owners. Of these sixty acres only a few acres have been laid out, although all of the land is suitable for building purposes. The three principal streets are Main, Carl and Court, the first named being seventy-eight feet wide.

With an enormous mineral body, carrying ores and placer gold of all degrees of richness, thousands of acres of the finest white pine, red and white fir, cedar an dtamarack in the west surrounding the town, a splendid site and energetic, progressive business men, Pierce City has before it a most promising future, and great developments may be confidently expected within the succeeding few years.

OROFINO.

In opening this sketch of Orofino an explanation is due relative to the inconsistency in the spelling of its name. The two Spanish words, Oro Fino, mean "fine gold," and are correctly used as two separate words. A recent order of the United States postal department refuses to allow the use of double names for postoffices. Hence the people of Orofino were compelled to change the name of their own town or else conform to the decision of the department. They chose the latter alternative.

It is the largest town in southern Shoshone county, situated at the mouth of Oro Fino creek, on the Clearwater Short Line railroad, four miles from the north fork, and forty-four miles from Lewiston. The name, alone, attracts attention, for it was from the auriferous gravel of Oro Fino creek that the first gold was taken that set aflame with excitement the country, synchronous with the attack on Fort Sumter. Fitting it is that this euphonious Spanish name should be signalized by the building of a city and the naming of the angry torrent. To this end nature has contributed by creating a beautiful site at the mouth of Oro Fino canyon, which widens into a pretty, park-like cove, extending inland for, perhaps, a mile. Toward the Clearwater gently slopes the broad meadow, and the creek and open parks, and alternating clusters of yellow pines and budding copses, in garbs of emerald hue; grass-clad slopes of the canyon, upon whose summits may be seen the outer edges of the great Clearwater forest; the rushing, tumbling waters of the creek; the majestic sweep of the larger stream, all add to the picturesqueness of the town. Especially is this true in the springtime when the sharp contrast between the Clearwater valley and the high, open prairies on either side is marked. The valley has the superior winter, the prairies the superior summer climate.

At the head of this attractive cove, then, the town of Orofino has grown and prospered; has become the most important point in the surrounding region. At one time it possessed the dignity of a county-seat; a short-lived honor, as the county of which it became the temporary capital was declared an illegitimate creation and was dissolved. Previous to the advent of white man, in 1895, Hale Moody, a wealthy Indian, was the most prominent resident in the valley. Before the opening of the reservation he lived for many years on Oro Fino creek. When the reservation was finally thrown open to the whites Hale Moody sold his stock,

"Folded his tent like the Arabs,
And silently stole away."

Whence he came and whither he went no one appears to know. He was not a Nez Perce Indian; he had come from some portion of Montana. And the old "Hale Moody" place is now the property of Benjamin Hines, whose wife is a Nez Perce woman. This tract embraces about one hundred and forty acres of the best land in the valley and, together with an allotment belonging to an Indian woman named Kalas-poo, or Nancy, as she is known by the whites, includes the major portion of the bottom land, leaving only a comparatively small tract of deeded land for town-site purposes. The Hines place, being inherited Indian land, the citizens of Orofino are arranging to purchase a portion, if not all, of it that the limits of the town may be extended. The tract is an unusually fine site, the ground lying practically level to the water's edge. Across the Clearwater a precipitous bluff rises several hundred feet from the river, precluding a settlement in that vicinity.

The strip of land along the Oro Fino and Clearwater, still unallotted when the reservation was opened on November 18, 1895, was homesteaded by Clifford C. Fuller, on November 19, and it is on this ground that the town has been built. Mr. Fuller commuted his filing in February, 1896, and in 1898 the Clearwater Improvement Company was organized with Mr. Fuller at its head for the purpose of laying out a town-site at the mouth of the creek, building a ferry and otherwise fostering a settlement at this point. The extreme northwestern forty of the claim, lying in section 7, township 36, north range 2, east of the Boise meridian, was platted in June, 1898. During the summer a ferry was built which was placed in charge of William M. Chandler, and a rough wagon road was constructed to the top of the western side of the canyon. On his homestead Mr. Fuller had established a small trading post, a few rods from the bank of the river, above the creek. His successor, Dr. C. S. Moody, removed the goods to a building near the depot site, and there, assisted by his father, conducted a drug and general merchandise store. The story of the establishment of Orofino depends upon the building of the steamer Hannaford in the spring of 1898 by the Idaho & Washington Transportation Company. It was proposed by this organization to run a steamer line between the mouth of Potlatch creek and some point on the upper Clearwater, connecting that section with the railroad. In order to control this trade Orofino was founded. But before the Hannaford was completed the Northern Pacific Railway Company purchased the boat and began construction of the greatly desired railroad up the Clearwater. The Hannaford made four trips and was then taken to the Snake river.

To the little hamlet the railroad proved a boon. Orofino was made division headquarters during the entire period. There were one thousand men on the payroll; payment of so much money could not fail to attract merchants to the town. First of these, after the Moodys, was John G. Buescher. He opened his stock of goods October 1, 1898, in a little building near Moody's store. Ben Rowland had built a little cabin for residence purposes, and these three buildings, together with C. C. Fuller's home, a warehouse, the ferry and the postoffice, which had been removed from Gilbert, at the mouth of the north fork, to Orofino May 1, 1897, and Mrs. Lois J. Anderson appointed postmistress, constituted the town until the spring of 1899. During the following spring and summer stores were established by Langdon & Downing, Morrill & Woods, Means & McKee, Carlson Brothers, Horace Noble, William A. Curry, Jacob Moritz, R. F. Woelk and Anderson & Company, most of whom are still engaged in business in the town. The same spring another important project was exploited, the Orofino Courier, the initial number being issued May 19, 1899. Its publishers were Horace E. and James R. Greer. From that time on the outside world was advised of the existence of Orofino. The pioneer hotel was the Buckhorn, near the Courier office, on the bank of the Clearwater, E. R. Reed proprietor. It was abandoned in 1900. Another hotel was opened in July, 1899, the Noble House; proprietor, Horace Noble. At present it is owned by Mark Means. To Orofino the railroad was completed September 22, 1899, and a station opened in November, the site being on a twenty-four-acre tract of condemned Indian land. The spring of 1899 witnessed the submergence of the streets of Orofino by the waters of the Clearwater and the creek.

Never since has Orofino been as populous as it was in 1899. This is owing to the immense number of railroad men there at that period, but its permanent population steadily increased from the time of its establishment, and is still increasing. A census of the town, taken in 1901, revealed 375 people, and this number has since been perceptibly augmented. In 1902 the commissioners of Shoshone county appropriated $1,000 and the citizens of Orofino $1,500 to build a road between Pierce City and Orofino. The road was built and will be materially improved during the coming year. Money has also been expended improving the grade up the canyon on the opposite side of the Clearwater.

The business interests of the town are looked after particularly by the Orofino Commercial Club, organized in the spring of 1900. The first officers were: P. H. Blake, president; E. H. Fuller, secretary; J. W. Merrill, treasurer. This creditable association is at present officered and managed by James A. Parker, president; Dr. H. M. Cochran, secretary, and J. W. Merrill, treasurer. Monthly meetings are held by the club.

Realizing that Orofino could not expand on Indian land, Ellis Small and J. G. Wright platted Small & Wright's addition in 1899. At present there are probably one hundred people living in this portion of Orofino. The two sections of the town are separated by a strip of Indian land half a mile wide, but the walk is a delightful one, over a new sidewalk recently laid between the two divisions. There are no business houses in the new addition, though a saw mill is operated there by Hunsperger & Boehl.

The first school in Orofino convened in a small frame building on the present depot grounds in the spring of 1898. The teacher was Mrs. Charles Moody and the succeeding term was taught by Miss Anna Tierney. Last fall a new schoolhouse, a handsome frame structure, was opened in the main town. To pay for this building the district issued bonds in the sum of $1,850. The school is now under the supervision of Professor I. F. Couch and Miss Jessie Haevernick. The enrollment is 113, of whom fifty-seven are boys. The Methodist church is on the hill above the main portion of the town. Rev. T. C. Craig is pastor and this is the only church denomination represented. There are three fraternal societies—Orofino Lodge, No. 31, Knights of Pythias; Orofino Lodge, No. 64, I. O. O. F., and Orofino Camp, No. 7810, Modern Woodmen of America. On the hill above town are a number of fine springs, and a company is now being formed for the purpose of putting in a complete water system. The Cascade Lumber, Light and Power Company was recently organized with a capital of $300,000. It has purchased a tract of land lying below the falls on Oro Fino creek, four miles east of the city, and here will be established a large saw mill and power plant. The main thoroughfare of Orofino is Jackson street, a broad avenue along the entire length of the town, and here are located a majority of the business houses. On every hand may be seen well built homes, and the people within them possess those qualities of generosity, hospitality and progressiveness characteristic of the new West.

The business houses and professional men of Orofino may be listed as follows: General mercantile stores—J. G. Buescher, J. W. Merrill, Oro Fino Trading Company, Ltd.; Mark Means, Oro Fino Mercantile Company, Ltd.; Jacob Moritz. Private banks—Mark Means. Oro Fino Trading Company, Ltd. Newspapers—The Orofino Courier, Greer Brothers; Optimist, Charles Hoffstetter, editor and manager, issued by the Optimist Publishing Company. Hotels—Noble House, A. J. Payne, proprietor; Reynolds House, conducted by Mrs. M. L. Reynolds. Hardware—L. Stannus, successor to Stannus & Olcott. Drug store—Dr. J. E. Beck. Meat market—O. F. Woelk. Bakeries—Mrs. W. P. Greer, John Taylor. Livery barn—Clearwater Livery and Feed Stables, Demarest & Edmonson, proprietors. Feed stable—Hanks & Phelps. Millinery—Miss Maggie Smith, Miss Mary Finney. Harness and saddlery—George W. Moody. Notions—James A. Parker. Cigars and confectionery—W. A. Curry, F. J. Sisk. Blacksmiths—Olsen Brothers. Barbers—W. A. Curry. Real estate—Clearwater Real Estate and Loan Agency, Albert L. Morgan and Harry Caufield, proprietors. Attorneys at law—William M. Chandler, Albert L. Morgan, Frank H. Greenman. Physicians—Dr. J. E. Beck, Dr. Henry E. Fry. Dentist—H. Miles Cochran. Postmaster—James A. Parker. A brass band of ten pieces is being trained under the leadership of a skilled and painstaking musician.

MULLAN.

In his annual report for 1889 the Governor of Idaho said:

"Mullan, seven miles east of Wallace, has a natural location of great beauty, and is one of the coming towns of Cœur d'Alene. It is well built, has two fine hotels, a public school and a weekly newspaper, the Mullan Tribune. The population is 800, and it is the center of a large mining district."

As early as 1885 a town-site company was incorporated, comprising Charles J. Best, president, and John W. Marr, C. A. Earle, Enos G. Good and A. J. Betaque, directors, for the purpose of laying out and platting the town of Mullan. August 4, 1888, in the Shoshone county auditor's office was filed the original plat. The field notes were filed one month later, describing the location as Hunter's Mining District, bounded by Mill creek on the west, the Cœur d'Alene railway, later the O., R. & N., on the south; government town-site. The original area was 19.045 acres, on the Mullan road, west of the Idaho and Montana line, on land once known as "Nigger prairie," eighteen miles east of Evolution, and seven miles from the confluence of Canyon creek and the south fork of the Cœur d'Alene river. In 1888 Mullan contained twenty log and fifteen frame houses, one saw mill, one two-story log and one two-story frame hotel and 150 inhabitants. The estimated value of improvements was $10,000. The same year Mullan was surveyed by George R. Trask, assisted by Probate Judge Cone, for patent purposes under the incorporation law of Idaho. For a short period the Northern Pacific Railway Company ignored the name of Mullan and attempted to rechristen the town Ryan, but this effort proved futile, although the citizens acknowledged themselves deeply indebted to Mr. Ryan for his valuable assistance in building up the town. It was Ryan who purchased the Hunter mine in the infancy of the camp.

During the year 1889 Judge Potts, at present a resident of Mullan, attempted to establish a rival town three miles east of the latter place. As he himself expresses his opinion of prevailing conditions at that period, "There was a wild time in Mullan." Concerning this project a writer in the Mullan Tribune of September 5, 1889, says:

"Visitors to the Summit on Sunday afternoon, September 1, were surprised to find a force of men busily engaged in laying out a town-site on the small clearing just this side of the south fork, where the Northern Pacific engineer corps is camped. On Sunday morning the engineers surveyed the plat, named it Tunnel City and began fencing it in at once and by evening had about thirty acres inclosed. Some Mullanites hearing of these proceedings, early on Monday morning rode out and each staked off a lot, beginning at the boundary line of Tunnel City and following the Mullan road toward town. There are now probably a hundred lots fenced or located. The railroad boys are in favor of naming the place Tunnel City, but as it has been previously christened "Pottsville" by some ladies, it is thought that the latter name will prevail. The future for the little town looks quite encouraging. Messrs. Potts & White are already running a hotel and general store. Messrs. Lardis & Perkins are fitting up a restaurant. A blacksmith shop and meat market are scheduled."

This attempt to establish a rival to Mullan came to naught, as did the "McFarland" enterprise in 1885. The latter was an attempt to convert into a town-site a mining camp about a mile west of the town-site of Mullan. In October, 1892, Probate Judge Gregory received a United States patent for 18.874 acres of the town-site of Mullan. This included the main business portion of the town, but did not take in the entire settlement. Several years previous the patent had been applied for, but owing to differences of opinion among the residents, more land was not included in the patent. In December, 1888, Mullan was enjoying a lively boom, accelerated mainly by prospects of an early completion of a railroad to this place. The Hunter concentrator, capacity 300 tons a day, was under construction, there were many strangers in town, and building operations were in full swing.

Saturday evening, July 24, 1897, occurred the first serious loss by fire. At 10 o'clock p. m. the watchman of the Gold-Hunter mill discovered the roof of the boiler room in flames. There being sufficient steam left, he immediately sounded the whistle. This summoned Superintendent Curran and a number of employes, who attempted to connect the hose in the boiler room. They were driven away by heat. Although subsequent connection was made with the fireplug, this proved useless and the entire structure was soon in flames. From Wallace the Northern Pacific Railway Company sent out an engine to release a number of cars on the mill sidetrack, which, with the exception of two, were saved from destruction. The mill was burned to the ground. The fire was caused by sparks from the smokestack and is supposed to have been smoldering some time previous to its discovery. The loss was estimated at $50,000, with insurance of $30,000. By this disaster between fifty and sixty men were deprived of employment.

Monday, April 18, 1898, the Morning mill was destroyed by fire, involving a loss of $100,000, covered by insurance of $60,00. From a heating stove, the only one in the building, the fire originated, spreading so rapidly that employes had barely time to escape with their lives. Three hundred men were temporarily thrown out of work, but the owners of the plant, who were on the ground, announced their intention of rebuilding so soon as the insurance could be adjusted. At that period the daily output of the concentrator was 100 tons, and the pay-roll amounted to $35,000 a month.

Conditions in Mullan during the year 1900 are concisely described in the Coeur d'Alene Mining Journal, of September 1, 1901:

The town of Mullan is located in a stretch of mountain valley, or canyon, oasis, on the banks of the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene river, a spacious, beautiful spot for a thrifty mining town. In other words, Mullan has room to grow, and is expanding along desirable lines. Her population is increasing and the trade of her merchants keeping pace with the renewed activity in adjacent mining camps. The town has good water service, an electric light plant, a nine-grade public school, with over two hundred children attending, in charge of Prof. Conklin, the usual number of religious societies and fraternal organizations, all necessary equipments for a thoroughly civilized and progressive class of people. The year just closed gave to Mullan many new residences, besides a three-story block, 43 by 65 feet, erected by Townsmen Frank Edwards and Gus Glome. The demand for residences has not been supplied, necessitating the erection of many dwellings during the present year. Real estate is rapidly advancing in price. Thomas Henry, representative-elect, is a large owner of town realty. Railroad traffic increased fifty per cent in 1900, and the volume of postoffice business in proportion.

At present the population of Mullan is 1,200. Religious societies are represented by the Congregationalists, Episcopalians and Roman Catholics, all of which have church organizations and buildings for worship. Fraternal societies include Odd Fellows, Improved Order of Red Men, Ancient Order United Workmen, Woodmen of the World, Foresters, Scandinavian Brotherhood, Women of Woodcraft and Degree of Honor. An excellent system of water works is supplied from Boulder and Silver Creeks. The principal mines adjacent to the town are the Morning, on the west, and the Hunter, on the east. Aside from these the Snowstorm, a copper discovery, two miles east of Mullan, is in a flattering stage of development, a 1000-foot tunnel now being completed on a level of 1,072 feet. Should sulphite ore be struck in the ledge the company, represented by Mr. Thomas Donnelly, an experienced mining man, will erect a smelter. There are, also, numerous other prospects in the vicinity of Mullan, including the You Like, Just As, Reindeer, Silver Cliff, Missoula, Copper King and Copper Plate. The Evening mine was the first discovery on Chloride Hill.

Of the school of Mullan, District No. 12, the county superintendent's report gives the following figures: Number of boys enrolled, 38; number of girls, 26, total, 64. Average attendance, 44.11. The teacher is Beth Moran. There are two school terms of 171½ days each, during the year, and the salary paid the teacher is $80 a month.

MURRAY.

To chronicle the history of the oldest existing, and, for years the most important town in the Coeur d'Alenes, involves a judicious condensation of much valuable information. Were the story exhaustively related it would occupy a score of pages, or more, in a work like this, for around and within the limits of Murray were grouped important and impressive events; portrayals of early struggles and uplifting of this region. In earlier years Murray was the abode of the camp's most notable pioneers. Her earlier history is woven into the warp and woof of the main narrative of the Coeur d'Alenes, and patiently must these threads be untangled in one's efforts to present an accurate, yet satisfactory history of the town. It was named in honor of George Murray, a part owner of one of the claims on which the town was built.

A typical Coeur d'Alene town, Murray, originally Murraysville, is situated in a canyon on Pritchard Creek, main tributary of the north fork of the Coeur d'Alene river, about twelve miles due north from Wallace, with which city it is connected by one of the finest mountain roads in the district. Concerning its earlier history the Coeur d'Alene Eagle, of April 12, 1884, said:

"Murraysville is the name of a town on Prichard Creek, laid out January 22, last. The townsite is located on three creek claims, and next to Eagle it is the best location in the camp for a town. There is a surprising activity in building at the present time, and those who have located there are enthusiastic over the prospect of its future growth. Every branch of business is represented and all are making money. The famous Widow claim lies immediately above the town and one mile above the creek is the Mother Lode. The Murraysville people are active and enterprising and talk of making the town a lively rival of Eagle. The camp, however, is rich enough and extensive enough to support two or three towns the size of Eagle without their interests conflicting. Murraysville is headquarters for Summit mining district, which was organized February 7, and in which the best quartz and richest placer claims have been found."

In May, 1885, it is noted in the Murray Sun that "a year ago a dense forest occupied the townsite of Murray, so dense that it was with extreme difficulty that even a woodsman could make his way through it." Yet in 1885 so industriously had Murray spun the web of her municipal destiny that she secured the county seat from Pierce City, and as early as July 10, 1884, her business houses comprised the following:

J. R. Marks & Co., hardware; C. D. Beckwith, photographer; Bass & Ingalls, drugs; C. A. Hoyt, assayer; F. W. Brown, fruits, nuts, etc.; J. L. Bennington, Barrett & Zeigers, G. M. McCowen, restaurants; A. Erwin, boots and shoes; Brown Brothers, lodging house; Idaho Sun, Pioneer, newspapers; Benjamin Eggleston, feed stable; Eugene Kline, successor to Sinclair & Lockwood, Roderick McKenzie, Wardner & Co., and Dennell & Co., general merchandise; J. F. Stevens, J. T. Roberts, contractors; "Dave's Place," saloon; Ainsworth, Hawkins & Co., bankers; Lafferty Bros. & Glick, bakery. J. A. Mattis was postmaster.

Sunday morning, November 2, 1884, the first Catholic mass held in Murray was celebrated, Rev. Louis Jacquet, a Jesuit attached to the Spokane Mission on Peone prairie, and known by the Indians as "Broken Arm," leading the services. The first Episcopalian service was held Sunday, October 25, 1885, in the old court room, at which Right Reverend Dr. Tuttle, Bishop of Idaho, presided. The first M. E. church was built in 1896. The initial bank in the town was known as the Bank of Murray, established in 1884, C. L. Dahler, president; Charles Hussly, secretary, and W. Hussly, cashier. During May, 1884, the department at Washington, D. C., adopted the name of Curry as the designation of the postoffice, but this was changed to Murray within a very short time.

A private school was opened September 15, 1884, by Mrs. Robert Neil, with an attendance of thirteen pupils. Monday, March 30, 1885, the school trustees of District No. 3 (Murray), having so ordered, the first public school taught in the Coeur d'Alenes was opened with 25 pupils; fourteen girls and eleven boys. Miss Selma Talbott had been engaged as teacher at a salary of $75 a month. During the same year a lot was purchased for public school purposes and a suitable building erected thereon. The present handsome building, built in 1897, cost $2,350.

Mr. Adam Aulbach, edior and proprietor of the Murray Sun, is authority for the statement that in the winter of 1884-5 there were one thousand people on the Murray townsite, and fifteen hundred in contiguous mines. There were, also, fifty saloons. The same winter a heav snow storm, which set in on the afternoon of December 18, wrought considerable damage, crushing four large buildings, and destroying the roofs of others. The largest of the structures thus ruined was the Theater Comique. By December 23, thirty inches of snow had fallen during the season.

A call for a public meeting to participate in the organization of a fire department was issued in January, 1885, pursuant to which the court room of Justice McKay was filled with an enthusiastic gathering of the business men of Murray. A volunteer fire company was rapidly enrolled, and the following officers elected: J. T. Roberts, chief; J. Marks, assistant; John M. Burke, foreman; J. Hackleman, assistant foreman; Frank Stevens, second assistant foreman; M. L. Feinberg; G. N. Culver, treasurer. The name of the organization was Friendship Company, No. 1. The imminent danger from fire was again eagerly discussed March 11, 1886, at a public meeting held at Union hall. Before adjournment a committee of eleven was named and instructed to devise some practical plan for protecting the town from fire. The committee selected were W. L. Blossom, S. Fuller, W. W. Hart, Warren Hussly, W. J. Hawkins, Roderick McKenzie, A. B. Levi, O. D. Garrison, Adam Aulbach and Messrs. Moffitt and Wolf. The result of the deliberations of this committee was the establishment of the Murray Water Company, with a capital of $5,000, divided into shares of $25 each. This stock was readily taken by the citizens of the town, and a water right was located at the head of the east fork of Alder gulch, and fifty inches of water were taken.

From the many lot-jumping sensations common to Shoshone county residents of Murray were not exempt. In January, 1885, a number of unoccupied lots on lower Main street were jumped. Temporarily this excited only passing comment, as the owners were, at the time, out of the county. This served, however, to embolden others; the contagion spread rapidly. Within a remarkably short period every vacant lot in Murray was jumped. The title under which the jumpers purposed to hold these lots never possessed any validity whatever, and was, in the main, a side issue of the Schultze-Keeler case, adjudicated several years later. Still it was serious enough to endanger a small reign of terror. The climax was reached at 11 o'clock, a. m., January 30, when, according to the Murray Sun, one man "planted himself on the north side of First, at the intersection of Main street, stuck up a notice that the ground belonged to him, and with a shovel proceeded to clear away the snow." This action developed a panic. To protect the other side of the streets citizens hastily secured planks and fenced them in. In their raid a number of the jumpers attacked the "Widow Claim," erecting fences right and left. These, however, were promptly razed to the ground by William Keeler, Mr. Cromie and others. So serious became the situation that, in response to a petition a public meeting was held at Smith's hall, and the following resolution unanimously adopted:

> Resolved, that the streets of Murray, between Gold Run and Alder Gulch, as laid out by the original locators of the town, must, and shall be, kept open as public thoroughfares.

At this meeting Judge Claggett, one of Murray's earliest pioneers, made an earnest and patriotic appeal for law and justice to the property owners. To enforce this resolution, remove obstructions and assume general charge of the matter, a committee was named comprising J. R. Roberts, Con Sullivan, William Keeler, R. R. Cummins and Adam Aulbach. The spirit of this meeting was manifested by a motion which heartily prevailed, to the effect that all lots of fifty feet front and 125 feet in depth, upon which there were improvements, should be protected vie et armis against jumpers.

This outbreak was followed by litigation of far greater significance. It was in 1884 that the famous suit of A. J. Prichard vs. William Keeler, et al.,—a causuc celebre—was placed upon the court calendar, there to remain ten years, or until July, 1894. The original plaintiff, however, had been C. A. Schultze and the suit involved title to four-fifths of Murray's townsite. It was finally compromised and the plaintiff, Prichard, who had taken up the claim of C. A. Schultze, M. H. Lane and W. O. Endicott, was permitted to take judgment. Keeler, as it appears from the records, was accused of having jumped the claims of these parties.

Another legal decision has been embalmed in the archives of Murray, and one which assumed rather dramatic effects. The story is well told in the Murray Sun, of October 27, 1885.

> An unusual incident for a mining camp occurred in Murray last evening when news that Judge Buck had given his decision favorable to the Golden Chest Mining Company, a case in which this company's right to the ledge was contested by Murrayites, reached town. History has recorded few such demonstrations over such an event. The town resounded with cheers and murmurs of satisfaction, the Golden Chest whistle screamed with joy, men shouted themselves hoarse with enthusiasm over the outcome. It was a genuine outburst of feeling, not confined to a certain class, but a general, popular demonstration, significant in its spontaneity, for the people did honor to a just victory.

Preparations had been made to fire a salute at the intersection of Main and First streets, with giant powder, and a number of cartridges had been prepared and placed in a box. In lighting the fuse of the first cartridge a spark must have ignited some of the fuse in the box, for immediately after the first explosion, which was a light one, the fuse in the box was burning. Mr. Mountenay yelled to the men to run for their lives, and then, picking up the box, threw it into the middle of the street. Scarcely had it struck the ground when a terrific explosion occurred, breaking every pane of glass in the neighborhood. The Palace Hotel front was shattered; likewise Holzman's front, "Dutch Jake's," Garrison & Strong's, Bennington's, Coeur d'Alene Brewery Saloon's, Mint Saloon's, Wallace & Company's and for a block away. Many lamps were knocked down, but, fortunately, no fires were started. All damage will be paid for. The rejoicing continued until past midnight. About nine o'clock a procession was organized, headed by a band drum, which paraded the streets with hastily improvised transparencies. No political victory was ever celebrated with greater enthusiasm than was shown by this sympathetic community toward the pioneer quartz mill and the company.

Most of the more prominent fraternal societies are represented at Murray. Tuesday evening, November 24, 1885, the first A. O. U. W. lodge in the Coeur d'Alenes was organized, No. 14, under jurisdiction of the grand lodge of Nevada. The original officers were: Richard A. Pomeroy, P. M. W.; John C. Harkness, M. W.; Thomas A. Linn, overseer; Jesse Coulter, foreman; C. T. P. Bass, recorder; Ernest Rammerlmeyer, recorder; Thomas E. McLelland, financier; John M. Burke, guide; William P. Conellard, I. W.; Andrew Cavanaugh, O. W.; John M. Burke, Richard A. Pomeroy and Thomas F. Hanley, trustees. This lodge was organized with a membership of thirty.

Coeur d'Alene Lodge, No. 20, A. F. & A. M., was organized in November, 1886. Canby Post No. 11, G. A. R., was mustered in at Masonic Hall, Sunday afternoon, October 3, 1886. Murray Lodge No. 38, I. O. O. F., with twenty-two charter members, was organized in March, 1891. Damon Lodge, No. 22, Knights of Pythias, was among the pioneer organizations in the Coeur d'Alenes.

Coulson & Company's express line, the first stage route between Murray and Wardner, began making regular trips May 10, 1886. On March 31, 1891, the mail contract between Murray and Thompson, Mont., was discontinued, since which period all mail has reached Murray from Wallace, on the south fork. April 1, 1891, the Bank of North Idaho was opened by Frank F. Johnson, superseding Hussey's bank. The present officers are L. A. Doherty, president; C. B. Craven, cashier.

Sunday afternoon, September 20, 1896, Murray suffered from the most disastrous fire in her history. Considering, however, the demoralized condition of the fire department it was acknowledged by all residents that they escaped cheaply. This was rendered possible by absence of high wind. The fire originated from a panful of lard in the residence of Pascal Michieu, on Gold street, between First and Paradise avenues. Five buildings were destroyed and the flames communicated to Niedenthal & Smith's new barn and the roof of Coons & Paskill's place. Michieu, whose residence was destroyed, was badly burned on one hand and lost $50 in currency. Although the entire loss suffered by this disaster was not large, it fell mainly upon poor people who could ill afford to lose their homes.

Events in Murray during 1898 were sharply accentuated by a homicide, the killing of James Urquihart by Mrs. Thomas Saling. The husband of the woman was away from home, and Monday morning, December 5, Urquihart, who was under the influence of liquor, attempted to break into the cabin. Mrs. Saling seized a rifle and shot him. The wounded man was taken to the Providence Hospital, Wallace, where he died at 4 o'clock, Wednesday morning. Mrs. Saling was promptly acquitted by a coroner's jury.

Flames again menaced Murray, February 21, 1901, and it was with no little difficulty that the town was saved from destruction. The fire threatened seriously the Coeur d'Alene Company's large warehouse, and only a desperate half hour's fight kept the flames within bounds. A gasoline lamp explosion, in the rear of the postoffice building, was the cause of the fire. This building, with much of its contents, was totally destroyed, with a loss of $2,000, partly insured.

The business enterprise of Murray in 1902 is represented as follows:

General stores—Murray Mercantile Company, J. C. Feehan, manager; M. Prager & Co., Ltd., Louis Prager, manager. Grocery and bakery—E. W. Burton. Hardware—Murray Hardware Company. W. P. Northup, manager. Druggist—Dr. George S. Lesher. Express and postoffice—C. C. Landes. Meat market—Fuller Bros. Millinery and dry goods—Mrs. Tena Schmidt; Mrs. Josephine Erwin. Restaurant—Mrs. Klepinger and sister. Hotels—Murray, George Gilpatrick; Louisville, Charles Manley. Rooming house Mrs. Martha McCorkingale. Blacksmith—Amos Watkins. Barber shop—Robert Wilkinson. Fruit stand—Frank Savage. Doctors—G. S. Lesher, Roya Alexander. School teachers—G. H. Dunn and wife. Justice of the Peace—Dr. G. S. Lesher. Constable—Ben Schneiderjamm. Livery—McCann & Dunn. Tailor—E. G. Tarbox.

KELLOGG.

The original plat of the town of Kellogg was filed with the auditor of Shoshone county July 7, 1893. At that period the streets were Silver, Mill, Market, Portland, First, Main, Fifth and the Mullan road. To Mr. Robert Horn we are indebted for the following facts concerning the early history of Kellogg:

In September, 1885, Robert and Jonathan Ingalls located the flat below Wardner as a ranch four days after discovery of the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mine. These men were deeply impressed with the conviction that the district was destined to increase in importance and in January, 1886, they laid out the town of Milo, named after Milo creek, along whose banks it was located. Of the original town site there were eight owners,—Robert Horn, Jonathan Ingalls, John M. Burke, Alfred Brile, Thomas Hanley, John A. Martin, Jr., Charles Sinclair and Jacob Goetz ("Dutch Jake"), the latter at present one of the proprietors of the Coeur d'Alene Theater, Spokane, Washington. The entire ranch, comprising 160 acres, was divided into town lots. Within the year following the name "Milo" was exchanged for that of Kellogg, in honor of N. S. Kellogg, discoverer of the Bunker Hill mine. At one period the town entered the contest for county seat distinction, but was defeated by Murray which, in turn, lost to Wallace. The pioneer business man of Milo was Morris Prager, who brought in the first stock of general merchandise in May, 1886. During the fall of 1885 Messrs. Horn & Sinclair began work on a hotel which was completed the following spring. At present it is the oldest building in the gulch and is occupied by the Fair store. Other pioneer business men were George McGinnis, John Folly, W. W. Calder and Edward Wilson. The political trend of thought among citizens of Kellog is illustrated by the fact that of the ninety-two votes polled in 1886, eighty-eight of them were Republican. In the summer of 1886 a school house was erected at a cost of $800. Miss Nettie Buck, niece of Judge Buck, was the first teacher employed. In the establishment of the school Mr. Horn was an important factor, being at that period acting in the capacity of town site agent.

Kellogg, as delineated by Mr. Horn, has always enjoyed the reputation of a moral town, the first law passed by the authorities prohibiting a "red light district," and which has since never been permitted to be established. Rev. J. B. Orr, Congregational minister at Wallace, preaches at Kellogg on alternate Sundays.

In 1901 the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mining company donated to the town of Kellogg one of the finest brick school houses in the state, costing $8,000. At present the enrollment of the district, No. 9, is 107 boys and 96 girls: the total average attendance 166.5. Four teachers are employed, Alice Tarkington, James W. Hodge, S. Annette Bowman and Minnie C. Murphy. In 1886 the townsite company gave the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company fifteen acres of land for sidetrack purposes, and secured the road. The first train steamed into Kellogg in 1888.

BURKE.

If not the oldest, Burke is certainly one of the oldest mining towns in the Coeur d'Alene country, and is regarded as one of the most important camps in the district. Of the more prominent mines Burke is the home of the Hecla, Tiger-Poorman and Hercules, the latter being one of the most prominent of recent mineral discoveries. There are, in the immediate vicinity of Burke, aside from these great producers, prospect properties like the Sonora, Hummingbird, Burke, Anchor, Ajax, Oom Paul, Echo, Trade Dollar, Oreans and others, all in various stages of development and many of which, it is safe to assume, are destined to show rich values. Burke is located on Canyon creek, seven miles from Wallace, with which it is connected by both the Northern Pacific and the O. R. & N. railroads.

The organization of the town of Burke dates from June 13, 1885, when at a meeting of Canyon Creek miners, out of thirty votes cast, twenty-nine were polled for the name of "Burke." The odd vote was cast for "Onealville." James Brady and Dan Martin were appointed to wait upon Mr. J. M. Burke and inform him of the action of the meeting. Thereafter Mr. Burke appeared at the meeting, thanked those present for the honor conferred upon him, and extended courtesies of a more substantial character to the miners. At that period the town consisted of twelve habitations, including tents, and one store under the management of Benjamin Stringham. Of the new town the Wallace Press, of January, 1888, said: "The town of Burke has two mines in operation, one concentrator (Tiger,) seventeen saloons, four general stores, one beer hall, two boarding houses, two hardware stores, one fruit and confectionery store, one butcher shop, one livery stable, one lawyer, one physician, one furniture store, one baker's shop, about 800 inhabitants, a large visiting element, the Canyon Creek railroad and not a hotel in town. There are two lots only that are suitable for hotel purposes, and these may be purchased in the future. From three to five carloads of ore are being shipped daily."

In 1888 Burke could boast of 300 buildings. One year previous the town had but twenty. In 1888 the South Fork Lead & Silver Company constructed a concentrator under the supervision of Otto Abeling. The Burke fire company was organized July 16, 1888, with twenty-two members and the following officers: J. C. House, chief; George Hardesty, treasurer; George H. Green, secretary; J. K. Waite, foreman; J. Davis, assistant foreman. The same year the Granite mine company constructed a concentrator, and a branch county jail was erected, 18x30 feet in size, built of wood and iron. Quoting from the Murray Sun, of May 17, 1887:

At a recent meeting of the citizens of Canyon creek, in the vicinity of the Tiger mine, Sunday, May 15, at which R. M. Dryden presided, and G. V. Byrnet acted as secretary, a committee was appointed to lay out a town site, make rules, etc. The chair named Jesse Tabor, James Brady, Michael Therriault, Theodore Jacoby and G. V. Byrnet. On Monday evening the meeting reconvened at McDonald's saloon. They reported substantially as follows, which report was adopted: That the town be known as Burke; that our main street be named Flidden, one cross street O'Neil, one south side street, Brady; that lots be 50x125 feet in size; that each lot must be recorded within ten days from date of location, and a substantial fence built around it, which shall hold good for sixty days pending substantial improvements; that all disputes shall be settled by a citizens' committee of five; that the recording fee be $2; that 50 cents shall be collected from each lot owner to defray the expense of surveying the town-site; that no person can take more than one lot of fifty feet front, and that no location can be made by proxy, except with the single provision that those who were absent and had cabins completed, or nearly so, were entitled to this privilege.

At this same meeting the Lelande Mining District was organized and G. V. Byrnet was recommended for the position of deputy mineral recorder. The same year Burke enjoyed the unique distinction of being the only mining town known that ever secured a railroad before it had a wagon road. This year a school district was allotted to Burke, with William Graham, R. M. Dryden and Dr. J. C. House as trustees. The town was progressing rapidly and several hundred men were at work in the mines. The department grants a postoffice, insisting on calling it Bayard, and appointing R. H. Kello postmaster. Subsequently a vigorous protest is entered against this name and it is changed to Burke.

Thursday evening, May 17, 1888, a number of public-spirited citizens assembled and organized the Burke Water Power Company, placing the capital stock at $2,000, divided into shares of $5 each. S. S. Glidden was selected as president, William W. Hart, vice-president; P. O. Weber, second vice-president; G. V. Byrnet, secretary, and William Graham, treasurer. The pipe was furnished by J. R. Marks & Co., of Murray.

Early Monday morning, September 14, 1896, Burke was visited by a disastrous fire, entailing loss of life and destruction of the Tiger-Poorman Hotel. While the night cook was at work at the range a quantity of grease ignited and the room was soon enveloped in flames. Donaldson, the cook, ran upstairs, giving the alarm to the sleepers as rapidly as possible, who rushed forth in their night clothes, leaping from windows and dropping from the porch to save their lives. Annie Johnson, an employe of the hotel, fell twenty feet to the ground, receiving a bad shaking up, but was not otherwise injured. William O'Mera was burned to death in his room. His gold watch was found beside him, but the body was so badly charred as to be unrecognizable, all but the thighs being burned to a crisp. He was a pioneer in the country, about forty years of age, a native of Ireland, and had no relatives in this section. He was a member in good standing in the Burke Miners' Union and was buried by that organization in Union cemetery, Nine Mile gulch. Others who were injured were: W. P. Fought, badly burned; E. L. Searles, three ribs broken; Joseph Coburn, W. P. Waterman, Pat and Martin McHale and Thomas Smith. They were taken to the Providence Hospital, Wallace. The hotel was completely destroyed. It was located thirty feet east of a mill, the roof of which caught fire, and for awhile it looked as if there would be entailed a loss of at least $100,000. The entire loss was $10,000, of which $5,500 was covered by insurance.

Educational matters have from the first engaged the attention of the best citizens of Burke. The school, which is in District No. 11, is taught by Alice Fahey, principal, and Miss Dunham, assistant. There are enrolled fifty-seven boys and forty-four girls, and the average attendance is sixty-six and four-tenths. The district supports a nine months' school.

GEM.

Midway between the towns of Wallace and Burke, on the same lines of railways that connect the two places, is the mountain town of Gem. Here is located the great Helena-Frisco mine, and its surrounding prospects, many of which are under process of development. "For at least half a century to come," declare mining experts, "Gem will maintain its standard among the prominent lead and silver camps of the Cœur d'Alenes." At present Gem is a lively, enterprising town which, although it suffered severely during the low price of lead and silver, has resumed its place among the actively energetic output stations of this wonderful mining district. The town is situated four miles below Burke, in the same canyon, and from the Governor's report, in 1889, it is learned that there were at that period two hundred people in the vicinity of the new works of the Gem and San Francisco mines. The excellent water supply of Gem is obtained from a spring in the gulch north of the town, the fall of which is three hundred feet. The school district, No. 16, supports a graded school of one hundred and ninety-four pupils—Ninety-four boys and one hundred girls—and the average attendance is one hundred and twelve. The teachers are Mary E. Halpin, principal; Kathryn M. O'Rourke, May McKenzie. Two miles above Gem, toward Burke, is the postoffice of Mace, of which Miss Clara Hooper is postmistress. This is the home of the Standard mine, and the shipping point of its valuable output. The town is situated on the right-of-way of the oNrthern Pacific and O. R. & N. W. railways, with an immediate and surrounding population of two hundred and fifty or three hundred people. The hotel is conducted by Charles McKinnis, and White & Bender and M. J. Flohr are proprietors of mercantile establishments in the town. A saloon is conducted by Friedman & Company.

KINGSTON.

At the mouth of the north, where it forms a confluence with the south, fork of the Cœur d'Alene river, is situated the town of Kingston. As early as April 28, 1884, the Cœur d'Alene Pioneer, published at Murray, said:

"At the present steamboat landing in the Cœur d'Alene river the new town of Kingston is located. Wagons run along the old Mullan road to Jackass station, about nine miles distant, where the trail to Eagle begins. Kingston contains about two dozen tents and the same number of log buildings. The Spokane & Cœur d'Alene Stage Company are running a line of wagons from Kingston to Jackass station, where they connect with saddle trains for Eagle City. The trail is shoveled and graded through eight feet of snow and the stage company intends to replace it with a wagon road as quickly as possible."

From the Eagle of the same year we learn that the new town was enjoying "a tremendous boom consequent on the report that it is to be the head of navigation for the present year." Over one hundred buildings were then erected and different business enterprises established. In July, 1888, the attention of the citizens was directed mainly to the new railroad then being graded through the town. Kingston is located on the line of the Northern Pacific, about one-half mile south of the O., R. & N., the latter road being at present the only line in operation, high water having forced the abandonment of the Northern Pacific. The school report of Kingston, District No. 5, is as follows: Number of boys enrolled, fourteen; girls, thirteen; total, twenty-seven. There are eight months' school, taught by Edwin Smith. The average attendance is twenty.

WEIPPE.

Weippe is the trading point of the prairie and region which bears that name in the southern portion of Shoshone county. The town-site is on the northern end of the prairie, on Ford's creek. R. J. Anderson owns a general store, which, though not on the town-site, is really a portion of the town; Wellington Landon, the pioneer settler, conducts a small establishment, in which he dispenses refreshments of various kinds to the weary traveler; Frank Gaffney has a small general store; John Tory a blacksmith shop, and W. W. Gardner conducts the Weippe Hotel and livery barn, and also the postoffice. In 1895 a comfortable little schoolhouse was erected by the district, and here school is maintained for six months during the year. At the present time there are eighteen pupils under the instruction of Miss Coontz. R. J. Anderson's saw mill is near the town of Weippe, a plant having a capacity of about 16,000 feet of lumber a day, and employing many men. Three and a half miles west of town a smaller mill is operated by the Barry Brothers. Tributary to Weippe is a prosperous stock-raising and farming community, and the prospect that the town will increase materially in the future is flattering. It would seem that development of the vast timber resources in the neighborhood of Weippe would alone prove an incentive to the growth of a town of respectable size.

DELTA.

Delta is situated on Beaver, at the mouth of Trail, creek. There is only a semblance of the old placer center now left. The Mascot Gold Mining Company has acquired the ground upon which the town stood, and is at present engaged in removing buildings, fences, etc. At one period Delta had 1,000 inhabitants, and was a formidable rival of Murray, but with the decline of placer industry in the North Fork country it steadily fell off until there were left only a handful of the former population. Two years ago the dredge company entered the field and acquired the claims upon which the town is located. Aside from dredge work there is little to maintain a town at this point. Individual prospectors and miners go either to Murray or Wallace for supplies. The mining company, however, has set aside a small tract of land just above the old town, and on this ground the few business buildings needed in the future will be built. Already Thomas Shustet, an '83 pioneer, has erected a commodious and comfortable hotel on the new site and other business men contemplate a revival of building. Should future conditions demand a large town there is no doubt but that the ground can be secured. Mrs. Emma McNall is Delta's postmistress, and she, with her husband, also conducts a small store.

THIARD.

Another of the North Fork's old placer towns is Thiard, formerly Myrtle, although with the exception of a few residences and one business house, nothing of importance remains of a once lively and bustling mining camp. In 1885-6 the population of "Myrtle" was close to a thousand people, and there was more gold dust handled at that point than in any other place in the Cœur d'Alenes. The town was named after the daughter of one of the locators of the Myrtle claims. Several years ago the postoffice was abandoned, but subsequently re-established. The name Myrtle had been taken by another town in the state, however, so the place was christened Thiard, in honor of one of its pioneers. It is situated on Trail creek, one mile east of Delta. By numerous individual miners there are a number of claims still being worked, and with reasonable success. George Woods is the postmaster, merchant and landlord.

GREER.

Another thriving reservation town, situated on the Clearwater Short Line Railway, in southern Shoshone county, is Greer. It is the first station below Kamiah and the first above Orofino, four miles above the mouth of Jim Ford's creek. The site is similar to that of Stites in that it is on a narrow strip of land in the bed of Clearwater canyon, which at this point is precipitous and narrow. Greer is the gateway to southern Shoshone county; practically all shipping is done from here; here is situated the old Greer ferry, connecting the town with Nez Perces prairie. Two excellent wagon roads climb the sides of the canyon at this point, neither road having a grade averaging over 10 per cent. The road into the Weippe and Pierce City regions is an old one, but the one going to the prairie was constructed by John Greer, aided by a few settlers, in 1890.

The settlement at this point of the river dates back to 1861, when Colonel William Craig and Jacob Schultz built a ferry here to accommodate travel to the Oro Fino mines. The Witts, Caleb and his son James, conducted the ferry for a time; then Schultz took over the property and operated it until 1870. He was followed by John D. Reed, who acted as ferryman for four years, after which D. W. C. Dunwell purchased the property. The ferry was destroyed at the time of the Nez Perces Indian war. John Greer and John Molloy acquired possession of the historic ferry in the fall of 1877, Mr. Greer subsequently purchasing Molloy's interest. He is now sole owner. The boat is first class and is well maintained by its owner, who is as well known in central Idaho as any other man in the region.

When the railroad came up the Clearwater in 1899 Mr. Greer formed a partnership with John Dunn and platted a town-site on the north forty acres of the former's homestead. Seventeen acres additional were subsequently platted, making the aggregate size of the town-site fifty-seven acres. To the railroad company a right-of-way fifty feet in width was donated, together with a tract of land 1,000x250 feet, the latter being for yard purposes. The company has rewarded this generous action by building an extensive system of sidetracks at this point and a commodious depot. Usually a new town's pioneer enterprise is a store; a blacksmith shop led the van in Greer. William Varner and John Bush built such a shop on the town-site in the spring of 1889. John Gamble ran up a livery stable; in October came E. T. Lensegraff, John and Albert Carlson, and they opened a general store under the firm name of Carlson Brothers & Company. Albert Carlson and Mr. Lensegraff still conduct the business. The succeeding general mercantile store was that of the Clearwater Mercantile Company, composed of Edward Crosson and Duke Robbins, who came to Greer in the spring of 1900. Later the business was purchased by Means & Bell, and subsequently the Noble Brothers secured the property.

This same spring William Davis erected a store in Greer which he sold to Erb Brothers in 1902. The first hotel was called the Montana House, and was conducted in a portion of Carlson Brothers & Company's store building by R. W. Tanner. This hostelry was established in the fall of 1899. Mr. Tanner was succeeded in 1900 by Carlson Brothers & Company, and they in turn by W. P. Wilson. Two years ago the latter built a new hotel building across the street from the old one, and subsequently sold it to J. I. Coontz, the present proprietor. Such is a condensed history of the beginning of Greer.

In 1902 John Greer presented to the school district a site for a suitable edifice, and a small structure was at once erected on the ground. The first term was taught by Miss Cora Fabrique. Miss Lulu Palmerton is the present school mistress and has under her instruction fifteen pupils. A nine months' school term is maintained. As yet there are no churches in the town, though this step of progress will, doubtless, shortly be taken by the community. Two large warehouses are required to handle the grain which is shipped annually from Greer, that of the Vollmer Clearwater Company, of Lewiston, and Kerr, Gifford & Company, of Portland. From M. B. Erb, manager of the former warehouse, which handles approximately three-fifths of the business, it was learned that his house bought nearly $40,000 worth of grain last season. This firm purchased 5,554 sacks of wheat, 12,271 sacks of flax, 4,387 sacks of oats and 4,459 sacks of barley, practically all of which came from Nez Perces prairie.

At present Greer is an unincorporated village, containing only about one hundred people, but it is steadily growing and will, doubtless, continue to grow for several years, as the country tributary fully warrants a much larger trading point on the river. The size and importance of the Pierce City mining district also favor Greer to a great extent. Nearly all the traffic to that region passes through the town. The Pierce City Stage Company operates a six-times-a-week conveyance between Greer and Pierce City, the line being conducted by Samuel Elben. A summary of the business houses and professional men of Greer closes this article:

General stores—Carlson & Lensegraff, Erb Brothers, Noble Brothers. Hotel—J. I. Coontz. Drug store—Harry M. Richardson. Livery barn—Charles Stenzil. Blacksmith shop—William Varner, John Greer. Cigars, confectionery, etc.—E. Howard Dulmage. Barber—Joseph Bradley. Postmaster—Patrick Keane. Northern Pacific station agent—J. S. Hall.

AHSAHKA.

At the mouth of the north fork of the Clearwater is situated the little trading town of Ahsahka. This peculiarly named hamlet was called into existence by the building of the railroad through the canyon, which widens out into a miniature valley at this point, and the erection of McLean Brothers' saw mill near the junction of the two streams. This saw mill has a capacity of 20,000 feet a day, requiring the assistance of many men around the mill, on the river and in the woods. All tillable land is owned by Indians, and Ahsahka possesses one of the five Indian churches on the reservation. A. M. Pierce & Son opened a store here in 1899, which is at present owned and conducted by T. Y. Cox. Mrs. Cox acts as postmistress and Frank Surprise conducts a hotel.

CHAPTER VI

DESCRIPTIVE.

Shoshone county is one of the important divisions of what is colloquially known as the "Panhandle" of Idaho. From Montana it is separated by its eastern boundary, the Bitter Root, and their northerly extending spurs, the far-famed Cœur d'Alene mountains. These, with Shoshone county's southern boundary, the Lolo fork, and a line northward from the Clearwater, near the Seventh Standard parallel, to a point in the immediate vicinity of Lake Pend Oreille, inclose, in an area of 4,400 square miles, one of the richest mineral producing sections of the United States. The census of 1900 gives the county a population of 11,950.

As Shoshone is the oldest county in the state, created December 21, 1861, so, too, it is the richest in mineral wealth. Its history, comparatively recent, when considered in connection with those of other states, and which is treated in extenso in another chapter of this work, is punctuated with surprising and unexpected discoveries, mineral strikes under abnormal conditions, acute and sensational crises in industrial circles, but always steadily progressive and constantly developing new and valuable resources.

The general contour of Shoshone county, from the Lolo fork to its northern limits, is a succession of mountain ranges, from two to eight thousand feet in height, seared and seamed with canyons and gulches, through which wind and twist in innumerable convolutions sparkling streams of the purest water, alive with salmon and trout and affording the one indispensable requisite to profitable mining. The fauna is represented by elk, bear, deer, moose and mountain sheep. Grouse, pheasants and ptarmigan are abundant, and the more ambitious hunter may seek, not unsuccessfully, the cougar, lynx and bob-cat. It is still a wide field for the prospector and the many rumors of lost mines, abandoned ledges, yet rich with fabulous indications, are never-failing incentives held before the eyes of enthusiastic explorers.

When more amply developed the lumber interests of Shoshone county will constitute a source of great wealth. A dense growth of pine, fir, cedar, hemlock and spruce timber lines the banks of rivers and creeks and spreads over the flanks of the mountains. Contiguous to the south branch of the Clearwater lie extensive reaches of agricultural and grazing lands, not thickly settled even at the present day, but which in the future are destined to become the comfortable homes of thousands. Since 1860 placer mining on Oro Fino creek has been prosecuted with varying success, but activity in the later methods of quartz mining is constantly increasing.

Climatic conditions in Shoshone county are, probably, more varied than in any other locality in the state. Light winters prevail along the Clearwater river, snow never being sufficient to warrant the purchase of hand-sleds or sleighs. To the north and east one experiences sharp fluctuations in climate, varying with the distance traveled and altitude gained. Ten miles from the Clearwater river there is an abundance of snow in the winter months, and residents enjoy excellent sleighing, while a distance of thirty or forty miles insures sleighing from December until March, and through the months of January and February severe cold weather prevails, averaging from fifteen to twenty degrees below zero. Throughout the northern and eastern portions of the county the winter season is not so severe as it is on the same latitude east of the Rocky mountains. Quoting from the North Idaho Home Finder, published at Orofino: "The summer nights are comfortably cool, no mosquitoes, and a shady spot is pleasant and agreeable in warm weather. There are no cyclones in Shoshone county and a sunstroke has never been known. Stock, such as cattle, sheep, horses, hogs and mules, feed on the river ranges the year round, and are found in good condition every month in the year."

The United States Geological Survey of 1900 gives the various altitudes of Shoshone county as follows: Osburn, 2,521 feet; Summit (two-mile divide), 4,081 feet; Beaver Station, 2,785 feet; Delta, 2,517 feet; Murray Summit, 3,321 feet; Littlefield, 2,930 feet; Raven, 3,060 feet; Sullivan, 3,477 feet; Summit (between Idaho and M.), 4,862 feet; Wallace, 2,728 feet; Gem, 3,197 feet; Burke, 3,736 feet; Glidden Pass (Bitter Root), 5,768 feet; Dobson Pass (county road), 4,174 feet.

Writing upon the conditions and possibilities of the Cœur d'Alenes in 1891, Mr. H. W. Ross said:

As to the permanency of the productiveness of the mines of the district, it is a matter of great importance and always subject to considerable discussion. Opinions on such things are largely a matter of personal judgment, and correct conclusions hardly come within the range of human possibility. The dynamic forces that distributed the mineral wealth of the earth seem to have acted in few places the same way. Characteristic features that are significant of much in one place have little significance in another. In this respect Coeur d'Alene is an anomaly. Miners who were familiar with the characteristic features of the principal mining camps of the continent regarded the geological structures and dispositions of ores in the Coeur d'Alenes with doubt and unfavorable opinions. Miners who believed that they had seen all the conditions peculiar to veins and ore, and entertained the idea that some of these conditions were essential to profitable mines, were not the ones who undertook the development of the mines of this district, but mostly men whose minds were not hampered by experience elsewhere, or with fixed opinions that any particular features were essential to mines, except ore, and it is safe to say that these men have not only been successful in an ordinary way, but beyond their most sanguine expectations.

The best judgment on undeveloped prospects is liable to err, but as developments proceed the predominating tendency is usually a safe guide. The mineralization of a particular portion of the earth is usually by the same agency and the same characteristics prevail throughout. In this respect the mines of Coeur d'Alene are remarkable. The surface values were, indeed, meagre, and without many of those conditions indicating productiveness of ore, and the predominating tendencies are the expansion of ore bodies and productiveness of ore, as explorations are directed downward. There have been some remarkable instances of this character in the development of the district's mines, and it is well worthy of going on record. The peculiar geological structure covers a large area of country, and the same predominating tendencies prevail throughout. It is evident that these ores are not incidental to any other feature, but that they are permanent and fixed features of the geological structure, and that they will continue to produce to a depth as far as modern mining appliances will extract it.

Geologically speaking, the formation is closely bedded schists of the usual mineral character, occasionally grading into quartzite, and in places alternating with slate. At one place in the midst of the district a granite dome seems to have protruded through the bedded rocks, but no other eruptive rocks appear in the district. The lines of strike of these stratified rocks are nearly due east and west and tilted up to angles varying from forty-five degrees from the horizon to nearly vertical. The mineralization or deposition of ores throughout the district is a subject of considerable controversy, some contending that the ores are contained in filled fissures, or veins interposed between beds of schistose rocks, while others argue that but few, or none, of the mines are veins at all, but simply mineralized country rocks, especially at Wardner, where the ore-bearing ground is of such unusual width as to almost preclude any idea of a vein in the usual sense. The mineralized rock is identical with the country formation on either side, and entirely conformable to the dip and strike of the stratification.

The theory is that the minerals were deposited and held in solution in a gaseous form at the same period as the sedimentary beds, and that the metamorphosis of the sedimentary materials and mineral matter to a crystaline texture was contemporaneous, and by the same agency, and that throughout subsequent disturbance in mountain making and the tilting up of these sedimentary beds the ores and rocks retained their relation to each other; and that the ore-bearing ground is but a mineralized zone of indefinite width. Evidence in support of this is that in places clean rock grades insensibly into clean galena within the same plane of stratification, and that these planes are conformable to the dip and strike of the country rock. This mineralized zone at Wardner is known to be 500 feet wide in places, and extends from the Miners' Delight, near the Sullivan, to the Tyler, nearly one mile in length. Near the Sullivan two parallel claims are located upon the zone, each of them with large outcrops of ore. It is also well demonstrated by underground explorations, through the Sullivan mine, into the Mammoth, the adjoining claim.

To the admiration-compelling beauties of the natural scenery of the Coeur d'Alenes no pen of the historian can do adequate justice. Innumerable points of interest are found by the traveler through the mountains, be he prospector, pleasure-seeker or emigre. Temporary hardships incidental to such an enterprise are rewarded many fold by awesome sublimities, or quiet, sequestered landscapes, tinted by the unrivaled brush of nature. The old Mullan road winds through the most attractive portions of the Coeur d'Alenes. This is a government highway, originally constructed for the purpose of providing transportation facilities between Fort Walla Walla and Fort Benton, previous to the advent of the Northern Pacific Railroad. For many years it was a trail for whites and Indians alike, and even now it is utilized by the Flatheads in their annual incursions through the Bitter Root mountains and into the interior of northern Idaho.

Included in the list of minerals found in Shoshone county are: Gold, in placers and quartz; tellurium; native, crystalized, wire and flaked silver; copper, sulphide, arsenical and corbonate; antimony, sulphide; magnesia, associated with iron; zinc blende; spathic iron, iron pyrites, arsenical iron; silver-bearing grey copper; lead in the following forms—galena or sulphide, anglesite, cerussite, pyromorphite, platnerite—magnesium; granite; talc; slate; quartz; quartzite.

Platnerite, one of the minerals named, is rare, having been found in but few places in the United States. In Shoshone county there are two mines from which platnerite has been taken in limited quantities. These mines are the You Like, at Mullan, and the Mammoth, at Burke. In 1891 men commissioned by the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, D. C., came to Mullan and obtained specimens of this rare mineral deposit. The lead crystals found in Shoshone county are generally associated with wire silver, and the following mines have produced some beautiful specimens of this ore: Custer, Sierra Nevada, Last Chance and Mammoth. The Gem mine furnished some fine specimens of pyromorphite, and a number of rare crystals were obtained from the Mammoth. The upper workings of the Frisco contained beautiful specimens of cerussite, exact duplicates of some found in Bavaria. The Nellie mine is noted for spathic iron and antimonial copper. From the towns of Murray and Pierce have been secured handsome specimens in the forms of nuggets and gold quartz. Zinc blende is found associated with galena, and, as a rule, is easily eliminated by concentration. In the North Fork country is an excellent grade of copper, while along Pine creek is found a fine quality of antimony.

Wherever mill "tailings," or "concretes," impregnate water flowing through producing land, the latter is reduced to a worthless condition. This is the condition of the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene river from Mullan westward. The stream is, also, rendered poisonous to cattle and other species of stock. In consequence of this a number of lawsuits have been instituted against various mining companies. For the purpose of obviating this incalculable damage, work has recently been begun on what is to be, eventually, a large dam across the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene, at the mouth of Pine creek, seven miles below Wardner. It is anticipated that by this means the massive affair will retain all the "tailings" which at present flow down the river and into Lake Coeur d'Alene, for the succeeding ten or fifteen years. The work is the joint enterprise of various mining companies along the stream. It is sincerely hoped that this costly dam will be the means of preventing the destruction of property in the future. The "tailings" contain values of two dollars a ton, and it is thought that the enormous pile of "low grade ores" may be worked to advantage when more delicate machinery is invented to treat it.

Canyon and Nine Mile creeks, converging at Wallace, and debouching into the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene river, are wonderful regions when one considers the range of their possibilities, together with the amount of development and industrial activity already in progress. In the main the hanging walls of Canyon creek are more silicious than the foot-walls, the fissures cutting through the country rock about north, sixty-five degrees, west, and varying in dip from vertical to eighty degrees to the north, or south, cutting the bedding planes on trend and dip. Belts of quartzite and slate cut through this district. Granite dykes cut through in the vicinity of Gem.

On Nine Mile creek the geological formation is mainly slate for the first few miles. The Granite mine is in the quartzite belt, between two granite dykes, the only one of its kind in the country. Well-defined veins attain a depth of about 1,000 feet; tunnel mines and fissure veins, the same trend and dip as in Canyon creek, and the prevailing ore is the same. The mining district in the vicinity of Mullan is nearly identical, geologically, with that of Canyon creek. All sedimentary rock in the Wardner district is plain quartzite (sandstone changed by heat and pressure). The foot-wall is stratified quartzite; the hanging wall a blocky and more sandy quartzite. The limits of the zone are indicated, mainly, by "petering out," and decrease of dynamic action which formed the original zone in which the ore was deposited. The float-wall, or master fissure, trends north, fifty degrees, west, and dips from thirty-five to forty-five degrees southwest. There are continuous ore bodies, with the exception of intervals, for half a mile along the length of the vein, in which there are two series of ore shoots, hanging and foot-ore bodies. Toward the extreme west of the Wardner belt the master fissure strikes into, and becomes merged with, slate contact. The width of the ore body varies from six or eight to seventy feet.

Picturesque north Shoshone county is not, as yet, a vacation Mecca for the annual tourist. What the Adriondacks were to the Knickerbocker settlers of Manhattan a century ago; what the Yellowstone Park and Yosemite Valley were to the average business man of the middle west five decades ago, the region of the north fork of the Coeur d'Alene river is, today, to almost the entire world. Writing in his paper, the Murray Sun, Editor Adam Aulbach says of this erstwhile terra incognita:

"The North Fork river region, although it has been penetrated by sportsmen and trappers for the past fifteen years, is still an unknown country—a sealed book. Even prospectors have very seldom ventured into the region. * * * * To a person prepared with heavily nailed shoes, not high or low gum boots, the wading in the limpil stream, above its confluence with Prichard creek, is not disagreeable. The bed is rocky, mostly round boulders, and very slippery. The water, in what are termed pools, is seldom three feet in depth; the most that is waded in is not over eighteen inches, and so clear that every pebble may be seen. There are frequent pools of considerable depth in which the forest and sky are perpetually mirrored. In fact the entire distance we traveled was a succession of long, shallow rapids, with projecting rocks and boulders, against which the water dashes in everlasting glee, and long pools as smooth as glass that form minature lakes in their wonderful beauty. With majestic sweep the river courses along between low banks and high, rugged bluffs, never less than one hundred feet wide, but mainly one hundred and fifty. With two exceptions the valley, to the mouth of Big creek, is narrow, walled in on either side by crooked mountain ranges, unexplored by man. There is fine timber everywhere, from the water's edge to the mountain's crest. On the bottom lands are large cedars, many of them measuring thirty feet in circumference near the ground. There is a lovely flat at what is known as Chicago Crossing, extending half a mile back. There is another at the mouth of Big creek, but densely covered with timber. It is a glorious stream, and a true sportsman's paradise."

The north fork of Clearwater river constitutes the northern boundary of what is termed southern Shoshone county. Between that river and the Lolo Fork, the latter the extreme southern boundary of the county, is a vast tract of mountainous, heavily timbered country, interspersed with meadows whose abundant resources have as yet hardly been primarily developed. A portion of the Bitter Root forest reserve lies in Shoshone county, north of the Lolo Fork and east of Pierce City. Within and without the boundaries of this reserve are billions of feet of the finest timber in the northwest, white, yellow and black pine, white and red fir, cedar, spruce and tamarack. And lying beneath these forests is a vast mineralized region, carrying gold, silver, lead, iron, copper and coal, the surface of which has barely been scarred by the pick of the miner. Here, too, may be found some of the finest hay and grain land in the state, and grazing lands for thousands of head of stock. While it is a country of varied and magnificent resources they are, as yet, but feebly comprehended by the less than 2,000 inhabitants within the limits of southern Shoshone county. The most ordinary foresight can anticipate the day when these broad, cavernous canyons will ring with the stroke of the lumberman's axe and the continuous hum of sawmills; a time when the sparkling, dashing, mountain torrents, now the habitat of gamey trout, will be utilized to spin the wheels of industry; when the, as yet, undeveloped meadow lands will respond generously to the efforts of the farmer, and the richly timbered lands shall have been transformed into grain and stock farms; when stamp mills and hydraulic plants will be robbing this earth of its mineral for transformation into the metal of commerce—the currency of the world.

Actual sight lends forceful inspiration to a description. And it was this truism that led the writer to make a reconnoisance into this southern portion of Shoshone county. This was in April last. It was a period when the earth was still snowbound, not the most propitious season in which to "spy out" any land, and one could hardly hope to view this goodly country at its best. Still, even this invasion was fruitful of gratifying results. Ascent to the high table land lying east of Clearwater river was made from Greer over an excellent grade, between three and four miles long. On reaching the summit an inspiring scene was presented. Fifteen hundred feet below wound the Clearwater, a silken ribbon between precipitous canyon walls. Scattered along its banks were a few habitations, gardens and grain fields, and at one point a narrow line of huddled frame buildings through which ran two gleaming lines of metal—the village of Greer and its railroad track. From above the snow-line one could gaze on the lower altitudes, clothed in garb of brightest green, prophetic of summer's appearance, and the charm of the picture was further enhanced by the sight of butter-cups, violets and other floral offerings of spring, in bloom along the road to the summit. Far across the long, serpentine canyon could be seen the rolling prairies of Nez Perces county, and the heavy growth of timber lying north of them. In the greater distance Craig's mountain reared its snow-crowned peak above the grand undulating prairies at its feet, and still farther to the west and south a broken, jagged, white sky-line marked the location of the Salmon river and Seven Devils ranges of mountains, the nearest of which was sixty miles distant. East of this view point the landscape sweeps away in long, rolling swells, parks and meadows alternating.

To the eastward is the Fraser country, so named after the postoffice established in that section. Magnificent groves of yellow pine cast shadows across the rich, black loam upon which they thrive in stately beauty. As one continues along the road numerous dwellings of pioneers fall into view, accentuated occasionally by improved farms, and not infrequently hideous fields of stumps; rough, but eloquent testimony of a partially developed ranch. Included in the Fraser country is a strip of land about five miles in width, lying along the north side of Lolo creek for a distance of twelve miles from its mouth. Here the chief industry is stock-raising, although considerable wheat and other cereals are cultivated. The rolling hills in this vicinity are densely timbered and sparsely populated. Crossing a rather swampy stretch of country, tamarack being the predominating timber, at the end of a fourteen mile ride, the beautiful Weippe prairie bursts upon the view. This, too, is a region of alternating forest and meadow, although what is recognized is Weippe prairie proper, lies in the form of a circle fringed with forest. The prairie is a level meadow, perhaps two miles in diameter, and through it sinuously winds Jim Ford's creek. Here have been held, in earlier days, innumerable Indian councils, and for years it was their favorite camping ground. In summer time this historic place was frequented by the Nez Perces. They erected hundreds of lodges, fished and hunted in rippling mountain streams and surrounding game resorts, smoked the pipe of peace or tripped the hideous measures of the war dance. Reluctantly the swart Indian yielded this spot of beauty to the invading white man. He called it the "Weippe," signifying a place of tepees, or "wickiups," a camping and a council ground. And by the name of Weippe prairie has it ever since been known.

But the Pierce City mines were discovered. By thousands the whites passed through the Weippe, driving before them the Indians, although for several years subsequently the red man continued to haunt its precincts and hold therein annual encampments. In the latter seventies permanent settlers succeeded stockmen, and thereafter population continued to increase in a gratifying ratio until now it is all under cultivation and improved, with comfortable farm houses and ample barns, corrals and granaries.

During the year 1884 the government surveyed a large portion of the country lying between the Lolo and Clearwater, and the official opening of this territory was immediately followed by an army of settlers. Four years later, in 1888, a town was laid out on the northern border of the prairie, and named Weippe. Approximate size of the portion which is thickly settled is about twenty-five square miles, although, as before mentioned, the main Weippe prairie is not more than half that size. An estimate of the producing capacity of the land, furnished by farmers in that section, accords timothy hay the first place, which averages three tons to the acre. Oats yield fifty, barley between eighty and ninety bushels per acre, while vegetables and the hardy fruits are raised in large quantities. The soil, a black, vegetable loam, lies about three feet deep, upon a strata of clay, and which is considered an excellent hardpan for the conservation of moisture. The average altitude of this section, as given by Wellington Landon, pioneer settler and owner of the townsite of Weippe, is, approximately, 3,000 feet. Two sawmills, perennially industrious, cut an excellent quality of pine, fir, cedar, tamarack and less important woods. Bands of cattle are not large, ranging from ten to fifty head, but for this number excellent feed is still found. Jim Ford's creek is named after a pioneer wood dealer of Lewiston. Ford came up the Clearwater to this stream, where he cut logs, floated them down the river to Lewiston and converted them into stove wood. Ford's creek is a broad, swift stream and a populous haunt of the finny tribe during the summer and fall. It affords ample water power, and this is, at present, utilized to a great extent. Two miles below Weippe prairie the stream is broken by a graceful waterfall whose murmur may easily be heard, on a clear day, so far away as Weippe. The creek, after leaving the prairie, enters a canyon through which it flows to the Clearwater, debouching into that stream four miles above Oro Fino.

After leaving Weippe prairie the road passes over small ridges and up several streams, lined with pretty meadows, until a low mountain divide, separating Oro Fino creek from Ford's creek, is reached. This is at a point about five miles west of Pierce City. Here one enters a portion of the far-famed white pine belt of northern and central Idaho, and a magnificent piece of timber it is. This timber is of the finest grade and improves in quality and size as the Bitter Root summit is approached. The Weyerhauser syndicate's holdings, amounting to nearly 100,000 acres of white pine, lie adjacent to Pierce City. During the past two years practically every valuable quarter section has been appropriated by scrip filings, and under the stone and timber act. Last season hundreds went into this district and many are still searching for unoccupied tracts. This timber will run from 1,500,000 to 4,000,000 feet to the quarter section. As clear pine lumber now sells at not less than $30 per thousand feet at the railroad, some idea of the values tied up in this immense timber belt may be gained. The entire district is traversed by streams, many of them large enough for logging purposes. Still, the main timber bodies are destined to be tapped by railroads in the future. From the summit of the divide, west of Pierce City, may be gained a fair idea of the country farther inland. With the exception of meadows on the creeks a vast forest covers every foot of the region. From the crest of French mountain, a high divide separating Oro Fino from Oro Grande, creek, the summits of this most rugged and wildest of Idaho mountain chains can be seen. The altitude of the low divide west of Pierce City is, approximately, 4,000, while that of French mountain must be, at least, 6,000 feet. Pierce City is 3,000 feet above the sea level.

It is claimed by residents, and indisputable evidence has borne out the claim, that the meadows along the creeks of this region produce the finest qualities of hay, grain and fruit. Frank Carle, owner of a portion of the townsite of Pierce City, has harvested forty bushels of wheat to the acre, and cuts annually three tons of timothy to the acre. Oro Fino, Lolo and Ford's creeks are the largest streams in this section, their waters flowing into the Clearwater. The Lolo heads at the summit of the Bitter Root range; the Oro Fino and Ford's creeks, about forty miles in length, head further down the slope. All flow westward, the Oro Fino being the most northerly. North of Oro Fino creek a high divide separates the watershed of that stream from the north fork of the Clearwater, the largest branch of this famous river. From its headwaters this stream flows, or rather leaps, through narrow, densely timbered canyons, and hundreds of smaller branches gush forth from precipitous mountain sides to the very summit of the Bitter Root range, contributing their crystal waters to the formation of the mighty torrent below. Its most easterly feeders have never been thoroughly explored. Brave is the man and skillful should be his woodcraft, if he aims to penetrate the broken wilds, among which are the hidden sources of the north fork. It is a primeval region, haunted by moose, elk, bears, cougars, deer and other wild game, a region of impassable canyons, stifling forests and hoary mountain peaks.

Along the eastern canyon of the Clearwater the country is, for the most part, considerably broken and timbered, mainly with yellow pine, for a distance of eight or ten miles back, after which an increasing amount of white pine is found. Practically the canyon bottoms is all under cultivation, and every tillable spot on the canyon's side has been eagerly appropriated by the homeseeker. West of the town of Orofino there are many fine farms, the character of the country being similar to that of the Fraser district, already described. The principal industry is stock-raising. Six miles west of Orofino is the postoffice and settlement of Blake, at which there are a store and postoffice combined, controlled by Edwin Blake. Four years ago, on land owned by Isaac Gregg, a comfortable school house was erected. At present it is attended by nineteen pupils, who are instructed by Chester W. Groves. A petition has been presented to the commissionrs of Shoshone county asking for an appropriation of $1,000 for the purpose of opening a trail on the north fork, from Ahsahka to Big Island, a distance of fifty miles. To this fund it is expected that many private subscriptions will be added, and the trail immediately constructed. This will afford an outlet to a large section of grazing country and several promising mining districts.

The foregoing description of Shoshone county, cursory though it be in many respects, outlines the chief characteristics of the northern and southern portions of this minor political division of Idaho's "Panhandle." In directing attention to a section whose principal source of wealth lies in its mineral deposits, it follows as a corrolary, that the description would be incomplete and unsatisfactory devoid of a general review of its

MINES AND MINING.

Commenting upon the important problem of practical mining in the Coeur d'Alenes, Mr. W. H. Ross says:

"The natural facilities offer exceptional opportunities for economical mining. In most places the angle of the hills rises abruptly from the gulches, affording opportunities for deep explorations by tunnels. The ore, as taken from the mines, is not in marketable condition, but requires concentration. This is done by a very complete but inexpensive process of crushing, screening and "jigging." So cheap is the process of assorting and dressing the ore that but little care is taken in mining it. The ground is worked in large breasts and stopes, and everything that contains ore is put through the mill. In some places large bodies of clear galena are found, and this is sacked and shipped direct from the mine, but the bulk of the values occurs in greater or less quantities of galena, desseminated through a large extent of rock. These mills are ingenious and practical contrivances, being almost automatic. Large quantities of water are used in dressing the ore, and the mills may be said to be only huge washing machines. The product of the mills is called "concentrates," and has a value of about thirty ounces of silver and sixty per cent. lead per ton."

Through the northern portion of the county, from Kingston, a small station on the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company's Idaho extension, situated on the western boundary of Shoshone county, to the Bitter Root mountains, on the east, extends what is known as the silver-lead belt, development of which is still in its infancy. This El Doradian territory lies between the north and south forks of the Coeur d'Alene river, whose confluence is at Ena, near the western boundary of the county. Aside from this vast reach of untold ore values there are two distinct "gold belts;" one north of the south fork, and the other, the "Pierce City belt," or "Pierce District belt," in the southern portion of the county. The important position of Shoshone county in the mineral group of our national industries may be satisfactorily estimated by the fact that its output of lead amounts to nearly one-half of all the lead mined in the United States. The following table, showing the amounts and value of output of Coeur d'Alene silver-lead mines for 1902, while not official, is said by the most prominent mining men in the district to be, approximately, correct:

NAME OF MINE	TONS LEAD	VALUE LEAD	OZ SILVER	VALUE SILVER	TOTAL VALUE
Bunker Hill	17,664.50	$1,193,815.00	886,834	$ 427,680.32	$1,621,495.32

Grand Total	81,479.38	$5,703,556.00	5,527,132	$2,635,578	$8,329,134.96

To these may be added the outputs of the Crown Point, $1,006,047.50; the Golden Chest, in the Murray gold belt, $100,000, and the Coeur d'Alene placers, $65,000. In pure lead and silver the output for 1902 was 87,709 tons of lead and 5,512,289 ounces of silver. The latter figures, obtained from resident officers of the companies, may be considered accurate.

Within the confines of Shoshone county the authentic original discovery of mineral was made in Eleverton gulch, near Osburn, in 1878, by Andrew J. Prichard. The Shoshone county records, however, established the fact that, as early as November 15, 1865, F. D. Schnebly and eleven others, filed articles of incorporation of the Mountain Chief Gold and Silver Mining Company. These properties were located near Mission. They may, and may not, have been in Shoshone county, but it is quite certain they were either within its territory or contiguous to it. In early territorial days Shoshone was the only organized county in north Idaho. Naturally this mining company would seek legal acknowledgement of their claim at the nearest available point. Still, it is certain that for fourteen years thereafter nothing resulted from the alleged location of these rather mythical mines. On the wings of rumor flew the wildest reports all over the northwest, invariably centering at some point near Mission, but nothing was developed; nothing tangible resulted, and the locators appeared to be fully as elusive as the crew of the Flying Dutchman. Not until 1883 did mining operatives enter upon their hegira from California and Montana to Eagle City, Shoshone county, where the Mother Lode was exposed and where, at one period, 5,000 people swarmed and toiled; were fired by hope and sobered by despair.

Of the heaviest mineral producing localities in this country, undoubtedly Canyon creek, debouching into the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene, at Wallace, leads all the rest. At the mouth of this stream is located the Standard mill, which treats all ore from the Standard mine, five miles up the creek. A railway between the mine and mill transports about 550 tons of ore a day, the product of which concentrates in the neighborhood of 2,200 tons a month. Farther up Canyon creek are the Formosa mine and mill, located within one mile of Gem. Next is the Granite, and then the Gem mill, and as one continues his explorations of the upper waters of this wonderful stream he encounters the Mammoth, the Frisco mine and mill, the Black Bear and, at Burke, the Tiger-Poorman concentrator. Canyon creek was the original location in the Silver-Lead belt of Shoshone county, and it has been a most liberal producer since 1887. Today the deeper levels are more generous than were the leads nearer the surface. Identical conditions exist in the Helena & Frisco mine, a property in the same canyon, now down a vertical depth of more than 2,000 feet. It remains for the most conservative deep mining expert to foretell the future of these Midian properties, and he, too, shall lay himself open to the charge of extravagance.

The Nine Mile district, deriving its name from Nine Mile creek, extends in nearly a northerly direction from Wallace, the stream joining the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene river at the depot of the Northern Pacific Railway Company. The most important group of mines and concentrators in this district are the properties of the Black Cloud Company. Aside from these there are the Custer, Tamarack & Chester, Cowan, Blue Grouse and other minor properties. Today the original discoveries are more liberal producers than ever before in their history .

On May 7, 1885, Timothy McCarthy, Timothy Hynes, Frank Hanson and John H. Simmons located the Standard group of claims, all in the Canyon creek mining district, one mile from Burke. They comprise the following patented lode claims: Standard, Snow Line, Banner, Sandwich, Youngstown, Sancho, Parallel, Little Chap, Sullivan Fraction, Mammoth Fraction, portions of the Columbia, Crown Point, Tariff and Tom Reed and the Union millsite, at Wallace. The capital stock of the Standard Mining Company, holding patents on all these claims, is $500,000, in shares of one dollar each. This stock is held, principally, by the Finch & Campbell syndicate, of Youngstown, Ohio, Milwaukee and Chicago. It is officered by Amos B. Campbell, president; John A. Finch, secretary and treasurer, and E. H. Moffitt, Wallace, Idaho, manager. In the fall of 1892 pay ore was struck, since which period it has been a reliable dividend payer. This silver-lead "proposition," assaying from ten to fifteen per cent. lead and from twelve to thirty-five ounces in silver, is one of the best equipped mines, and from the initial period of its development, was under the supervision of Archie McCallum until he was succeeded by E. H. Moffitt. From the mine the ore is transported six miles to a concentrator, at Wallace, the capacity of which is 600 tons of crude ore in twenty-four hours. The original cost of the property was $38,864.80. It has paid $3,000,000 in dividends. Formal incorporation was made in the spring of 1892. The initial tunnel extended was the Standard, 1,700 feet; second, Banner, 2,000 feet; third, Wilson, 800 feet; and the Campbell, 3,300 feet, the latter being now worked, the others abandoned or leased to the owners of the Mammoth mine for transportation purposes.

At the terminus of the Campbell tunnel is a shaft 1,050 feet in depth. There are levels at 200, 450, 600, 800 and 1,000 feet; three compartments, steam and motor hoists, 600-horse-power. Steam and electrical pumps are employed, the company owning one of the latter, manufactured by Allis-Chalmers, built in two units, under a 1,050-foot lift, with a capacity of 250 gallons a minute. This is a "wet" mine, requiring expensive pumping facilities, one of the pumps alone costing $15,000. An electric railway is provided with two 50-ton motors, each hauling twenty cars; capacity one and one-half tons each, the ore from which is transferred to railway cars and hauled to the mill six miles distant. The company employs 260 men at the mines and thirty at the mill. J. H. Neil is superintendent and A. D. Marshall mine foreman. The average capacity of the mill is 550 tons crude ore, concentrating to fifty-five or sixty per cent. lead and forty ounces of silver to the ton. It is a water power mill, supplied by two flumes, one from the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene, and the other from Canyon creek, the former for wash and the latter for pressure. Every day in the year this mill is in operation, with two shifts. Concentrates are loaded direct on cars belonging to the Northern Pacific Railway Company.

Air is supplied at the mine by two compressors, one of the Ingersoll-Sergeant patent, capacity 900 cubic feet per minute; the other an Ingersoll, of 800 cubic feet capacity, both of them being double machines. There are two timber hoists in each level, of ten-horse-power each, using 1,500 lineal feet of stull timber per day, principally red fir. Electrical appliances have been supplied by the General Electric Company of Schnectady, New York, including a 2,300-volt dynamo, 300 incandescent and six arc lights. The average ore body is a fifteen-foot ledge; one thousand feet the length of the stope. The total cost of the mine plant was $300,000. The vein lies east and west, with a dip of between sixty-eight and seventy degrees north. The Campbell tunnel was driven in 1895. At each level is a station twenty feet wide, eighteen feet high and 120 feet long.

The Bunker Hill & Sullivan mine, the "Pandora's Box" of the Coeur d'Alene silver-lead district, is, without doubt, the heaviest single producer in Shoshone county. About eighty claims are embraced in these properties, lying in the immediate vicinity of Wardner. At all periods of the year over 500 men are employed, and many miles of tunnels have been run into the heart of one of the richest mines in this district. The early history of these mines was condensed by F. R. Culbertson, in 1897, as follows:

> In the fall of 1885 the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mines were discovered at Wardner. The surface showings at the discovery were so much larger than anything that had been found up to that time that quite an excitement was created, and numerous other valuable properties were located. Also, during the early part of 1885, the Hunter, Morning and Evening and other properties were discovered at Mullan. The Bunker Hill & Sullivan property was leased by the original locators to Jim Wardner, after whom the town of Wardner was named. Through him some Helena, Montana, parties were interested in the deal, and a contract was entered into with the locators for concentrating 50,000 tons of ore, at $5 a ton, which at this time would be considered an extravagant price. The first concentrator in the district was placed on the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mine, and was built by A. M. Esler, in the interest of the Helena parties having the 50,000 ton contract, and was of 100 tons capacity. Before the expiration of the contract the property was sold to Sim Reed, of Portland, Oregon, who paid the different parties interested in the property at that time about $625,000, at that period considered an extravagant price. Two-thirds of this money found its way to Spokane, Washington, and helped to build up the town. Following a long course of litigation, instituted for the purpose of perfecting the title to the mine, in which a swarm of attorneys are reported to have received an aggregate amount of $100,000, Sim Reed worked the property for several years, selling out to the present company, who are California parties, and members of the Standard Oil Company. The property is now under the management of T. W. Bradley, with head office at San Francisco, California, and F. Burbidge, of Wardner, is resident manager. The company has absorbed all the adjacent claims, and now controls something like forty or fifty locations, adjoining and connecting, and with the exception of the Last Chance Mining Company's properties, they have about all the desirable locations near Wardner. As a whole it is probably the greatest lead property in the world, exceeding that of the Broken Hills mine in Australia, which, heretofore, had been considered the greatest lead producer.

Many rumors have been current throughout the Cœur d'Alenes concerning the discovery of the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mine. One of the most insistently urged is to the effect that a donkey stumbled in the snow and revealed the ledge. A quietus is put to this myth by United States Senator W. B. Heyburn, who says:

> Many fables have been told as to the discovery of the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mines, and while it is not our intention at this time to go into the matter in detail, it is sufficient to say that the story of the jackass is purely a myth. Kellogg, the discoverer, had been furnished with the jackass to pack his provisions some weeks before the discovery of the Bunker Hill, but the animal was not with him at the time, and the discovery of the Bunker Hill was made by him in the ordinary process of prospecting and tracing the outcrop of the ledge from the eastward, across Big Creek, Elk Creek and into Milo gulch.

The night before he discovered the Bunker Hill mine Mr. Kellogg passed at the Polaris cabin, and after breakfast in the morning, assisted by Harry Dennis, who was part owner of the Polaris mine, set up poles along the outcrop of the ledge on that claim, and taking a line from these poles he followed this outcrop across Big Creek, Elk Creek and into Milo Gulch, and by so doing found the outcrop of the Bunker Hill lode, which showed plainly and needed no uncovering by man or animal. The jackass first came into notoriety in the litigation of Cooper and Peck, against Kellogg, involving a grub stake contest, and the mirth of counsel relative to the outfit which had been furnished him by Cooper and Peck, with which to prospect, was, doubtless the original of the many stories told about this famous animal.

These facts are from one who knows.

Among the more prominent mines on Canyon creek at Burke is the Tiger, first located in 1884, and which has proved a steady producer since 1887. John Carton and Almedos Seymour, the original discovers, bonded the mine to John M. Burke and S. S. Glidden for $35,000. Until September, 1887, the only material development in this property was a thirty foot tunnel. During the following winter some work was carried on, but owing to the inaccessibility of the mine but little was accomplished. The property was thoroughly examined in 1885 by Mr. Glidden and F. R. Culbertson, and the latter installed as manager. Trails were cut to the Thompson Falls road, and also to Placer Center, now Wallace, and supplies were packed into the mine from the Mission. The result of an eighty-ton ore test at a smelter proved satisfactory and work was prosecuted on a wagon road from Burke to the Thompson-Murray road at the Summit House. In 1886 a narrow-gauge railroad was extended to Wallace and Mr. Glidden organized the Canyon Creek Railroad Company in 1890. This line was subsequently sold to Mr. Corbin. He disposed of it to the Northern Pacific Railway Company by whom it is now owned and operated.

In 1887 construction was begun on the Tiger concentrator, and machinery shipped to Thompson, from whence it was hauled by wagons to Burke. December 15, 1887, the mill was completed and one year later the Cœur d'Alene Railway, now the Northern Pacific, was finished to Wallace. In January, 1888, the initial shipmen of concentrators was made.

Scott McDonald, for himself, W. S. McCune and A. W. Wertenweiter located the Poorman mine, since consolidated with the Tiger, and known as the Tiger-Poorman, one year after the location of the Tiger. Litigation over this location subsequently ensued, but was amicably adjusted. The right of the Tiger people to the ground claimed as a discovery by Carten was contested in the courts, involving the best legal talent available. This complication was adjusted by Patrick Clark and Simon Healy bonding the interests of the litigants, and Mr. Clark became manager, remaining as such until the consolidation was effected, October 15, 1895. The Poorman mill was constructed in 1888 and ran continuously until destroyed by fire, in March, 1896. The lower workings of the Tiger-Poorman properties are far better today than they were near the surface. The Tiger and Poorman mines were consolidated under the title of the Consolidated Tiger & Poorman Co., capital $1,000,000 in one million shares, half of which are set aside for the stockholders of the Poorman, and half for S. S. Glidden, present owner of the Tiger. The Morning mine, west of Mullan, was located in 1884 by George Goode. Following the superficial opening it was bonded by Lewis Martin, S. M. Franks and Charles Hussey for twenty-five thousand dollars, the bond maturing in 1889. Later it became the property of Warren and Charles Hussey. About one-half mile below Mullan, on the narrow-gauge railway track, a concentrator of two hundred and fifty tons' capacity was built, ore being conveyed from the mines by a cable tramway. Later in 1890 the property passed into the hands of Receiver Peter Porter and was purchased by a Milwaukee syndicate. They organized the Morning Mining & Mill Company. The same year a new concentrator was erected and a railroad run to the mine. Two plans of conducting this mine, one of them co-operative, failed financially, and in 1895 the property was leased and bonded from the Morning Mining & Milling Company by Peter Larsen, of Helena, Montana, and Thomas L. Greenough, of Missoula, Montana. While being worked in connection with the You Like mine it was destroyed by fire April 17, 1898. One week afterward work was commenced on the present mill, and the concentrator put in operation August 15.

Originally the property consisted of the Morning, Evening, Silver King, Silver Queen and Park mining claims, to which have been added the Grouse, Noonday Fraction, Iron Crown, Lauren J. Fraction and Iron Crown Fraction mining claims, all contiguous to the Morning group. The average assay of the ore, a silver-lead product, is five per cent. lead and one and a half ounces silver to the ton; the low grade of ore necessitates handling and working in large quantities. It is mined by a series of tunnels, ten thousand feet in length. These are connected with a level of the railway by a tramway, the railway connecting the mines with a concentrator, being two and three-quarter miles in length. It is claimed that this concentrating plant is the largest in the northwest, and is supplied with the latest, costliest and highest improved mechanical appliances.

What is known as the Paragon group, owned by the Paragon Mining and Manufacturing Company, incorporated, of which L. W. Stedman is superintendent and manager, consists of six claims and one hundred and twenty acres of land, viz: Paragon, Lavanche, Rhea, Ida, Bertha and Julia, the Paragon having been located in 1890 by Charles Tilden and others. Mr. Stedman located the remainder of the claims from time to time. They were purchased for cash by the company in 1899. At the time the company took over the properties developments consisted of a thirty-two foot shaft and tunnel. Mr. Stedman continued the shaft down several feet, in order to secure the trend of the ledge, and then followed the tunnel until a depth of one hundred and sixty feet had been attained. Thence was run a cross-cut which cut the ledge. The mine was supplied with an air shaft of three hundred and thirty-four feet, and also an exploration shaft. On the old works eighteen hundred feet were completed by Mr. Stedman. In order to secure depth a three-hundred-foot shaft is being sunk, on the completion of which it will be necessary to cross-cut a hundred and forty-five feet to catch the ledge. For shaft purposes the company erected a sawmill and cut their own lumber. The silver and lead ore lies in quartzite and slate, the ledge running north of west and south of east, and dips to the south. The discovery ore averaged seventy-eight per cent. lead, six ounces of silver and a little gold to the ton. At a depth of one hundred and sixty feet the ore ran from twenty to forty ounces of silver. The Paragon mine is located three-quarters of a mile west of the state line, in Shoshone county, at an elevation of four thousand two hundred feet. It is connected with the Thompson Falls road by a private roadway one mile in length constructed by the company. The air line distance from Burke is six miles; seven by trail. Of this property the Murray Sun of December 7th, 1902, said:

> The work now being done, and the extensive improvements being made, by the Paragon company, are the natural result of developments made by tunnel in the east side of the mountain. Here exploitation was carried on for several years under Manager Stedman's directions, in a moderate way, until finally it was demonstrated by a cross drift that the company had a ledge fifty feet wide, all but five feet showing concentrating material, with here and there streaks of pure shipping ore. The large extent of the ledge was so clearly proven that the company immediately began arrangements for deeper prospecting on a larger and more far-reaching scale. Hence the present preparations for the installment of heavy machinery for sinking to a greater depth than obtained on the north side.
> The Paragon company has large holdings on Paragon gulch, practically all the ground along both sides, except a number of claims owned by Charles Manley and his associates, and two owned by Mr. Peterson, Charles W. Tilden and Ole Larson, the latter joining the Paragon on the west. An extension of the Paragon on the northwest reaches the claim of John Broderick, which unites the Beartop mines with the Paragon group. The ore belt is no doubt the same, and continues westward for five miles. All the Paragon claims are heavily timbered and there is ample water for concentrating purposes. The Paragon is an incorporated company. The capital stock is two hundred thousand dollars, divided into two hundred thousand shares. The officers are citizens of prominence in St. Paul and they have all visited the camp the past summer. Dr. G. P. Sandberg is president, Dr. George S. Monson, vice-president, F. O. Hammer, secretary and treasurer, N. W. Dunn, attorney, and L. W. Stedman, local manager.

The Mammoth Mining Company, Ltd., is composed mainly of Coeur d'Alene, Portland, Oregon, and Spokane, Washington, capitalists. The mine, of which Richard Wilson is manager and James McCarthy assistant, is on Canyon creek, near Mace, between six and seven miles north from Wallace, the mill being located at the mouth of the creek, at the latter place. The Mammoth mine is a silver-lead property, the principal one of twelve claims and fractions. The working tunnel is three thousand five hundred feet in length, tapping the Selkirk, Combination, Etta No. One, Etta No. Two, Fraction, Tariff and Mammoth. All the ore is at present taken from the Mammoth, at a depth of eighteen hundred feet, the daily output being from three hundred and fifty to four hundred tons, and employing one hundred and seventy-five men. At this writing it is a dry tunnel mine, but a shaft is contemplated in the future. Ore is run by electric motors hauling one and one-quarter ton cars, and dumped into an ore bin, from which it is transported to the mill, at Wallace, by the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company's ore line. The mine is provided with two six-drill air compressors, a fifty-horsepower engine to furnish power for locomotives and lights, and a machine shop supplied with lathes, planers, drills, press, pipe-cutting and threading machines, etc. It is the intention of the company to sink a shaft at the terminus of the three thousand five hundred foot tunnel.

The mill at Wallace is driven by water power supplied from Canyon creek and the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene river, and produces eighteen hundred tons of concentrates per month, which are disposed of to the American Smelting and Refining Company. The mill was built in 1899, was first operated in January, 1900, and has been in constant use since.

It is provided with the latest inventions in mining devices, and its slime capacity is greater than that of any other mill in the Cœur d'Alenes. Its daily capacity is two hundred tons of ore. Work on the structure was begun in 1897, previous to which only crude ore was shipped direct to the smelter. Between 1897 and 1900 the company leased the mill of the Milwaukee Mining Company at Gem. The mine, originally worked in 1890, has been practically developed since then.

The Hunter mine, owned and operated by the Gold-Hunter Mining Company, is one and one-half miles northeast from Mullan, the concentrating mill for the same being on the eastern fringe of the town. The controlling majority of the stock is owned by Messrs. Hennessy and Keeley. Among the great mines of the Cœur d'Alene country it has obtained a prominent standing, and its owners have a good reason to feel proud of their sagacious investment in its group of ore bodies. Since the initial period of its operation the Hunter has produced upwards of two hundred thousand tons of lead and one million dollars in silver. Its net profits exceed five hundred thousand dollars. Under control of the company are large tracts of mineral lands, all most favorably located and patented.

One of the best dividend-paying silver-lead propositions in the Cœur d'Alenes is the Empire State, located in the Wardner district, owned by the Empire State-Idaho Company, which also controls the Tiger-Poorman at Burke. It is said to be a conservative estimate that these two mines, the Empire State and the Tiger-Poorman, produced in 1902 thirty-five thousand tons of ore, running 59 per cent. lead and twenty-six ounces of silver. In the production of lead and silver ores the Empire State is quite enterprising. To the careful and conscientious work of Charles Sweeney, who up to a year ago was manager, is due a large share of the success that has attended this mine.

The Monarch, owned by the Monarch Mining Company, Ltd., is located five miles east of Murray, on the south fork of Prichard creek. The product is lead and silver ore, the property being a consolidation of the Monarch and Barton groups, the new company taking possession in January, 1902. It was located in the winter of 1897-8. There are six thousand feet of development work, the mines being opened principally by cross-cut tunnels and drifts. There are two veins, the Barton and the Monarch. In September, 1902, the twelve-drill, water-power Leyner duplex compressor was installed. A two-thousand-eight-hundred-foot cross-cut tunnel is now being run, over eighteen feet of which are completed. It is anticipated that this will open up the Monarch ore body at a depth of fourteen hundred feet. As outlined by Superintendent E. P. Spalding, the erection of a concentrator will follow the tapping of this ore.

The Hecla mine, located at Burke, is owned by Finch & Campbell and is at present making a steady and successful record of shipments. The company also controls, in connection with the Hecla, the Katie, May, Consolidated Extension, Ironsides, Mascot, Orphan Girl, Orphan Boy, Oronogo, Denver, Leadville, Leadville Fraction, Muscatine, Muscatine Fraction, Burlington, Cræsus, Star, Fox, Rooster, Hecla Fraction, Climax and Silver Knight. Principal developments are in the Hecla, Oronogo, Orphan Boy and Orphan Girl. The Hecla is provided with three tunnels, eight hundred, fifteen hundred and twenty-seven hundred feet in length, respectively. The concentrator, situated at Gem, was erected in the winter of 1893-4. Originally it was of one hundred and fifty tons capacity, which has since been raised to six hundred tons, until it is now the third in size in the Cœur d'Alenes. The mine is run by two ten-hour shifts; the mill by two twelve-hour shifts; the lowest wages being $3.50 and the highest $5 per diem. The output is seventeen thousand tons per month, the ore running 50 per cent. lead and thirty-five ounces of silver.

The Hercules mine, which has been appropriately called "the Wonder of the Camp," is situated about two miles from Burke. It is one of the new developments of this district, the "strike" having been made July 2, 1901. Up to that date it had been simply an encouraging prospect. Its crude product is the richest in the camp and its ore shoots the largest. For their young bonanza the owners have refused a bonding proposition of $2,000,000. The wonderful production of this mine is given elsewhere. The Hercules was discovered by poor men in this world's goods, and one of the present owners, G. Paulson, is said to have secured a half interest in the property for $750. The mine is owned by H. L. Day, sons Harry, Jerome, Eugene, Mrs. E. B. Boyce, G. Paulson, Sylvester Markwell, C. H. Reeves, L. W. Hutton, Dan Cardoner, H. T. Samuels and F. M. Rothrock, all residents of the Cœur d'Alenes. The ore is all clean, shipping quality, and is sent direct to the Everett smelter and New Jersey reduction works. The expenses for operation for 1892, according to the Cœur d'Alene Mining Record, were: Wages, $50,000; freight and treatment charges, $85,000; fuel, timber, repairs, etc., $15,000; total $150,000. This leaves net profits of $170,000, the total gross value of output having been $320,000. This is certainly a grand record for a new mine—unsurpassed in the history of lead mining. The management is now driving a twenty-five-hundred-foot tunnel that will explore the mammoth ore shoot five hundred feet below the upper workings. It is believed this tunnel will open up ore reserves of the value of $1,500,000, and some local mining experts prophesy that the Hercules "will make a $10,000,000 mine." Harry L. Day, Jr., is the manager of the Hercules mine.

On the north fork of the Cœur d'Alene river, twenty miles above the mouth of Prichard creek, there are several copper prospects which show up well. These prospects, carrying copper, gold and silver, are being developed. As yet the stratas found are quite small, not over two or three inches, but exceedingly rich. It is believed that with depth obtained these strata will run together. The surrounding country is quite wild and heavily timbered with white pine, tamarack, fir, spruce and cedar, the cedar and pine principally being suitable for lumber. So far this locality has been prospected only to a limited extent, and is unsurveyed.

In the course of the following resume of the mines and prospects in the Pierce City mining district no attempt is made to recount the history of the early placer diggings discovered in and around Pierce City nearly half a century ago. That interesting story is told elsewhere in this work. Undoubtedly there are millions of dust in the sands and gravel of this famous district. Possibly it may be secured by the indefatigable industry of future miners. But the present prestige of this district rests mainly upon the rich and extensive quartz ledges. It is of this branch of modern mining that our description principally concerns itself.

The first quartz float was picked up by the earlier placer miners. In those days of primitive mining methods, however, only deposits of free gold were sought, and only these were worked. Many stories are current of fabulously rich float quartz having been found as early as 1864 near the old town of Orofino. As these stories, however, are rather mythical and lacking spissitude, it were best to confine our account within the limits of fact. In 1867 no little excitement was occasioned among placer miners by reported discoveries of rich ledges on the divide between Canal gulch and Rhoades' creek, east of Pierce City. For a short time the secret was concealed, but when divulged a rush to the locality immediately ensued. More than fifty claims were located, but alas for human hopes! Rich quartz failed to materialize; excitement soon wore away; no work was done upon the claims. Now, in this connection, it is interesting to note what those pioneer miners considered "rich quartz." Some of it, forwarded to Dr. Day's assay office in Walla Walla by the Nelson Brothers, assayed a hundred and eighty in silver and thirty-five dollars in gold. Still, with lack of transportation and other difficulties to overcome, this assay was not considered sufficiently large to justify working.

Thus remained the status of mining in the Pierce City district until 1893. Auriferous quartz was believed to exist in large bodies, but it had never been discovered in what was considered paying quantities. In 1893 the old Crescent quartz mine, located in the middle sixties by James McCarty, and possessed in turn by Silas W. Moody, who paid $2,000 for it, and subsequently by I. B. Cowan, was by the latter sold to R. N., A. L. and John Dunn, brothers. They immediately opened this virtually abandoned property and discovered a pay ledge which showed flatteringly. A two-stamp mill was installed and for five years Dunn Brothers & Carr profitably worked this property, taking out, it is reported, $50,000. The Crescent Consolidated Mining Company, of which Hon. Willis Sweet is president, secured the property in 1897. They erected a five-stamp gravity mill, the stamps weighing nine hundred pounds each. At present the company has abandoned the old shaft, and are driving a tunnel at the mouth of which the mill is to be placed. The tunnel is down two hundred and fifty feet and will cut the ledge at the depth of three hundred and fifty feet. The vein now being developed is about fourteen inches wide, lies on an incline of about thirty degrees west and carries principally free milling ore. The claims in this group are the Crescent, Bole, Golden, Columbia, Hoodoo, Bond, Twin, Twin Fraction, Washington, Wildcat, Best Chance, Magic, Humbug, and Gem Fraction. They are situated about three miles east from Pierce on Bartlett and Clearwater gulches, tributaries of Rhoades creek.

Commencement work on the Crescent naturally attracted attention of the mining world. The year 1893 witnessed quite an influx of prospectors. For two or three years the camp enjoyed a boom, subsequently suffering a relapse. Meanwhile a number of experienced quartz miners located in the district. Prominent among them were: Dr. H. H. Bole, a veteran miner of Montana; I. D. Cleek, a pioneer Idahoan, and M. A. Ellis. With indomitable perseverance these men continued to work with the gratifying result that Pierce City now has an established reputation as a quartz camp. At present the most distinguished property in the Pierce City district is the Wild Rose. It is located on Clearwater gulch, three and one-half miles east of Pierce City. The ledge was found in 1901 by W. S. Wilkinson, who owns a half interest, J. L. Dunn and M. A. Ellis owning one-quarter each. Last year, in an eighty days' run a three-stamp gravity mill saved $20,000 in gold, aside from many tons of concentrates, averaging $12 a ton. The richness of this ledge may be estimated by the fact that the capacity of the mill is only two tons a day. One hundred and ten feet of shaft has been sunk and about two hundred and fifty feet of drifting completed. The vein is large, thirty-three feet and six inches between walls at a depth of one hundred and ten feet, and contains three principal pay streaks. In the property are included seven claims and a mill site, the Wild Rose having attained the greatest development.

The Santiago property lies on Rose Creek, three and one-half miles northeast of Pierce City. By its owners it is claimed to be the best developed property in the camp. To this group belong the Sampson, Schley, Miles, Shafter and Santiago claims, a veritable Spanish war aggregation. In these several claims more than twelve hundred feet of tunneling has been completed, the principal vein tapped being from six inches to four feet wide, and carrying ore averaging $15, besides rich concentrates. Three years ago a two-stamp, triple-discharge Hendy mill was acquired and is now in operation. M. A. Ellis and James Morrow discovered the Santiago group in 1898. The latter now owns three-eighths, J. A. Morrow and J. C. Johnson the remainder.

On French creek, seven miles east of Pierce City, are located the Golden Gate and Klondyke quartz mines. The Golden Gate is at the head of French creek, contiguous to the Fidelity placer and quartz group on the south. There are thirty-four claims in the group, most of which were located five years ago by Horatio L. Gray, a pioneer of Pierce City. He bonded them to a Cleveland, Ohio, syndicate three years ago, since which period from fifteen to twenty men have been steadily at work developing the property. A Hendy, triple-discharge, two-stamp mill is in operation and about two hundred feet of shaft has been sunk, and seven hundred feet of tunnel driven. In March, 1903, this group was bonded to a New York syndicate for $300,000. The veins run from three to seventeen feet in width. Sample assays have reached $2,500. The ore is free milling, but it is anticipated that with depth it will become refractory. The Klondyke is on Bear gulch, adjoining Golden Gate. There are five claims in this group, on which more than eight hundred feet of underground work has been done. The ledge runs north and south, which is the general trend of all leads in this region. The ore is arsenical sulphides, and when oxidized becomes free milling. The property is owned by the Klondyke Mining and Mill Company. Two years ago a Hammond, self-contained, water power, five-stamp mill and Bartlett concentrator were erected. In the development of this mine I. D. Cleek has been prominent, and is the principal owner. The Fleetwood, another well known property in this district, lies three miles east of Pierce City, in Osborne gulch, a branch of Rhoades' creek. The ore, which is free milling, is the same as other ore in the district. A two-foot ledge has been tapped which assays between $14 and $15. It was discovered in 1899 by Alvin Arnold, who disposed of it to Mr. Coach, of Michigan. In 1901 a three-stamp Hendy, triple-discharge, seven-hundred-and-fifty-pound stamp mill was installed jointly by the Fleetwood and Santiago companies.

One mile and a half east of Pierce City, on Rhoades creek, are three groups showing flattering promise of becoming producing mines. They are the Ozark, Orion and Homestead groups, owned respectively by Frank and William Gaffney and John Pons, the Ohio-Idaho Mining and Development Company, Ltd., and Dr. H. H. Bole. These three groups have shown exceedingly rich ore, a large proportion free milling, the remainder containing rich sulphides. Development in the Ozark is more advanced than in the other two. With only a limited mill capacity, consisting of a steam engine and Bryant rocker, equaling two stamps, gold sufficient to finance one thousand feet of tunnel, thoroughly opening the mine, has been extracted. Last winter the Ozark was bonded to a Spokane company, at the head of which is Judge L. H. Prather, for $60,000. From the Ozark vein sample assays have shown values amounting to $290 a ton, although the average is below this. The Red Cloud is an extension of the Ozark group and included in the bond. The eight claims comprised in the Homestead group are Homestead, Lookout, Samson, Outcrop, McCormick, Big Bar, Overlap and one other. The principal development work has been done in the Lookout, where five hundred and sixty feet of tunnel has been driven, the lower tunnel tapping the vein at one hundred and sixty-five feet, the greatest vein yet attained in the camp. The ore body, a large one, is one hundred feet wide, and high values are found in small streaks in the enormous ledge, carrying quartz assaying from $10 to $128. This property, discovered in 1900, has been continuously developed since. Between the Homestead and Ozark groups lies the Orion, discovered by Dr. H. H. Bole in 1898, and bonded to the present owners in 1901.

Completing the list of prominent properties in this camp is the Dewey, although there are, doubtless, many others which by the time this article is published will have attained to fully as much importance, since the camp is growing rapidly. The Dewey joins the Wild Rose group on the north. It is owned by M. A. Ellis, J. A. Morrow, G. A. Rubeden and R. M. Walker. Over six hundred feet of tunneling has been completed and a fine body of ore opened. Forty-two tons of ore taken from the mine, sampled at a custom mill, averaged $30 a ton.

The greater portion of placer mining in this camp is done on French creek, a tributary of the Oro Grande. French creek, a small stream fifteen miles long, heads on French mountain, several miles east of Pierce City, and flows in a northwesterly direction. The topography of the region is similar to that of southern Shoshone county in general, densely timbered canyons and ravines running in all directions. Although in earlier days considerable placer mining was exploited on French creek, it is universal belief that only a very small portion of the ground has ever been worked. At the junction of French and Oro Grande creeks are Johnson Brothers' group of placers, comprising six claims. At present they are being worked by hydraulic process. The gold is coarse and pure, worth $19.21 an ounce. Adjoining these claims are seventeen belonging to J. P. Walsh and R. J. Kelly. It is said that Joaquin Miller, the Poet of the Sierras, worked these claims as early as 1864, at which period they were rich producers. Between 1895 and 1900 the Idaho Consolidated Gold Placer Mining Company exploited these claims successfully.

The next group of placers on French creek is controlled by the Fidelity Placer Mining and Development Company, Inc., of Spokane. In the group are six placer and two quartz claims. During the past winter a bedrock flume was completed, a new ditch constructed, and in the spring hydraulic operations were commenced. In the 'sixties the ground paid $22 to $30 to the man. At present nine men are employed under management of Christopher C. Garrett, of Salt Lake. These placers appear to have been fed by stringers of development quartz at intervals of a few yards.

Several companies are at work on Oro Fino creek. The Rich Hill Water and Mining Company, of which L. T. Culver, formerly of Pasadena, is manager, owns six hundred acres of ground lying east of Pierce City on what is known as Rich Hill. Twelve thousand dollars has been expended in improving the ditch, purchasing machinery, etc. The ground prospects as high as $2 a yard. The Chicago-Pierce Developing Company has three hundred and twenty acres on Oro Fino creek, beginning four miles up the bed of the creek. The old Gulling ditch, built in the seventies, has been purchased by the company and is used to operate a hydraulic elevator, costing $10,000, with a capacity of two thousand yards a day. Below Pierce on Oro Fino creek another hydraulic elevator will be placed in operation this season by the American Placer Mining Company, which controls the bed of the creek for a distance of eight miles, beginning at Quartz creek. A plant has been installed and a high line ditch, carrying one thousand five hundred inches of water, will be constructed. The elevator will handle about two thousand five hundred yards a day. The Chicago-Spokane Company owns several hundred acres of land on Oro Fino and Rhoades creeks.

Three or four companies are opening extensive placers on Snake creek, nine miles north of Pierce. Most prominent of these companies is the one working the Y. V. Friedman property. A Cleveland syndicate is building an elevator plant on Gold and the Empire Company is operating on Breakfast creek, twelve miles east of Pierce City. A Detroit, Michigan, syndicate has recently acquired the Musselshell Falls group and will do considerable work there the coming season. Many other smaller concerns and private individuals are engaged in restoring the Pierce City district to its primary standing as a placer camp. Undoubtedly the most potent factor in modern placer mining is the use of improved machinery, especially the hydraulic elevator and steam hydraulics. When the rich ground in the vicinity of Pierce Ciey is worked by this method and on an extensive scale, it is not a prediction too sanguine to say that the annual yield cannot be expressed in six figures.

THE MURRAY GOLD BELT.

A synchronous description of the "gold belt of Shoshone county" would be incomplete did it not state that its actualities and possibilities are widely divergent. Lying within an area of twenty miles square, in the extreme northern portion of the county, this gold district has witnessed a variety of exciting and sensational scenes occurring on a variety of dates. Gold has been found in placers to an almost unlimited amount, but in recent years placer has been supplemented by quartz mining. In earlier years the latter method has been neglected for the more readily procured and, apparently, more abundant and richer placer gold. This has been the history of all important gold regions.

It was during the summer and fall of 1883 that the gold belt proper of Shoshone county first came into prominence. Eagle City, which once swarmed with a population of over two thousand enthusiastic gold-seekers, is now one of the deserted mining camps of the district. Yet it was in the immediate vicinity of Eagle that placer gold was first discovered, on Prichard creek, and, by many, A. J. Prichard, for whom the stream was named, is credited with the initial discovery of the yellow metal in this locality. By some this is disputed. However, fabulous reports of the richness and extent of this gold-bearing district soon attracted the attention of thousands. Of this exciting period F. A. Culbertson in July, 1898, said:

"In the spring of 1884 there was quite a stampede into the Cœur d'Alene district, being somewhat similar to the present excitement over Klondyke. Prospectors for the Cœur d'Alenes from the West outfitted at Spokane and proceeded thence by rail to Rathdrum, by stage to Cœur d'Alene City and from this point on by the old Mullan road (built by the government as a military road) to Evolution, about twenty miles above the Mission, and from this point by trail to Eagle City. Prospectors from the East left the main line of the Northern Pacific at Herron and Trout creek and continued thence by trail into the mines. Stories related by old prospectors of the difficulties of getting into the country over these trails remind one of the description and accounts of the Skaguay trail."

Eagle City, in the spring of 1884, had developed into a mining camp of two thousand souls, with all the usual accessories, saloons, dance halls, the lair of the "tiger," etc., and one paid $2 for a meal of bacon and beans, and $1 for a place to "flop" with one's blankets. Five miles up Prichard creek the town of Murray, destined to become the county-seat of Shoshone county, was laid out in 1884, and the same eventful year Thompson Falls, across the line in Montana, was established, and a trail blazed from there to Murray.

November 18, 1884, application No. 1 for a patent to mining property was filed at the United States Land Office, Lewiston, Nez Perces county. The applicants were George B. Ives and John Silverthorn. The application was for the Idaho Bar Placer Claim, near Murray. Application No. 2 was for a patent on the Wolf Placer Claim, owned by Hiram E. Wolf, dated March 31, 1885, and application No. 3 for the Silver City Placer, owned by William G. Shedd, William A. Farish, Commodore P. Crawford, Thomas Lyons, Bernard McDonald and Angus Campbell. It was dated April 20, 1885.

The Mother Lode, one of the richest prospects ever developed in the gold belt, is thus described by Mr. Adam Aulbach in 1891:

The Mother Lode Company started in 1885 with a Spanish arrastra to crush their ore. They have since erected a five-stamp mill, driven by water power, and with these two small affairs crushing the quartz the members of the company are realizing big dividends. The last clean-up, three weeks ago, reached fifty-two pounds of gold bullion, or in the neighborhood of $13,000. This result was from a single month's run. The mine known as the Mother Lode was one of the first quartz lodes located in the Coeur d'Alenes during the rush. It became a great point of attraction and created much excitement on account of the mass of gold that was visible in the croppings which were exposed in Prichard Creek at the foot of a steep mountain. One section of these croppings revealed a flat portion of white quartz, literally covered with the yellow metal. For a year the four owners—D. H. Wilsey, William King, Albert Coolidge and Albert Otto—sat and watched the golden slab, going hungry at times, but always courteous to visitors. One handsome offer after another for this mining property was refused. They were afraid to sell, for fear there might be more wealth in the mine than the offer amounted to. At a rough estimate the mine has yielded $200,000 up to the present date, and is scarcely opened up. Several rich pockets have been found, one of which gave up about $20,000. Nuggets weighing as high as twenty and twenty-seven ounces of pure gold were hammered out of the quartz, and are still in existence at the Spokane National Bank, Spokane, Washington.

Aside from the Mother Lode this group contains the Mother's Boy, Treasure Box, Occident, Chicago, Red Cloud, Mountain Queen, Lost Fraction, Old Shape Fraction and Fourth of July. The ore is a ribbon quartz, carrying considerable iron sulphurets, free gold on the surface growing baser as the ledges are followed, averaging $15 a ton, free milling, and much higher if concentrated and treated. The ledge runs from four to twenty-four inches in width. It is a blanket ledge, extending back into the hill, a peculiar and unusual formation. Quite frequently pockets carrying from $500 to $3,000 were opened. The "golden slab" of the Mother Lode was a slab of quartz sixteen feet square, impregnated with gold to the depth of an inch. From the Mother Lode upwards of $250,000 has been taken and undoubtedly the group has produced half a million dollars. The vein has been followed for about six hundred feet.

Of the group owned by the Daddy Gold Mining Company, located near Mother Lode Hill, the Daddy quartz mine is the most prominent. The company, comprising Coplen Brothers, of Latah, Washington: Robert Horn and Charles Mead, own six claims in the group—the Daddy, Mead, Mead Fraction, Woods, Daddy's Boy and McIntee. In October, 1883, the original Daddy claim was located by B. F. Coplen, George Bartlett and Robert Horn. Development work on the Daddy was commenced in 1891, and in June, 1894, the present mill was erected. Owing to the great railway strike of the A. R. U. machinery was not installed until late in the summer, but from August 28, 1894, the mill ran steadily three years. In 1895 the company purchased the Mead and Mead Fraction for $56,000. In 1898 the mill closed down, since which period it has, at various times, been operated by lease. It is a forty-horse-power steam plant, Nagle engine, Frazier-Chalmers mill and amalgamating plates, Gilpin concentrators. It is provided with an eighty-light, sixteen-candle-power dynamo, operated by water power, and also a complete canvas plant, the only one in the Cœur d'Alenes. It is utilized for conveniently and economically handling base ores, and is the predecessor of the Frue Vanners and Wilfley tables. This mine has produced $250,000, the ore averaging between $8 and $24 a ton. One pocket yielded $15,000. In the future the ore, which has become base, must be worked by the cyanide process, and experiments to that end are now in progress.

The Golden Chest quartz lode, the richest producer in the Shoshone county gold belt, is situated at the head of Reeder gulch, a small stream that empties into Prichard creek from the north, and a short distance east of Murray. The owners of this mine boast of the pioneer stamp mill of the Cœur d'Alenes. On Wednesday, April 15, 1885, it was set in motion. It is a twenty-stamp mill.

In November, 1900, the Golden Chest Mining Company made a settlement that removed litigation that had for several years been pending, and gave the company possession of the Katie, Dora, Paymaster and some other properties, together with the Idaho mill. As expressed by the Murray Sun, this was "a consolidation that had been hoped for by our people for years. The company is now fitting up two stamp batteries, put in some time ago, with concentrators, and in a short time there will be twenty stamps crushing ore at the mouth of Reeder gulch."

The Yosemite Mining Company, comprising John A. Finch, W. W. Hart, E. H. Moffitt and Clarence Cunningham, of Wallace, are the principal owners of the Yosemite. This group of mines consists of the Yosemite and Denver Fraction claims on Prichard creek east of Murray and in the immediate vicinity of the Mother Lode and Daddy groups. The company erected a stamp mill in 1895, provided with a superior equipment. The ore bodies are identical in general character with those of the Mother Lode Hill.

The most prominent operator on Eagle creek, which forms a confluence with Prichard creek at the old town of Eagle, is George F. Viter. It is understood that he controls all available mines on the creek, including Fancy (and Daisy) gulch, about eight miles up the stream. At present the company is doing merely assessment work, but intends to build a hydraulic elevator at the mouth of Fancy gulch during the present year, using the old Mills ditch, taking water from Eagle creek, below White Rock. Mr. Viter succeeds the Sidney Mills Company; Barry Hill is local manager of the property.

As practically illustrative and descriptive of the entire gold belt of northern Shoshone county, the following may prove of interest to all seeking information concerning this golden region:

Three thousand acres of patented ground on Prichard creek, and along the old wash channel on the hill to the north are owned by the Cœur d'Alene Mining Company. William Q. Brown, an experienced California miner, is manager; Fred M. Brown, his brother, superintendent. At present the company is simply prospecting to test the ground and ascertain the better methods of mining it. The old channel diggings can easily be worked by hydraulics, and prospecting is now in progress in Nugget, Buckskin and Drain gulches with encouraging results. Entirely different is the proposition on the creek. Here the bedrock, except where the rim protrudes, lies from twenty-five to thirty feet below the surface. Probably there is no rockier place in the United States. The ground is one mass of bowlders and gravel; expensive to handle and slow of process. Moreover, the bedrock lies on an incline; the gold in seams, sometimes as deep into the bedrock as two feet. This rock, which is hard, has to be thoroughly broken up before the gold can be extracted. The company had at work, on the old Gelatt claim, below Murray, a small Evans elevator. But several months' experience with this appliance convinced the owners that this method is impracticable, being slow and expensive. The machine is now employed in prospecting work. On the ground is machinery for a link-belt elevator. Should it be found practicable to utilize it the same will be put in operation. Its capacity is two thousand yards a day. On these creek claims no pay ore is found until bedrock is reached, and to clean one foot of bedrock it is necessary to remove one cubic yard of earth. Following the installation of a suitable plant several hundred men will doubtless be employed in sifting gold from the North Fork country. For the operation of this elevator water is secured from the old Cœur d'Alene Company's pipe line from Raven; twenty-two inches in diameter and with a pressure of 112 pounds to the square inch at the elevator. Water is supplied to this pipe from a flume extending to Twin Lakes, east of the Montana divide, in Montana. As they are at a greater altitude than the backbone of the divide the water can be conveyed from the lakes into Idaho and used on Prichard creek. Day and night several men are employed at the elevator, of whom S. S. Catching is foreman.

The process of dredging for gold is one of recent introduction in Shoshone county, but it is claimed by mining men to be a practical method. Operating on Beaver Creek, a trifle north of midway between Prichard Creek and the South Fork of the Cœur d'Alene river, are three dredge companies, the Northern, Delta and Mascot. The trio is under one management, Philadelphia capital controlling all of them. J. M. Savage, of Delta, president of each company, is the originator of these enterprises. C. S. Crysler is general manager. Large quantities of placer gold have been taken from several tributaries of Beaver Creek, notably Trail Creek, as well as from the main stream. It is aid to be a conservative estimate that fully $2,000,000 has been taken from Trail Creek alone. Because the bedrock lies between twenty-five and thirty-five feet deep on Beaver Creek, it has been, practically, beyond the range of the poor miner. In building their huge machines, acquiring properties and in preliminary work, the companies have expended not less than $200,000. So far, however, but little ground has been worked.

October 1, 1902, work on the first dredge, that of the Northern Company, was completed. It is located on the Prichard group of claims, on Beaver Creek, two miles northwest of Delta. To the Delta Company belongs the second machine, erected in May, 1903. At present it is at work on the Coulson and Hustes group of claims, one mile west of Delta. The third dredge, property of the Mascot Company, was completed in June, 1903. It is on a larger scale than the two earlier dredges, the hull being longer and wider by several feet, the ladder ten feet longer, and capacity four buckets greater. The ground embraced in the townsite of Delta, at the mouth of Trail Creek, will be thoroughly worked by the latter machine. The buildings of this pioneer mining town are being rapidly removed. Soon nothing but a large, cavernous pit, filled with water and "tailings," will mark the spot where was once a thriving city of more than 1,000 inhabitants.

These three powerful machines are products of the Risdon Iron Works, San Francisco, California, and are made under the Postlethwaite patents. The lumber utilized in their construction is Oregon fir, first grade, and about 60,000 feet were required for each dredge. Their per diem capacity of twenty-four hours is, approximately, 1,800 yards each; theoretical calculation being 2,000 yards. Each is supplied with its own electric lighting plant; a fifty-horse-power boiler provides power to operate the massive machinery. Ordinarily two men are required to operate the dredge, a winchman and engineer, the latter doing his own firing. There are not so many large boulders here as there are in Prichard Creek, and the machines are comparatively easy to work. At mouths of the gulches gold lies all through the earth from the surface to bedrock. On the remainder of the creek no values of consequence are found above the fifteen foot level. Bedrock is termed "soft," and buckets cut into it to a depth of two feet. As in Prichard Creek there is a pay streak which must be followed to obtain gold. The quality of the gold is medium; the form coarse. It is not considered unlikely that the Mascot dredge may uncover some large nuggets, as Trail Creek has produced many of unusual size. Only a few months ago a $1,200 nugget was found in this gulch.

Clearly of the highest type and a triumph of modern mechanism is the Postlethwaite, or Risdon, dredge. It is the result of years of thought and experience of the most skilled mechanics in this line of work. For this dredge a lifetime of fifteen years is claimed by the manufacturers, which is long, considering the strain and pressure incident to gold dredging. The dredge is of continuous-bucket type, with a stiff box-girder ladder nearly seventy feet in length. Quite strong are these brackets, with heavy, chilled steel lips, which owing to a peculiarity in shape and action dig into the hardest ground. There are usually thirty-four buckets, of three and one-fourth feet capacity. They travel at the rate of fourteen a minute, giving a theoretical capacity of 100 cubic yards an hour, which is delivered in an almost continuous stream into a perforated revolving screen. The screen is set on a grade, the heavy material traveling through it and discharging overboard at the stern of the dredge by means of an ingenious and perfect stacker. Into the screen extends a perforated water-pipe, five inches in diameter, and about twenty-five feet long, conveying water at the rate of several hundred gallons a minute, thus thoroughly washing the gravel, and making its way with the gold and fine material through the perforations of the screen into a distributing box. Thence the gravel is washed onto the gold saving tables, a set of which is on each side of the screen. Into sections these tables are divided, covered with cocoa matting and expended metal riffles, one of the notable features of the Risdon machines. Should any gold escape from the first or lower table it is caught in the riffles by a long sluice box which carries all the waste. No quicksilver is used on the Risdon machine except where there is flour gold in the ground.

Water is supplied by a centrifugal pump and the whole of the machinery on the dredge is run by a 100-horse-power, surface-condensing, compound marine engine. The winch has six barrels, four of which control the cable lines running from each corner of the dredge. One regulates the headline, and the other raises and lowers the bucket ladders. By means of the five working lines it is possible to make the dredge assume any particular position within a few moments, the advantage of this over the old method being very decided. A glance at the enormous pile of "tailings" left behind the machine affords eloquent testimony to the immense amount of earth handled by the dredge as compared to the work of the individual miner with pick, shovel and hoist. These "tailings" rear themselves to a height of twenty feet above the water, while underneath it they may be lying on ground thirty-five or forty feet lower than the surface.

At the present writing the Golden Chest and Granite Lodes are the only ones being actively worked on Prichard Creek. Much prospecting, however, is being done throughout this gold belt. The Granite is the property of the Granite and Allie Consolidated Mining Company, formerly known as the Granite Property Stock Company. This was organized December 18, 1902, with the following officers: John E. Steen, president; Louis Prager, vice president; Dr. George S. Lesher, secretary; B. F. Morgan, treasurer. The capital stock is divided into 1,500,000 shares, at one dollar a share. In 1896 a ten-stamp water-power mill, with concentrating plant, was put into the Granite mill. By this means, however, the company was unable to save values, and a forty-ton cyanide plant was secured. There are in the Granite mine 280 feet of tunnel; 100 feet of shaft and cross-cuts, and ore-tunnel. Values are found in sulphide ore in quartz—gold ore strictly. The vein runs northwest and southeast, and is almost vertical, lying betwen quartzite and granite. A large improved cyanide plant, for the Granite mine, is en route from the east.

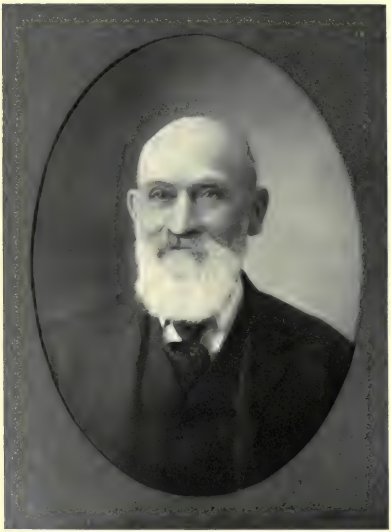
In describing individual properties we have, in the majority of cases, availed ourselves of information furnished by owners themselves, together with such other accurate information as could be found, and have leaned toward conservatism in making statements.

EDUCATIONAL.



Interest in the advancemnt of educational privileges in Shoshone county is constantly increasing. The general topography of this section renders the creation of country school districts almost impossible, with the natural conesquence that, with but few exceptions, these districts are confined within the limits of town organizations.

Edward Hammond, a resident of Weippe prairie, and a graduate of St. Xavier's College, Cincinnati, Ohio, was the first school superintendent of Shoshone county. The first school established in the county was at Pierce City, in a small log cabin on West Main street, taught by Mr. Hammond. It was a subscription school, and the total attendance did not exceed half a dozen pupils. The second term was taught by Edward Scott, an Englishman, formerly of Lewiston, and he was succeeded by Emory Watkins. This was in 1879. In 1883 a school district was created, and in 1895 the present school house was erected in Pierce City. On the authority of Frank Gaffney, a resident of the latter town, it may be stated that the first school taught at Weippe, a private institution, was in charge of Edward Hammond, in a small log building beween the Gaffney and Anderson places, about 1883-84. The term was three months in length, and Mr. Hammond was paid by subscription. There were six or seven pupils. M. L. Butler was the second teacher. Of the Pierce City district, No. 1, in 1879, Patrick Gaffney and C. D. Jones were trustees.

The growth of the educational interests of Shoshone county may be satisfactorily shown by the two contrasting reports of school superintendents. That of Superintendent Hammond, from September 1, 1882, to August 31, 1883, the original report of the county shows, as follows: Total number of children of school age in the county, 12; girls, 4, boys, 8. School months during the year, 7½. Number of scholars, 10; schools, 1; districts, 1; buildings, 1; teachers' salaries, $501.25; incidental expenses, $46.45. During the succeeding year the school term dropped to three and one-half months, ten scholars, and teachers' salaries of only $273.

The report of Mrs. Helen L. Young, Shoshone county school superintendent for 1902, is as follows:

Report for the year ending August 31, 1902. The report for 1903 will show a slight increase all along the line, but the following figures are for the year 1902: Number of districts, regular, 29; independent, 2, 31. School houses, 29; independent, 2, 31. Graded schools, 5; independent, 2, 7. Ungraded schools, 24; teachers employed—male, 12; female, 41; average monthly wages—males, $85.01; females, $72. Number of children between the ages of five and twenty-one years (white), males 1,252; females, 1,196; colored, males, 2; females, 8. Number of children enrolled for the year—males, 1,112; females, 1,021; average daily attendance for the year, 1,297; per cent enrolled, 85.1; per cent of attendance, 66. Average number of months of school for all districts, 201; average number of months of school per district, 6.5.

JUDGE ISRAEL B. COWEN.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

SHOSHONE COUNTY

JUDGE ISRAEL B. COWEN. No man in the entire mining regions of northern Idaho is better known than Judge Cowen, and surely no man is more popular and more highly esteemed than is he. Since the earliest days of discoveries in the Pierce country until the present he has been more or less identified with the district and has been in constant public service, holding the highest offices the people were empowered to grant. In all this career, both of public service and private enterprise, Judge Cowen has been characterized with those moral virtues and the intrinsic worth which is the part and parcel of the true man and loyal citizen.

Israel B. Cowen was born in Buncombe, Lafayette county, Wisconsin, on August 22, 1828, the son of Israel B. and Mary K. (Kinney) Cowen. The father was of Scotch ancestrage and was born in Vermont in 1789. The family has been in the United States for eight generations and noble representatives fought in the war of independence and the struggle of 1812. The mother was born in Zanesville, Ohio, in 1800. When this son was five the family removed to where Warren, Illinois, now stands, and there he was educated and reared. On April 13, 1849, our subject left Galena, Illinois, with a train of immigrants for the west, and via Council Bluffs, Salt Lake and so forth they made their way to Webberville, Eldorado county, California, and young Cowen at once went to mining for himself. He continued for thirteen years, also teaching school for three months in 1853. Then he went via steamer to Portland and Lewiston, landing at the latter place May 27, 1862. He went over the trail on foot to Pierce and mined until 1863, when he carried express for a year to Lewiston, making weekly trips. Then he mined until January 1, 1866, and the following June was elected sheriff of Shoshone county. He served with acceptability for two years and was then elected his own successor, serving until 1871. During his administration the foreigners were all taxed five dollars per month to mine in this district. After this incumbency Mr. Cowen mined until August, 1872, when he visited his old home in Wisconsin and Illinois and also went to Indian Territory, Texas and on to California, then returned to Los Angeles and Prescott, Arizona, and then made his way to Pierce again. He went to mining again and soon bought ground and built a ditch twelve miles long. He continued operating this property until 1893, when he sold it, and since that time has devoted himself to quartz mining. In 1875 Judge Cowen was selected county commissioner of Shoshone county. In 1880 he was elected to the legislature and again in 1884. In 1900 he was elected county commissioner again, and in 1902 he was re-elected. He has been probate judge for a number of years, and also justice of the peace. From 1866 to 1872 Judge Cowen was postmaster at Pierce. It is significant that Judge Cowen was a Republican in principle long before the party was organized. He owns considerable property in Pierce and other places. Thus it is seen that he has been one of the foremost and prominent men of this district for many years and in various capacities, some of them grave with responsibility, he has served his constituency in faithfulness and with efficiency, and now, in the years of the golden period of his life, he is surrounded with many friends and far and near everyone has a good word for the venerable judge and wise and patriotic citizen.

JESSE FREEMAN, who is now one of the proprietors of the Senate saloon at Mace, is one of the skilled and leading miners of the district and has had ample experience in the science of unearthing the precious metals from their resting places to give him the skill and success he has attained in the art. He was born in Indiana, on September 11, 1869, the son of John and Harriet (Raper) Freeman, natives of Indiana also. The father's parents came of English and French stock and were native to Virginia. The mother's parents were natives of Maine. Our subject's perents live in Illinois. He was raised and educated in Illinois principally, receiving a high school training. When nineteen he started out in the world for himself and for a time worked in the Springfield roller mills. Then he turned his attention to mining and for twelve years he followed it assiduously. He has held various positions in the work, as shift boss, foreman and so forth. He was shift boss of the Ibex mine in Colorado two years, superintended the Morning Star mine in Webb City, Missouri, and also the New England mine in Galena, Kansas. He has also been engaged in various mining ventures of his own. Mr. Freeman came to Coeur d'Alene country from Webb City in 1901 and accepted a position in the Standard until April, 1902, when he entered the saloon business. Later he sold an interest to Harmon Carlyle and together they handle the business today. Mr. Freeman has one sister, Mary E. Houston.

On September 2, 1895, at Webb City, Missouri, Mr. Freeman married Jennie B., daughter of James and Sarah J. (Hoops) Gunning, natives of Ohio. The father served three years in an Ohio regiment during the Rebellion and died in 1899. The mother still lives in Jasper county, Missouri. Mrs. Freeman has three brothers and one sister, Clarence E., Seymour, William, Annie Jones. Mr. Freeman is a member of the I. O. O. F. and in political matters he is untrammelled by the tenets of any party and is an independent thinker.

HON. WILLIAM H. CLAGETT. Perhaps no one of the early stalwart and worthy pioneers was better known and respected than the subject of this article. In every line of life, Judge Clagett stood for true principles and high ideals both in private and political life; at all times, and on all questions he ranked the purity and integrity of the home and national life as one, and honesty and justice as their mighty bulwarks.

William Horace Clagett was born in Prince Georges county, Maryland, September 21, 1838. His ancestors dating back to the time of William of Normandy were of ancient English stock. They came to the new world with Lord Baltimore and received from him a land grant which included nearly all of what is now Marlboro and Prince Georges county, Maryland. His father, Thomas William Clagett, an abolitionist in advance of his generation, removed to Keokuk, Iowa, in 1850, and became district judge. Later, as editor of the Constitution, he dealt forceful blows against the monster, slavery, and during the Civil war was subjected to mob violence at the hands of southern sympathizers.

The subject of this sketch was educated in Keokuk and at the Albany Law School of New York, and admitted to the bar in 1858. In 1861 he crossed the plains to Carson City, Nevada, and later, in Humbolt, rose to distinction in his chosen profession. He was a member of the Nevada territorial house of representatives in 1862 and reelected in 1864 upon the admission of the state.

In 1864 he stumped Nevada on the Republican ticket which elected William M. Steward as United States senator and in this campaign made the reputation as a political speaker which won for him the title of "the silver tongued orator of the west," which soubriquet he justly held throughout the whole northwest for nearly forty years.

In 1866 he removed to Montana and was elected delegate to congress from that territory in 1870. For some years he has taken an active political part in the Mormon question and while in the National Legislature, thrilled the nation with eloquent speeches against the Mormon church, against its distinctive religious tenet of polygamy and against the atrocities committed in the name of the church upon men, women and children. Years after when the Edmunds bill was passed which abolished polygamy these speeches were recalled and Mr. Clagett was frequently alluded to as the originator of the movement which culminated in the Edmunds law. He was one of the original drafters of the bill and procured its passage, which established the present National Park at the head waters of the Yellowstone. The preservation of this park, now famous as a land of wonder the world over, should alone entitle Mr. Clagett to high rank in the history of the northwest. He also secured the passage of the mineral land act of 1872 and assisted in other important mining laws; introduced the bill establishing the United States assay office at Helena and later was associated with James A. Garfield (afterwards president) as especial United States counsel in several prosecutions for frauds in the Indian service and in apportionments of Indian reservations throughout Montana.

In 1872 he was a candidate for reelection but was defeated largely through the hospitality and instrumentality of the Mormons. He removed to Deadwood, Black Hills in 1877, where for five years he won distinction as a prominent and most successful lawyer, winning some of the most noted cases in mining litigation which have ever been appealed to the United States Supreme Court. After the discovery of gold in the Coeur d'Alene country in the winter of 1883-4 Judge Clagett, then a resident of Portland, stampeded into the new bonanza field, locating at Eagle City. When the rich strikes were made on Prichard creek, Mr. Clagett's cabin was the first one put up in Murray. Here ample opportunity was afforded for him to show forth the rich kindness and generosity of his nature and many a sick frontiersman owes his life to the tender nursing and hospitable care received at his hands. It became a veritable hospital to those suffering from exposure and deprivation. Possessing some practical knowledge of medicine, Mr. Clagett was the first to extend a helping hand to sufferers of that winter, and in their hearts tender memories will ever dwell.

He was president of the Constitutional Convention of Idaho in 1889 and to his advice is largely due many of the wisest features of the Idaho constitution. In 1891 he made the fight for United States senator against Senator Dubois but the latter was declared elected. He contested Dubois' election, had the privilege of the United States senate chambers and in his own behalf, made a speech and argument that astonished the venerable senators. Dubois however retained his seat. He was again candidate for the senate from Idaho in 1895 but was defeated by Heitfeldt. Friends and foes alike unite in believing he was too uncompromising to succeed in politics. His motto was "win honestly or die game;" political intrigue, policy or expediency were unused weapons in his campaigns, and state and national questions were ever handled by him from the ethical standpoint instead of along party lines. A natural reformer wherever he was, he advocated and fought for changes and measures to make things better. His earnestness and sincerity won for him the admiration and devotion of many friends and even his enemies had for him a genuine respect.

From 1895 to 1901 he traveled much for his health and practiced law in Spokane, Washington, in which place he died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mabel C. Lucas, on August 4, 1901.

In 1861 Mr. Clagett married Mrs. Mary E. Hart of Keokuk, a niece of Oliver P. Morton, the famous war governor of Indiana. She survives her husband and resides in Portland, Oregon. Of the nine children born to this union, eight are living and are named as follows: Dr. Mary Clagett of Chicago; Ida B.; Emma G.; Mabel C. Lucas of Spokane, Washington; Thomas W. of Sunset, Washington; George D. of Nome, Alaska; William H. of Wallace, Idaho; Grace Clagett of Portland, Oregon.

In a tribute to his memory, a friend of forty years says of him: "He will always be remembered as an historic character in the upbuilding of the great northwest and when in future years, the west shall build a Hall of Fame for her immortals, in a niche where the sunlight falls softest there should be placed a statue of William H. Clagett."

LEWIS L. SWEET, in company with O. M. Grant, handles the Wallace hotel, the leading hostelry of the city. His past experience, genial manner, and untiring care for the comfort of guests, enable him to manage a popular and first class house, which is appreciated by a traveling public.

Lewis L. Sweet was born in Pennsylvania, on March 21, 1857, being the son of Ambrose M. and Maria (Buckbee) Sweet, natives of New York. The father was engaged by the government to construct railroads during the Civil war and he was wounded by guerrilla bands. He died in 1896, aged seventy-five. Three of his brothers had sons in the war and one, Horace, died in Andersonville. The Sweet family is one of the oldest and most prominent of colonial days. The mother of our subject was born of English ancestry and died in 1887, aged fifty-eight. Our subject was reared on a Pennsylvania farm until twelve and then went with the family to Michigan. He finished his education in the graded and the Brighton Union schools. When eighteen, he entered the lumber business and followed it steadily for six years. In the spring of 1881 Mr. Sweet came to the Salmon river mines and did mining, transporting ore and machinery, handled the amalgamating in a large mill for ten years and then went to Portland and took up the meat business for a time. Thence he came to Wallace with a horse and cart and an invoice showed him possessed of two dimes when he landed here. This was in the fall of 1891. Later he opened a saloon in Gem with Wm. R. Stimson as partner, which they closed when the strike came on. He prospected awhile and then opened the bimetallic hotel and bar in Wallace and later operated the old Utley house. In August, 1894, Mr. Sweet went to the Clearwater placers and came thence on snow shoes in the dead of winter. He operated a saloon in Kingston, worked for Al Steers, ran an engine for the Frisco mine, operated a confection and cigar store in Gem and in 1898 opened a bar and restaurant in the Jones and Dean block. On April 1, 1901, he sold out and took charge of the Wallace hotel, where we find him at present handling a good trade. Mr. Sweet has three brothers, George W., Eugene W., and Melvin M.

On January 8, 1891 Mr. Sweet married Laura E. Jones, whose family all live in Detroit, Michigan, except her father, who is dead. Mr. Sweet is a member of the I. O. O. F., Custer Lodge No. 21; of the Custer Encampment Lodge No. 10; of the Rebekahs; of the Eagles, Wallace Aerie, No. 54, being past president; of the I. O. R. M., being past sachem of Lakota Tribe No. 13; of the Foresters of America, being past chief ranger of the Coeur d'Alene Lodge No. 9. Mr. Sweet is treasurer of the board of trade and of the fire department. He is popular and stands well, having a host of warm friends.

SAMUEL NORMAN is one of the old pioneers of the Eagle excitement times and has mined all through the Coeur d'Alene country with varying success, while also he has travelled all over the west and wrought in various capacities. He was born in New Jersey on October 31, 1862, the son of Samuel and Emma (Harker) Norman, natives of Norway and New Jersey, respectively. The father was a machinist on a Cuban sugar plantation and died just before our subject was born. The mother then married, when subject was four, Edward L. Stratton, whose father was a United States congressman. The mother's ancestors were American patriots for generations back, served in the Indian troubles, fought in the Revolution and in the war of 1812. Mr. Stratton fought in the Civil war and lost a leg in the battle of Chancellorsville. They now dwell at Mellica Hill, New Jersey. Our subject was reared in his native state, gained a public school education and when eighteen came west, having promised his mother to write to her once every week and come back when twenty-one. He was in Colorado, rode the range, went to Montana, was engaged variously, was quarantined for smallpox, which proved to be chicken pox, then fell in with Hoffman of Spokane and they rode handcar and walked seeking a job, worked on a farm and then our subject went home to redeem his promise and after a two weeks' visit came back to Montana and in 1884 came with a company to Eagle City, hauling freight on a toboggan and when in Murray, on April 1, 1884, they pitched a tent and soon had located a claim in Dream gulch, our subject, Hoffman, J. A. Alger, Beck and another one being partners. They worked on a ditch to get a start and later mined and after a summer's work they cleaned up one hundred dollars. Their claim was jumped but afterward was returned to them. Our subject then went to Pendleton, then visited an aunt in Portland and coming back to Pendleton found some of the old partners and they decided to try the old claim. They refused to pay a man to show them the pay streak and later found it and took out as high as one hundred and fifty dollars per day to the man. Several thousand dollars rewarded their work that summer and then our subject bought a farm which he sold later to a good advantage. Since that time Mr. Norman has given his attention to packing and mining and is now mining entirely. He is a well known and energetic miner and skillful in the art. He has one brother, Harry, and one half brother, Edward L. Stratton, also three sisters, Sarah M. Harley, Deborah H., Emma.

On March 21, 1900, at Wallace, Mr. Norman married Miss Annie B., daughter of Gorge and Annie Johnson, natives of Norway and now deceased. Mrs. Norman has two brothers, George and Bennett. Mr. Norman is a member of the K. P., being past chancellor, and of the Red Men and the Miners.

FRED H. KELLY. Wallace is especially favored with a corps of business men who are thoroughly practical and of wide experience in the walks of life; one of the prominent participants in the commercial and industrial realm here is mentioned at the head of this sketch and a detailed account of his career will be quite in place in the history of this county.

Fred H. Kelly was born in Detroit, Michigan, on April 2, 1870, being the son of Fred H. and Emma (Hafften) Kelly. The father was born in New York state and served through the entire Civil war as captain in the New York artillery, and was active all the time. He was wounded in the leg and then had charge of prisoners. He died in Portland, Oregon, in 1885, aged seventy-two. The mother of our subject was born in Germany, came to the United States when twelve years old, married in New York state, and now lives in San Francisco. Our subject was educated in the graded schools and when he was fifteen the family removed from Chicago to San Francisco and later went to Portland. He traveled about and wrought in various capacities on the Pacific coast and in Mexico, also making three trips to the east before 1895, when he settled permanently in Wallace. Since that time Mr. Kelly has conducted a large painting establishment, where he also deals in supplies in this line. He does a house and carriage painting business and has done some of the best pieces of work in Wallace, including the finest buildings and residences. In season, Mr. Kelly handles about fourteen men and has a thriving business. He also does fine sign writing. Mr. Kelly has two sisters, Mrs. A. E. Raleigh, a widow residing in San Francisco; Mrs. F. M. Street, in Butte, Montana, whose husband is an insurance man.

On March 15, 1892, Mr. Kelly married Miss Carrie M., daughter of William and Elizabeth Marple, of Smartville, California. The mother is deceased, but the father is following his trade of blacksmith in his home town. He is also a mine owner and crossed the plains in 1848 with his wife and family. Mrs. Kelly has five brothers and one sister, Harry, Samuel, Charles, George, Fred, Mrs. Fanny Hapgood, all in Smartville. Charles has just returned from Manila, having been in the Eleventh United States Regular Infantry. Our subject and his estimable wife have one son, Fred B., aged nine. Mr. Kelly is a member of the I. O. R. M., Latoka Tribe No. 13, being sachem; of the Eagles, Aerie 54, being president; and is the present chief of the fire department, having served one term previous. Mr. Kelly is popular in his fraternal relations as in general and is one of the substantial and highly esteemed men of the city.

THOMAS N. BARNARD. A thorough gentleman, a fine artist, a substantial and progressive citizen, a man up to the times and handling the leading gallery with a choice assortment of art goods including a complete and excellent collection of views of this coutry which he has made himself, we are consrained to grant to Mr. Bernard a representation in this volume as one of the leading men of Wallace.

Thomas N. Barnard was born in Belmont county, Ohio, on November 30, 1861, being the son of Charles and Narcissa (Newport) Barnard. The father was born in the Isle of Wight and came with his people to Wheeling, West Virginia, when he was eighteen months old. He grew up there and followed horticulture, having one of the best and the first nursery in that section. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio and her father and mother were natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia, respectively. They were Quakers for many generations back, and while the family would not carry arms, they gave liberally to the American cause and supported it with enthusiasm and during the Civil war were strongly Union. Our subject was raised in Iowa until nineteen, graduated from the high school, then went to Miles City, Montana and worked three years in a photograph gallery. In 1883 he came to Oregon, visiting Pendleton, Portland and other portions of the Willamette valley, and then settled in the Horse Heaven country in Washington, being the pioneer of that section. He followed ranching and contracting in these places and in North Yakima and in 1887 he opened a gallery in Murray. One year later, he removed to Wardner and two years from that date he came to Wallace. He opened a gallery and an art store and in the great fire of 1890, he lost all. But with enthusiasm he went forward and erected a fine structure at the corner of Fourth and Cedar streets and here he is carrying on his business at present. Mr. Barnard makes a specialty of first class view work and has some choice pictures. He has one brother and two sisters, Charles, in Springview, Nebraska; Mrs. R. O. Manson, in Sibley, Iowa; Mrs. Frank Murphy, in Castana, Iowa.

In March, 1888, Mr. Barnard married Miss Laurel Larsen, whose parents died when she was young. She has one brother and one sister, Charles, a prominent builder and lumber dealer in Miles City, Montana; Mrs. L. J. Whitney, in Seattle, Washington. Three children have been born to our subject and his wife, Enoch, Nathan, and William, aged thirteen, seven, and six, respectively. Mr. Barnard is a member of the K. of P., Wallace Lodge No. 9, being past C. C.; of the Elks; of the W. W., Wallace Camp No. 279. He is independent in political faith and binds himself to the tenets of no party, preferring to be untrammelled in his thoughts on the questions of the day. Mr. Barnard has been mayor of Wallace. He is greatly interested in prospecting and mining and owns valuable interests in mining properties of merit. He is a popular business man, handles a thriving patronage and he and his wife are admired by many friends, being held in high esteem in the best circles.

ROBERT C. STUART, who is master mechanic at the Hecla mine at Burke, Idaho, is a native of Wythe county, Virginia. In due time he matriculated in the Polytechnic college at Blacksburg, in his native state. In 1895 he took the degree of Bachelor of Science from this institution. In 1898 he came west and gave himself to his profession of civl engineer. In various mines and different districts he has wrought with distinction, and at the present time is holding a responsible position as stated above.

WILLIAM J. BRAND is well and favorably known in the Coeur d'Alene country, is a man of ability and trustworthiness and has won, by reason of real worth and meritorious conduct, the esteem and confidence of all who may have the pleasure of his acquaintance. He was born in West Virginia on December 11, 1866, the son of John F. and Martha (Deem) Brand, natives of Virginia. The father served in the Rebellion in Company E, Thirteenth West Virginia Cavalry for three and one half years. He languished a term in Libby prison and finally escaped. He now lives in Wood county, West Virginia, where also his wife still lives. Our subject was educated in the district school, then took a complete course in the state normal. While taking this latter course he spent two years in teaching and subsequent to his graduation, he taught for three years. In 1891 he came to Colorado and went to mining. Cripple creek was the scene of his labors for a time and then he took the foremanship of a large irrigating company for three years. After that he went to California and for two years had charge of the London Gold Tunnel Company's works in Shasta county. Then for two years was hoistman in the National mine for the same company. Next we see him in the Standard in the Coeur d'Alene country and for eighteen months he was shift boss and for the past two and one-half years he has held the responsible position of foreman of the Standard mine and in this capacity has shown excellent skill and ability which commends him to all, while his integrity and uprightness are commensurate therewith. Mr. Brand has five brothers, Albert, Emery, Samuel, Isaac, Brady.

On April 30, 1900, Mr. Brand married Miss Nellie, daughter of Edwin and Mary (Hatton) Markwick, natives of England and now living in Redding, California, where his marriage occurred. Mrs. Brand is a native of California and has two brothers and one sister, Frederick, Warren, Mrs. Lizzie Tipton. Mr. Brand is a member of the Elks and is a stanch Republican and was a delegate to the last county convention.

GEORGE E. HOVEY, an intelligent and industrious young man of Burke, is one of the rising business men of the place, and is held in good standing, while his geniality, capability and close attention to business commend him to all. He is at the present time assistant postmaster under Mr. Cogswell, and in this capacity he transacts the business of the portion dependent upon him in an efficient manner and displays those qualities which have made him friends from all classes.

George E. Hovey was born in Toledo, Ohio, on May 9, 1881, the son of George and Lena (Schliff) Hovey, natives of Ohio. The father died when this son was an infant, and the grandfather of our subject fought for the union in the Civil war. The mother married Clement J. Howell, a contractor and builder of Spokane, where they now dwell. Our subject has two brothers, William and Edwin. He was raised in Toledo until fifteen, attending the public schools of that city. At that time the family came to Spokane and he came with them and there he completed in 1900 a course in the Blair College. Immediately following that he came to Burke and took a position with the Tiger mine as bookkeeper, which he held for one year, and then accepted his present incumbency. Mr. Hovey is an enthusiastic member of the Elks and the K. P., and in political persuasion he is a Republican.

AL C. CRAWFORD is a popular and successful business man of Wallace, whose affability, integrity and courteous treatment of all have given him a first class standing and the reward of a thriving patronage in his shoe store, where he carries a complete and choice stock of the best goods.

Al C. Crawford was born in Prince Edward Island, Canada, on November 21, 1868, the son of John J. and Matilda (Wallace) Crawford. The father was born in Prince Edward Island of Scotch descent, and died in Wallace in 1900, aged eighty-two. The mother was born in Nova Scotia and died in Prince Edward Island in December, 1898, aged sixty-four. Mr. Crawford remained at home until eighteen, when he graduated from the high school and then came to Minnesota. He was engaged in various employments there and in Dakota. In December, 1887, he went to Colorado and visited the leading camps, and the following year came on to Portland, Oregon. He was with the engineer corps on government work for a year there, and 1889 found him in the Coeur d'Alene country. He did railroad construction for a year, wrought in the mines as millwright until 1896, when he went home. In 1899 he returned to Wallace and bought his present business. He has done well since that time and has the leading house in his line in the city. Mr. Crawford has one brother and four sisters: Ernest E., a minister in the Christian church at Akron, Ohio; Hattie M., living with subject; Mrs. R. E. Bagnall, whose husband is general agent for the New York Life Insurance company in Boston; Mrs. C. D. Bell, whose husband is an insurance man in Prince Edward Island; and Mrs. M. F. Callback, in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Crawford was married on January 1, 1902, to Miss Lillian E. Lay, of Tacoma. Her father was a prominent attorney in Canada and died when young. Her mother lives in Tacoma. Mrs. Crawford has one sister and two brothers: Lucia M., holding the chair of modern languages in Whitworth College, Tacoma; Lynds D., in the office of the auditor of Pierce county, Washington; Benjamin S., a fruit raiser near Tacoma. Mr. Crawford is a member of the K. P., Wallace lodge, No. 9, being past C. C.; of the B. P. O. E., Coeur d'Alene Lodge, No. 331; and of the Independent Order of Foresters in Canada.

WILLIAM F. FRAZER is the engineer for the Tiger mine in the compressor department, and is a substantial and well liked man, capable in his trade and a skilled mechanic, whose broad experience and ability vouch the best results of the craft known to the age. He was born in Watertown, New York, on November 14, 1818, the son of John and Margaret (White) Frazer. The father was born in Watertown and his parents were natives of Scotland. He died in his native place in 1895, aged ninety-seven. The mother was born in Richmond, Virginia, and died at Watertown in 1894, aged eighty-eight. The grandfather of William F. was a veteran of the war of 1812. Our subject spent the first decade of his existence in Watertown, and then went to New York alone and sold papers and also followed other occupations until eighteen. Then he went to Troy, New York, and served three years as apprentice in the Starbuck iron works, and afterward followed his trade for twenty years, erecting machinery in Troy and vicinity. After this he went to Morristown, New Jersey, and for six years was with the Ingersoll steam drill works and traveled all over the country, installing their machinery in mines. In 1873 Mr. Frazer went to Venezuela for the Orinoco Exploring and Mining Company as master mechanic, and spent three years in that capacity. In 1876 he returned to eastern Ontario to accept the position of superintendent of the Mississippi Iron mines. Three years later, we find Mr. Frazer at Fort William, Ontario, as assistant master mechanic of the Canadian Pacific railroads shops. In 1888 he was chief engineer for the Thomas Iron Company, of Duluth, Minnesota, whence in 1889 he came to the Coeur d'Alene country, and since that time he has remained in this place. He spent two years in the machine shop and then took his present position in the compressor. Mr. Frazer has three brothers and two sisters: Robert, Samuel, James, Mrs. Margaret Burns, Mrs. Mary Chamberlain.

At Troy, New York, in 1866, Mr. Frazer married Agnes Hamilton, a native of Scotland. She died in 1873, at Troy, and no children survive. At Morristown, New Jersey, in 1875, Mr. Frazer married Katherine E., daughter of John G. and Martha (Stevens) Schenck, natives of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, respectively. The father came from Dutch stock, and the mother is descended from one of the oldest families in New Jersey. Her father was a patriot in the war of 1812. Mrs. Frazer was born in Morristown. Two children have come to bless this marriage, Florence E. and Annie E. Mrs. Frazer and her daughters are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Frazer has a four-acre orchard in Clarkston, Washington, and eventually intends to make it the family home.

ALBERT H. FEATHERSTONE. Shoshone county is not lacking members of the legal profession who stand with the best in the state of Idaho; the well known and popular young attorney mentioned at the head of this article is one of the prominent and capable members of the Wallace bar, and during the time of his practice here he has demonstrated himself to be possessed of excellent ability as a first class lawyer, fortified with a fund of legal lore and given to deep study, so that he is a worthy antagonist to the best this country can afford, while his success and intrinsic worth have given him a fine clientage, which is constantly increasing.

Albert H. Featherstone was born in Goodhue county, Minnesota, on October 27, 1869, being the son of William J. and Helen (Leavitt) Featherstone, natives of Canada and Ohio, respectively, and now living in Featherstone township, Minnesota. Our subject was reared in his native place, gained a primary education in the public schools and then completed his literary training in the state university. Following this he taught for four years and then took a thorough course in the university in law, receiving, upon his graduation, the degree of L.L. M. In 1898 Mr. Featherstone came to Wallace and at once opened an office, and since that time he has been constantly gaining a fine practice and stands today one of the substantial men, progressive and patriotic citizens, and leading attorneys of this section. Mr. Featherstone has been elected justice of the peace on the Republican ticket, and has been deputy sheriff. He has two sisters: Mrs. H. B. Fryberger, of Duluth, Minnesota; Ora, single, and teaching languages in the Zumbrota high school, Minnesota.

On December 11, 1901, Mr. Featherstone married Miss Grace, daughter of Leonidas and Julia Poe, formerly of Cannon Falls, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Featherstone are popular people in the leading circles of society and are admired by hosts of friends.

JOHN C. BROWN is the popular and efficient foreman of the Hecla mines, having arisen to that responsible position by reason of real merit and close attention to business. He stands well in the community, is popular and a man of reliability.

John C. Brown was born in Vandalia, Illinois, on October 13, 1871, the son of John and Margaret (McAfee) Brown, who now dwell at Usk, Washington. The father was born in Ireland and the mother in Ohio, and is of Scotch ancestry. Our subject was reared in Illinois until seventeen, gained a good common schooling, and then came west and went to work in 1889 in the Coeur d'Alene mines. He wrought first in the Frisco, then in the Gem, and also in different properties. He held different positions, being shift boss in the Standard for two years, after which he accepted his present position, and since has been an efficient and faithful incumbent. He assumed the duties of foreman on January 13, 1902. Mr. Brown has one brother and four sisters: George, Mrs. R. K. Neill, Mrs. J. H. Neill, Bessie, Margaret.

On August 6, 1896, at Friday Habor, Washington, Mr. Brown married Miss Lelia L., daughter of L. C. and Celia Larson, natives or Norway and the United States, respectively. Mr. Larson lives in Friday Harbor, and devotes himself to the culture of fruit. He is auditor of his county. Mrs. Brown has four brothers and six sisters: Clarence, Loyal, Roy, Curtis, Mrs. Fred Nichols, Edna, Myrtle, Ivy, Eeulah, Floy. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Brown: Sherman L., Margaret M., Myrtle V. Mr. Brown is a member of the K. P. and is a man of excellent standing among the people and has displayed those qualities of worth which win success in the business world.

ANGUS D. MARSHALL is one of the most thorough mining men of the Coeur d'Alene country, and the outline of his various labors in a long and active career in this industry will be interesting to all readers of the history.

Angus D. Marshall was born in Nova Scotia, on April 1, 1853, the son of John and Wilena (Douglass) Marshall, natives of Scotland. The father died in California when this son was young. He was one of the first pioneers to the Golden state, and wrought at mining. The mother died in February, 1902, at Fargo, North Dakota. Our subject was taken to California by his parents when an infant in arms, going thence by the Isthmus. In California and Nevada he was reared and educated. He at once went to mining on arriving at sufficient age and in all departments of the art he has continued since. He has mined in all the prominent districts on the coast and in central western United States, in Mexico, old and new, and in all intervening places. In 1880 he was superintendent of the Silver Ord at Leadville, continuing three years, then held the same position in the Lillian also in several other properties there. Next we see Mr. Marshall in Montana superintending, the Granite Mountain mine, where eight years were spent. He opened up the Monte Christo in Washington in 1893 and superintended it one year, then was with the Marysville mine in Montana, then handled the Drum Lummond, being in charge of that property for nearly seven years. Next we see Mr. Marshall in Burke, and for two years he was superintendent of the Frisco. In January, 1902, he accepted the superintendency of the Standard, and since that time he has devoted himself to this property. He has the following brothers: Henry, James W., John R., Daniel, George G., Alexander, Dougall L.

At Missoula, Montana, in 1890, Mr. Marshall married Miss Mary M. Cumming, a native of Boston, Massachusetts. She has one brother, William C. Four children have been born to this marriage: Wilena D., Georgie G., Mildred, John, all at home. Mr. Marshall is a member of the A. F. & A. M., also the R. A. chapter, the K. T. commandery, the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, while he and his wife belong to the O. E. S. Mr. Marshall is past master. He is Republican in political persuasion and while not especially active is interested in the welfare and advancement of the community and state.

CARL H. MALLON, an intelligent and prosperous business man of Wallace, is proprietor of the Wallace brewery and bottling works, and is also an ice dealer. He was born January 2, 1844, in Russia, but was raised in Germany. He took a special course in chemistry and learned the brewing business. He was back and forth between this country and Germany until 1870, when he was conscripted in the German army, and served through the Franco-Prussian war. After the close of the war he came to the United States and lived in Chicago for several years, engaged in the brewing business, and in 1883 he came to the Coeur d'Alene country. In February, 1884, he opened a brewery at Belknap, on the state line and it was the first plant of its kind in this section. In May, 1884, he removed to Murray and there remained until 1889. He operated the first brewery and bottling works in the country. At the last date mentioned he came to Wallace and here he has done business since, being a successful man and doing a thriving trade. Mr. Mallon has one brother and one sister, living.

In 1884 Mr. Mallon married Maggie, daughter of Henry and Marie Holts, pioneers of Montana in 1863, coming across the plains. To this happy union there have been born five children: Minnie, Pansy, Rose Marie, living. One of Mr. Mallon's daughters has a very valuable stamp collection, worth several thousand dollars. Mr. Mallon is a member of a number of different fraternal orders, among them being the Masons, the B. P. O. E., the A. O. U. W., the I. O.

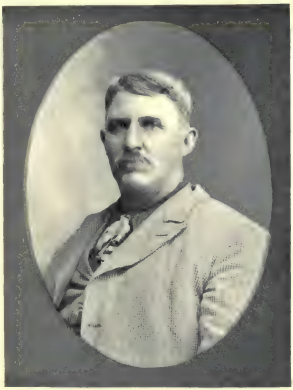
R. M., the Foresters of America, the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Mr. Mallon is very popular in these orders, as he is in his standing also. He has been chief of the fire department and also has served on the city council, being efficient in all these varied capacities.

WILLIAM H. FARRELL is master mechanic at the Standard mine at Mace, and in this capacity has rendered excellent service for a number of years. He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, on April 20, 1863, the son of Henry and Margaret (Hartrey) Farrell. The father was born in Liverpool, England, came to the United States in 1848 with his parents, who located at Green Bay, Wisconsin. His grandfather was for many years master mechanic in Liverpool, and when he came to this country took a homestead at the place mentioned above. Subject's father went to Cleveland when eighteen and took up the wholesale oyster business, which he has followed for forty-five years. The mother of William H. was born in Waterford, Ireland, and now dwells in Cleveland. Our subject was raised and educated in Cleveland, and when seventeen learned the machinist trade at the Variety iron works, and then took the position of assistant foreman in those works, holding the same three years until 1889. Then he migrated to Phillipsburg, Montana, where he continued at his trade two years. Then he came to Wallace and built the Coeur d'Alene iron works there. He managed them five years, and then leased and later sold the plant to Taylor & Whitlaw, mentioned in this work. This was in 1896, then Mr. Farrell accepted a positoin with the Tiger people, and did machine work for two years. Then he engaged in his present position, and for six years has done first class work in the intricate department of which he has charge. Mr. Farrell has four brothers and three sisters: Nicholas, Charles, Albert, John, Mary, Margaret Morheim, Ellen.

At Cleveland, Ohio, on May 12, 1887, Mr. Farrell married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of William and Mary (Daniels) Morgan, natives of Wales, now dwelling in Cleveland, retired. The father was a puddler. Mrs. Farrell has four brothers and three sisters: Thomas, David, William, Garfield, Rebecca Leidenbach, Mary Mawby, Sadie Matche. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Farrell: Mary, aged thirteen; Ethel, aged eleven; William, aged seven. Mr. Farrell is a member of the K. O. T. M., and a charter member of the Elks. He is allied with the Republican party in political belief, but is not desirous of personal preferment.

FRANCIS M. SALING, a substantial and thrifty farmer and stockman, residing seven miles north from Weippe, was born in Missouri on November 17, 1836, being the son of Rumsey and Matilda (Snow) Saling, natives of Tennessee, the father's parents being natives of Tennessee, but the mother's ancestors were of Ireland. They died in Texas. Mr. Francis Saling was reared in Missouri and educated in the district schools. At the time of the Civil war he was serving in Company A, of a Missouri regiment of the Confederacy, and participated in the battle of Lexington and also in many skirmishes. In 1863 he came to Montana and mined, and the next year he pushed on to Idaho, mining in Boise basin for two years. Then he returned to Missouri and remained until 1870, when he went to Collins county, Texas, and dwelt there for nineteen years. His business was raising stock and farming. In 1888 he came to the Palouse country and the next year found him penetrating to the section where he is now living. He pre-empted a quarter section and has since devoted himself to dairying, raising stock and farming. He has now thirty cattle, some hogs and horses and raises much hay. Mr. Saling has two brothers and three sisters,—James, a stockman in Texas; Thomas, in Indian Territory; Malinda, widow of William Moore, in Missouri; Emily, wife of Frank Dry, in Indian Territory; Mollie, wife of George Gordon, in Indian Territory. In 1868, while in Missouri, Mr. Saling married Miss Susan Snell, who died in Texas on February 14, 1879, aged thirty-two. Four children are the fruits of this union,—Ida, wife of Jeff Wilson, in Texas; Maggie, wife of Hayden Wilson, in Missouri; Granville and William, with their parents.

Mr. Saling celebrated his second marriage in Texas, Sarah Burcham becoming his wife this time. Her parents, Enoch and Permelia (Brooks) Burcham, are natives of Indiana and are now deceased. Mrs. Saling was born in Bollinger county, Missouri, on June 5, 1860, was raised principally in Illinois, whither the family went when she was eight years old. Nora, a granddaughter of Mr. Saling, has been adopted into his family and lives with them now. Mr. Saling is a true blue Democrat and has the courage of his convictions. He is a substantial and reliable man, whose ways of uprightness and wisdom have given him the esteem and good will of all.



J. A. BRADY was born in Bollinger county, Missouri, on August 17, 1839. His parents were natives of Ireland and came to America in 1838. The family removed to Palo Pinto county, Texas, in 1854 and took up the cattle business. Our subject had received his education in his native place and in Texas, and in that state started out for himself and was soon in the employ of the Pecos Land & Cattle Company, with whom he wrought for seven years, being one of their most trusted men. He lost heavily in the drouth of 1884 and after that left Texas and went to Woodward, Oklahoma. After some time there he went to North Dakota, settling in Dickinson, where he took up the cattle business. In this place he succeeded well, and on August 17, 1902, Mr. Brady removed to his present location, having sold his interests in Dakota. He is on Crain meadow, near Weippe, and is engaged in farming and raising stock. Mr. Brady has shown a marked spirit of enterprise and he has spent a large portion of his life on the frontier opening the way for the civilization of the east to come in.

MRS. FRANCIS M. SALING.

FRANCIS M. SALING.

J. A. BRADY.

JOHN H. NORDQUIST.

Mr. Brady has four sisters,—Sarah Markham, living in Palo Pinto county, Texas; Nancy C. Gonce, in the same county; Emma Maxwell, in southeastern Missouri; Nellie Stephens, in Alvarado, Johnson county, Texas. Mr. Brady is a stanch Democrat of the Jeffersonian kind, and is deeply interested in the welfare of the county, and especially this community. He is filled with the spirit and enterprise of his ancestors, and the genial ways and uprightness which are characteristic of him have made him hosts of friends and he stands well in the community.

JOHN H. NORDQUIST. In every human breast there is a feeling of joy to observe true grit and pluck succeed in encounter with the obstacles of life. Especially is it gratifying to observe the young man of willing hands and strong heart set his mark high in life and then with the labor of his hands accomplish the noble results. Such a one is the gentleman of whom we now speak.

John H. Nordquist was born in Sweden on September 11, 1867, being the son of John and Britta Nordquist, both natives of Sweden. The mother is still living there, but the father died in 1877, aged forty-eight. John H. received a primary schooling in his own country and at the age of eighteen came to the land where greater opportunities awaited him. He worked in Michigan for a few months and then went to Sandstone, Pine county, Minnesota, where he labored in the stone sawing mills until 1888, when he came to the Coeur d'Alene country. He secured employment in the Gem and steadily followed mining until 1896, saving his money carefully that he might accomplish the ambition of his life. In the year last mentioned he went to a Helena business college a year, and then made his way to Valparaiso, Indiana, where is the well known school that stands in its line of work second to none. He took up a civil engineering course, and his careful study, backed with natural talent, soon placed him in possession of the coveted lore. Two years in that valued institution and he went thence to the Houghton School of Mines in Michigan, where he completed his training for a first class civil and mining engineer. In 1900 he made his way back to Wallace and hosts of warm and admiring friends were ready to welcome his return. He opened an office in partnership with W. A. Hesse, and in the fall he was elected county surveyor, running ahead of his ticket. In the spring he was elected city engineer, and in 1902 he was promptly re-elected. Each time Mr. Nordquist ran ahead of his ticket, thus demonstrating his popularity, the last city election going one hundred and thirty-five ahead. He was nominated by his party, the Democratic, for state mining inspector, and although as usual he went ahead of his ticket, he was defeated.

Mr. Nordquist has two brothers and one sister in the United States,—Oscar, a millwright in the Standard mine; Albert, railroading in Utah; and Theresia, in Montana.

Mr. Nordquist is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Porter Lodge No. 47, in Valparaiso; Wallace Chapter, 9, R. A. M.; Coeur d'Alene Commandery, K. T., of Wallace; Scottish Rite, eighteenth degree, Wallace; Order of the Eastern Star; the I. O. O. F., Chickwick Lodge No. 5, at Valparaiso; the Order of Washington; and Scandinavian Brotherhood. He has been delegate to the state and county conventions and is one of the stanch and influential Democrats of the state. Mr. Nordquist has certainly achieved an enviable success, and his careful labor, wise handling of the resources placed in his hands, his uprightness and his steady adherence to business, presage a bright future for him.

At Spokane, Washington, on January 26, 1903, Mr. Nordquist and Miss Laura Sommers, of Kellogg, Idaho, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. They are popular people and have hosts of friends.

AXEL SWAN is an enterprising and energetic man, as the following will manifest. He was born in Sweden on May 25, 1864, the son of Johnson and Lena (Erickson) Swan, natives of Sweden. The father died in 1884, but the mother still lives in her native land. She was born in 1834. Our subject was educated in the public schools, completing a high school course. Then he worked in his father's brewery until eighteen when he came to this country. He went to work in Minnesota for a brick maker at twelve dollars per month. Later he spent three months working in plastering and then got thirty, then fifty dollars per month, and finally four dollars per day. Then he commenced contracting, and the money received from that he used to purchase well boring machinery, which he used until 1887, three years, then came to Spokane. He bought machinery here, but it would not work on the gravel, so he laid it aside and dug by hand, utilizing nine men. Among others he dug the Lidgerwood well in Spokane and put in the pumps. Then he sold and opened a butcher shop, which lost him six hundred dollars. Then he tried a boarding house for eighteen months and did well. He took a claim near Moscow and later sold his right. Then he bought a farm near Sprague and sold, making five hundred dollars. Next we see Mr. Swan prospecting in Slocan, then he bought some good property in Spokane that brought a rental of eighty-two dollars per month, but the panic coming on he lost all. After that he came to Gem in 1894 and worked in the mines until the strike and then was prospecting in the hills for a time, after which he came to work again in the mines, but later located a water right and built a mill, which caught fine ore that paid him and his partner seven dollars each per day. Lead went down and he sold his mill. Unfortunately for Mr. Swan he lost his number in the hospital and so could not get in the mine, and accordingly he started a saloon with Gus Carlson, but bought him out later. He continues this business and owns mining property in the Stevens peak country, as the Petrolia, Ninety-six, Trade Dollar, Stanley, The Belle, and the Tamarack, besides others. Mr. Swan has the following brothers and sisters: John, Albert, Mrs. Annie Clawson, Mrs. Alma Peterson, Ottillie and Sister.

On July 25, 1892, Mr. Swan married Miss Annie Anderson, a native of Sweden. Her parents are both deceased. The wedding occurred in Spokane, and Mrs. Swan has two brothers and two sisters: Charles, Eurich, Mrs. Annie Ranstrom, and one in Sweden. Three children have been born to this union: Dellner, Elsie, Esther. Mr. Swan is a member of the Red Men.

WILLIAM H. HOOVER, who is one of the rising young men of Gem, is at this time holding the important position of bookkeeper for the Frisco mine, and in this capacity has shown good business ability and a reliability and efficiency that have commended him to the company and all who may have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

William H. Hoover was born in Windsor, Missouri, on July 5, 1879, the son of Winfield S. and Annie (Fisher) Hoover, who now dwell in Spokane, and are natives of Maryland and Missouri, respectively. Our subject attended public school in Montana, whither his parents came when he was young, and when he was ten the family came to Spokane, and in this city he acquired his education. He completed the high school course and also a business course and a training in stenography in the Spokane business college. Then he accepted a position for the Washington Mill Company, later was with the Shaw Wells Company, and after three years in that capacity he was one year with the union depot company, after which Mr. Hoover took a position with the Morning Mine company. Two years and eight months he could have been found with those people at Mullan as their bookkeeper, and in November, 1902, Mr. Hoover accepted his present position and since that time he has continued here. He is an efficient accountant and stands well in the community and is entitled to and receives the confidence and esteem of all. Mr. Hoover has one brother and one sister: Ernest, an electrician in Spokane; Pearl F. Mr. Hoover is an active and enthusiastic member of the Elks in Wallace, and is also always allied on the side of upbuilding and progress.

HARRY P. WARD. This popular and genial young business man of Wallace has been a moving spirit in organizing and promoting the library association and reading room. He conducts an undertaking and embalming establishment and is a skillful man in his profession.

Harry P. Ward was born in Pioche, Nevada, on February 18, 1874, being the son of Henry and Adelaide (LeCount) Ward. The father was born in England, came to the United States in 1862, to the Coeur d'Alen country in 1886, and followed the undertaking and furniture business. He served in the Civil war, and now lives in Kansas City. The mother of our subject was born in New York, and died when Harry P. was an infant, she being then thirty-two years old. Our subject was raised in Reno and Carson, Nevada, and received a good education in the public schools, and completed the same in the B. & S. Commercial College in Boston. He also learned embalming in Boston from the Massachusetts College of Embalming. In 1890 he came to the Coeur d'Alene country and joined his father in Wallace, whither he had removed from Wardner. In 1894 he bought out his father, and since then has conducted the business here. Mr. Ward has one sister, Mrs. A. W. Allen, Jr., in Kansas City.

On June 15, 1897, Mr. Ward married Miss Lizzie E., daughter of Harry and Elizabeth Thompson, residents of Wallace. Mr. Thompson is a prominent mining man, was born in England and came to the United States when an infant. He has been a prospector for years in Montana, and is now interested in the Stevens Peak Mines in this section. He is a member of the Montana Pioneer Society, of the I. O. O. F. Mrs. Ward has one brother, a mechanic in Wardner, and one sister, Florence, at home. Politically Mr. Ward is independent. Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., Wallace Lodge, No. 33, is past noble grand, and has attended the grand lodge for four years; with the Coeur d'Alene, No. 331, B. P. O. E., being treasurer; with the I. O. R. M., Kootenai Tribe, No. 3, being past sachem; with the Foresters of America, Court No. 9, being past chief ranger; with the Order of Washington, being treasurer of the Wallace Union, No. 49; with the K. O. T. M., Silver Tent, No. 3. Mr. Ward is also a member of the Shoshone Club, and is a popular and highly esteemed man.

NATHAN WITTNER. This stirring and progressive business man is conducting a real estate and mining brokerage business in Wallace and is one of the oldest operators in this line of business in the city, and enjoys a first rate patronage, while also he is promoting several large mining properties.

Mr. Wittner is a native of Germany, and was there thoroughly educated in the famous Heidelberg and Leipsic Universities, taking a special course in chemistry. Subsequent to leaving the university he was employed in a large coalter distillery in Manheim and later was so engaged in Leipsic. In 1877 Mr. Wittner came to the United States and after a short stay in New York he pushed on to San Francisco. There he taught a private school for eighteen months, and then took up the real estate business. Later he was in Portland, and in January, 1884, Mr. Wittner made his way into Eagle City. He prospected until July and then went to Murray and handled the business department of the Idaho Sun, a bright newspaper of the day. Later five years were spent in mining and prospecting, and in 1887 he was appointed deputy sheriff, after which he was constable and also justice of the peace. In 1889 Mr. Wittner opened a real estate office in Wallace, and he has transacted business here since that early day. He has promoted several properties during that time and now is heavily interested in the O. K. Consolidated, Giant Mining and Development, the Trail Gulch Gold Mining and Milling and other companies. Mr. Wittner is the only member of his family in this country. He has demonstrated himself a keen business man and possessed of the energy requisite for consummating good enterprises.

JOHN W. EVIRS, who is yard foreman for the Tiger & Poorman mine, is one of the popular men of Burke, and a man whose experience in various capacities and in many places in the west has broadened and fitted him for the responsible position he now occupies. He was born in New Hampshire on April 25, 1853, the son of James and Margaret (Regon) Evirs, natives of New Hampshire and Canada, respectively. The father came from an old and prominent American family, and died on October 11, 1902. The mother had died some years previous. Our subject remained in his native state until 1873, gaining his education, and then came west. From that time forward he has been in various capacities, especially in the manufacture of lumber and has wrought all through the northwest. He was in Eagle City in 1883 on the crest of the wave, then went to Murray, later to Wardner, all the time handling saw mills. In this last place he was in partnership with Messrs. Cameron, Rutter and Hill, mentioned elsewhere in this work. Later he sold his interest to Mr. Cameron and in 1885 went to Ashley, now Kalispel, Montana, where he remained until 1896. Next we see him in Anaconda, and two years later he went to Kaslo and stepped from the sawmilling business to prospecting and mining for a year. Thence he went to Philipsburg, and next to Burke, where we find him at the present time. For a time after coming here he wrought at carpentering and then took the yard foremanship of the Tiger and has done efficient work here since that time. Mr. Evirs has two brothers and three sisters: James, Dennis, Mrs. Annie Davis, Mary, Kate.

On September 29, 1888, at Kalispel, Montana, Mr. Evirs married Mrs. Clara A. Carroll, daughter of John and Mary Hague. Mrs. Evirs has one daughter by her first marriage, Dollie. Mr. Evirs is a Republican and while not desirous of personal preferment is always on the side of advancement and progress.

WILLIAM R. SWICEGOOD, who is shift boss in the Tiger, is one of the substantial men of Burke, being a man of excellent qualifications, both by nature's endowment and careful training and is the recipient of the esteem and confidence of all. He was born in Warrensburg, Missouri, on October 19, 1866, the son of James and Malinda (Whitsitt) Swicegood. The father was born in North Carolina. Four brothers came from Germany to this country in 1674 and settled in Gilpin county, North Carolina, and our subject descended from one of them. The family were all prominent American patriots and fought in all the struggles for the advancement and independence of the colonists and in the war of 1812. Our subject's grandfather figured in these wars and was a Lutheran preacher. The father and mother now live in Joplin, Missouri, he being engaged in mining interests. He served in the Civil war and was captured by Price and paroled. Returning to Sedalia, where he enlisted, he went from Kansas City to Walla Walla with an ox team, then mined in Alder gulch, doing well. The mother's ancestors were a prominent American family and fought in the Revolutionary war and the struggle of 1812. Four of her brothers fought in the Civil war for the Union and one uncle was in the Mexican war. She was born in Missouri and her parents in Tennessee. Our subject has two brothers, James and John. William R. received a good common schooling, then went through the high school and business college, and later took his degree from the Rolla School of Mines in Rolla, Missouri, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1890. Following this he superintended the mines at Aurora, Missouri, and later prospected some and spent several years in Colorado and Mexico. It was 1899 that he came to Wallace and was superintendent and manager of the Custer mine for three years. On December 1, 1902, Mr. Swicegood came to Burke and took his present position.

On January 23, 1900, at Wallace, Mr. Swicegood married Miss Josephine, whose father, William C. Loftin, a native of North Carolina, now dwells in Jasper county, Missouri. Mrs. Swicegood has two brothers and eight sisters: Barney, William, Mrs. Minnie Tipton, Mrs. Della Wright, Mrs. Florence Mitchell, Mrs. Isabel Melton, Chrissie, Celia, Edith, Delia. Mr. Swicegood is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in politics is tied to the tenets of no party but is an independent thinker.

JEROME F. JACOBS is one of the well known business men of Wallace and at present is conducting a popular resort, known as Jerome's place. He was born in Portland, Oregon, on January 12, 1853. His parents were Hiram S. and Nancy (Olds) Jacobs. The father was a native of New York, crossed the plains with ox teams in 1847 to Portland, and in 1864 returned to New York. He died in the city of Mexico, in 1900, aged seventy-one. He was a well known mining man of the early days in Idaho, Colorado, Utah, South America, and so forth. The mother of our subject was born in Michigan and now lives in McMinnville, Oregon. Her parents were early pioneers of Oregon, crossing the plains with ox teams in 1847. She was married in Oregon. Jerome F. was raised in Portland until 1864 and then went to New York with his parents, where he completed his education and studied civil engineering. In 1868 he went to Colorado and wrought in that line and in 1871 Mr. Jacobs came to Utah and followed civil engineering and the liquor business for ten years. Thence he journeyed to Nevada and returned to Utah, and in 1884 we find him one of the pioneers in the Eagle City country.

Later he went to the Wood river country, and thence to Fairhaven, Washington, where he remained through the boom of that country. It was 1892 that Mr. Jacobs came to Wallace, and since that time he has been one of the active business men of the place. Mr. Jacobs has one brother and one sister, Martin H., mining inspector of Idaho; Nettie Ungerman, in McMinnville, Oregon.

In 1885 Mr. Jacobs married Miss Josephine Wheeler at Ketchum, Idaho.

WILLIAM H. SMITH is a leading citizen of Burke, a successful business man and one of the progressive factors of this section. He is cashier of the Bank of Burke, and in addition to this he does a real estate business and owns and rents nine dwelling houses in Burke.

William H. Smith was born in Portland, Oregon, on January 27, 1863, the son of George D. and Edith (Cashow) Smith, natives of Iowa. The father crossed the plains in 1848 and located on the present site of Portland. When the excitement of forty-nine broke out he abandoned his claim and went to California. Four years later he returned to Oregon and opened a harness shop in Portland. He moved to Arlington in 1880 and there died in 1889. The mother came to Oregon around the Horn in the fifties and was married in Brownsville. Our subject was reared and educated in Brownsville and when twelve came with his mother and step-father, A. A. Keyers, to Palouse, where he remained until 1895. In 1895 our subject went to Spokane and a year later came to Burke. He was in Mr. Cardoner's store for a year and a half, and then was postmaster for four years, and in connection with this operated a cigar and stationery store. In addition to his present business Mr. Smith is secretary of the Benton Mining Company, and a heavy stock owner in it. He has been three times to the county convention, and was central committeeman for four years. Mr. Smith is a member of the Elks, of the I. O. O. F., and of the Redmen, being past sachem of the last order. Mr. Smith has one brother, Jesupa.

In January, 1889, Mr. Smith married Miss Lizzie daughter of John and Mary Murphy, who dwell in Burke, the father being a miner. The wedding occurred in Burke; they have one child, Francis. Mrs. Smith is a member of the Roman Catholic church. Mr. Smith is justice of the peace and has been for three terms. He was also notary public.

ELLIS L. HALE is the master mechanic for the Empire State mine at Burke and Wardner, and is a man whose natural qualifications and careful training and broad experience have amply fitted for this responsible position, which he fills with acceptability.

Ellis L. Hale was born in Virginia on April 13, 1869, the son of John and Caroline (Osborne) Hale, natives of Virginia and descended from old and prominent families of that state. The father is now living in Texas but the mother died in 1900. Our subject was reared in Virginia and remained in school until fifteen, then apprenticed himself in the Baldwin Locomotive works in Roanoke, Virgina, to learn the machinist trade. After several years there, he went thence to Pocahontas, Virginia, to the coal mines, being in the machinist department, where also he acquired a fine training in mining and was in the extensive shop where they constructed nearly all the machinery used in the mammoth establishment. Next we see Mr. Hale in Bessemer, Michigan, operating a diamond drill, after which he was in the coal mines in Red Lodge, Montana, being engineer and electrician. After this he was master mechanic in the Cumberland lead mines at Castle Mountain, Montana. In December, 1892, he came to Burke and was master mechanic seven years in different mines and in October, 1898, he retired from this and operated at Leadville, Colorado. Eight months later Mr. Hale was back in the Coeur d'Alene country, and soon held the position where we find him at the present time. He is a man thoroughly posted in the intricate problems of his profession, and is a valuable addition to the Empire management. Mr. Hale has one sister, Ida Hampton, residing in Virginia.

On July 15, 1892, Mr. Hale married Miss Kate, daughter of Martha Barnes. The father is deceased. Mrs. Hale is a native of Iowa and has two brothers, Robert and Arthur, miners in Montana. She also has one sister, Mrs. Ellen Torphey. One child has been born to this couple, Ellen. Mr. Hale is a member of the A. F. & A. M., of the K. P., of the I. O. O. F. He is a Republican and always has been and is a stanch advocate of principles held forth by that party and is able to give a reason.

WILLIAM R. MILLER is the manager and heaviest owner of the Burke electric light works, which he is operating in a first class manner at the present time. The plant is one of the latest and is in every respect up-to-date and first class.

William R. Miller was born in Nova Scotia on May 6, 1862, the son of Robert and Jane (Murdock) Miller, natives of Nova Scotia, and descended from Scotch ancestry. They now reside at Kamloops, British Columbia, the father aged eighty-two and the mother aged seventy-five. Our subject received a district schooling in his native place until thirteen, then worked on the farm and at lumbering until twenty-four. In 1886 he came to Spokane, thence to Wardner, later to Wallace and then up the canyon to Burke, where he has been engaged since. Mr. Miller mined in the Tiger a year, then operated the engine until 1892, then went east on a visit of seven months. Upon his return he operated the engine for the Poorman until the Tiger was consolidated with it, when he went to the Frisco and operated the engine there for a year. While there Mr. Miller became interested with Norman Ebbley and Harry Jackman in the present electric light plant, which they erected. Our subject and Ebbley bought out Jackman before the plant started and later Mr. Miller bought out Mr. Ebbley and formed a stock company. This was in 1899, and since then Mr. Miller has continued in the operation of the plant successfully. Mr. Miller has the following brothers and sisters, George, Mitchell, Allen, Hedley, Mrs. Mary J. Stevens, Mrs. W. E. Runner.

At Spokane, on July 22, 1889, Mr. Miller married Miss Jennie, daughter of Donald and Kate Henderson, the former deceased and the latter living in Nova Scotia. Mrs. Miller has three brothers and three sisters: Norman, Daniel, Alexander, Mary Sutherland, Lizzie McPhail, Christie Crowe. To Mr. and Mrs. Miller there have been born two children, Drysdale, aged twelve, and Ronald, aged eight. Mr. Miller is a member of the K. P., and in political alliance is with the Democrats, but is never desirous for personal preferment, although he is at the county conventions and his influence is always on the side of advancement and progress.

BENJAMIN F. STRINGAM is well known in Burke, where he handles a general transfer and teaming business, utilizing five teams and considerable rolling stock. He was born in Springfield, Illinois, on March 25, 1851, the son of Jeremiah and Sarah (Bovee) Stringam, natives of New York, and died in 1898 and 1867, respectively, in Utah. Our subject was raised and educated in Missouri until he was thirteen and then the family came to Salt Lake City, and later to Manti, where Benjamin freighted for ten years and did mining in the coal properties. Then he was in Salt Lake City, later in Truckee, California, teaming, and in May, 1876, he went to Walla Walla and worked for Dr. Blalock, after which he went to Idaho Falls, then Eagle Rock. He was with Lang & Ryan and drove cattle from Pendleton. Later Mr. Stringam was in Geldale, Montana, and hauled charcoal, split rails, farmed for Tom Foley, logged, hauled supplies to the post and in the spring of 1880 he came to Coeur d'Alene and furnished telegraph poles for the government with his partner, John McCormick. Then he freighted from Dillon to Missoula and in 1881 came back to Coeur d'Alene with Major Robinson repairing roads. After this Mr. Stringam operated a stopping place out of Missoula until March, 1884, when he came to Littlefield, two miles from Murray, and there operated a store and saloon, also packed from there to Thompson Falls, for three years. Then Mr. Stringham came to Burke and since then has been occupied in his present business. In addition to teaming he does also considerable packing as occasion requires. Mr. Stringam has four brothers: George, William, Jacob, Jeremiah, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Colby. All are in Utah.

On August 22, 1881, Mr. Stringam married Miss Mary J., daughter of John and Josephine Carters, now living in Missoula. The wedding occurred in New Chicago, Montana, and the father of Mrs. Stringam is a well known prospector not only in Montana, but also located the Tiger in 1884. Mrs. Stringam has one brother, William, and three sisters. Three children have been born to this union, Benjamin, Susan, Edna, all at home. Mr. Stringam is a Republican and always on the side of progress.

WALTER ALLEN JONES. Among the pioneers of the Coeur d'Alene country and as one who has ever manifested the true spirit of progression and who has wrought with sagacity and enterprise in material development of the country, and as one of the leading property owners and legal lights of the county, we are constrained to mention the estimable gentleman whose name appears above.

Walter Allen Jones was born in Pottsville, Pennsylvania, on May 5, 1855, being the son of Joseph D. and Catherine A. (Kaercher) Jones, natives of Pennsylvania. The father died in 1806, aged forty-six. His ancestors were natives of Pennsylvania, being prominent citizens of that commonwealth for two centuries. The mother of our subject died in 1898, aged seventy-three. Our subject was reared and lived in Pennsylvania until he was thirty. He graduated from the high school in due time, then entered commercial life until he was nineteen, when he commenced reading law. In 1878 he was admitted to the practice and continued in the same in Pennsylvania until he was thirty. In 1886 Mr. Jones came to Murray and there practiced and later removed to Wallace. He has continued in this county in active practice since the early days of his arrival here and is one of the leading attorneys of northern Idaho. Mr. Jones was elected district attorney in 1886 and in 1889 he was elected city attorney of Wallace, continuing in the same for five terms. Until 1892 Mr. Jones was allied with the Republican party, but in that year he went with the People's party and has continued with them since. In addition to a large practice Mr. Jones is heavily interested in mining and has some fine properties. He also owns a half interest in the Jones & Dean block, a large business structure at the corner of Cedar and Sixth streets in Wallace. Our subject has one brother and one sister, Dory S., a machinist in the Baldwin Locomotive Works in Philadelphia; Lavinia E., wife of William H. M. Oram, a prominent attorney in Shamokin, Pennsylvania.

At Kingston, Pennsylvania, on January 1, 1880, Mr. Jones married Frances M. Thomas. She was educated in Wyoming Seminary in Kingston, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are of excellent standing in the city and are leaders in society and very popular, being admired by hosts of friends.

MARSHALL M. TAYLOR. A prominent and successful business man, whose achievements have demonstrated him to be one of the leading manipulators of commercial interests in the county, a man of integrity and possessed of excellent qualities of worth and uprightness, a patriotic and enterprising citizen given to generosity and of public mind, it is evident that no work of the character of this volume would be complete without prominent mention of Marshall M. Taylor. He was born in Iowa on May 17, 1862, being the son of Stephen L. and Cecelia (Dupney) Taylor. The father was born in Baltimore, Maryland, on October 22, 1825, and died on May 9, 1878. He was of Welsh ancestrage. The mother of our subject was born in St. Clair county, Illinois, on November 16, 1836, and died on December 20, 1895. Her parents were natives of Kentucky, descended from the French Huguenots and were early pioneers of Illinois and Iowa. Our subject was reared in Iowa until he was twenty, completing high school and business college courses, and then came to the Black Hills, South Dakota. Later he went to Kansas and in 1889 he came to Washington. At Cheney he opened a general merchandise establishment, and in 1894 he removed to Wallace. At the present time Mr. Taylor is senior member of the firm of Taylor Brothers, the brother, John B., being now a student in the Chicago University. Our subject is managing the store now and handles a thriving patronage. They have a choice stock of high grade clothing, gents' furnishings, and so forth, and carry eighteen thousand dollars' worth of well selected goods. Their store compares favorably with any in the northwest, and Mr. Taylor is a leader in the realm of commercial activity. The firm are agents for the celebrated Knox hats, Manhattan shirts, and many other of the leading goods in their line.

On November 23, 1894, Mr. Taylor married Miss Edith D., daughter of Horace H. and Harriet Hubbard, who now live in Spokane, the father being auditor of Spokane county. Mrs. Taylor was born in Kalamazoo, Michigan, on August 11, 1870. Fraternally, Mr. Taylor is affiliated with the K. P. in Cheney, and the W. W. in Wallace.

THOMAS O. GRIFFITH is a miner of the first class, having spent his entire life, since the school days of boyhood, in the mastery of the intricate problems of the art and in becoming skilled in the science and practice of mining. He is at present shift boss in the Frisco at Gem, and is held in high esteem by all, both fellow workmen and those for whom his services are enlisted.

Thomas O. Griffith was born in Wales, on May 15, 1864, the son of Owen and Mary (Evans) Griffith, natives of Wales. The mother lives there now and the father died when our subject was two years of age. Thomas O. was an apt scholar in the public schools until the age of eleven, and then he went into the mines and the mines have been the scene of his faithful and skillful labor since that time and he has come to know the layers and stratas of the earth as the farmer knows the familiar stock of his barn. He wrought in Wales until he had reached his majority, and then came to the slate quarries in Pennsylvania. A year later we find him in the coal mines, and one year there and his adventurous spirit led him to the treasure fields of Montana, and near Butte he was employed in mining for eighteen months. In 1886 Mr. Griffith came to Wardner and in the Sierra Nevada and the Bunker Hill he wrought for five years. Then came two years in the Black Hills, in South Dakota.

After that he returned to the Coeur d'Alene country and wrought once more in the Bunker Hill. A short time thereafter the reports from Colorado caused Mr. Griffith to go thence and one year later he returned again to the Bunker Hill. In July, 1899, Mr. Griffith came to the Frisco and was installed as shift boss, having also held the same position in the Bunker Hill. He has continued since in that capacity and has rendered excellent service. Mr. Griffith has one sister, Ellen Jones, in Wales.

In Slatington, Pennsylvania, in November, 1890, Mr. Griffith married Miss Lizzie, daughter of John W. and Ruth (Williams) Evans. The father was a native of Wales, and died in Pennsylvania in 1895 but the mother lives in New York. Three children have been born to this union: Ruth, aged nine, is the only one living. Mr. Griffith is a Republican and a man of excellent judgment and sound principles.

ANDREW WILMOT is a well known and popular hotel man of the Coeur d'Alene country, and is one of the men whose skill and ability in the line of business which he handles have given him an unbounded success, while he has won friends from all quarters and has displayed worth and integrity in his career.

Andrew Wilmot was born in Texas on March 15, 1867, the son of Frank and Elizabeth (McLain) Wilmot. The father was born in England and died in Illinois in 1870. The mother was born in Virginia, descending from an old and prominent family. She is a niece of Wade Hampton, and now lives in Richmond county, Illinois. Our subject was reared mostly in Illinois, and received a good education from the public schools. When eighteen he went to southeastern Missouri and sold pianos for eighteen months. Then he went to Colorado and took up the hotel business for two years. Next we see him in Montana in the same business and also interested in mining. In 1891 Mr. Wilmot came to the Coeur d'Alene country, landing in Gem from Thompson Falls, and the first night was spent in the house which he now handles, the Frisco boarding house at Gem. Mr. Wilmot did bakery work for a time and then went to Wallace, and since that time he has constantly been occupied in hotel and restaurant business. He spent one year in a mining venture, which was unsuccessful. Mr. Wilmot has one brother, Samuel. The marriage of Mr. Wilmot and Miss Anna Johnson was solemnized at Wardner on June 12, 1893. Mrs. Wilmot was called hence by death on December 14, 1894, and left one child, Anna, now aged eight years. Mr. Wilmot is a Republican and a man of influence and always on the side of progress.

EDWARD OLSON is the foreman of the Frisco mill at Gem, and is an efficient and faithful man in this responsible position. He is a man whose genial ways, intelligence and upright principles have made popular with all who know him and he is a loyal and capable citizen.

Edward Olson was born in Sweden on March 6, 1864, the son of Ole and Charlotte (Larson) Olson, natives of Sweden also. The father died when Edward was ten years of age, but the mother still lives in the native place. Our subject was well educated in the schools of his home place and in 1882, being eighteen, he came to the United States. He located in Wisconsin and there took a position on a farm, where he could spend his winters in the study of the English language, the ways of the American people, and our free institutions. This continued for four years, and Mr. Olson became well posted in the lines which he pursued. Then came two years in farm work in South Dakota, after which he journeyed to Kootenai county, Idaho, and did lumbering until 1894, when he came to the Coeur d'Alene country, and since that time he has been here. He took employment at the Frisco mill, and for the last seven years he has held the position of foreman of it. Mr. Olson has two brothers and one siter, Fred, Swan, Mrs. Hulda Simpson.

On March 13, 1899, at Gem, Mr. Olson married Miss Dora Clinesburg, whose parents live in Germany. Mrs. Olson was born in Germany. Mr. Olson is a member of the K. P. and is past C. C. He is a Republican and takes the interest due from every intelligent citizen of this commonweath. Mr. Olson stands well in the community, and is a man of real worth of character.

HENRY FLOYD SAMUELS. Perhaps no class of men hold a higher responsibility regarding the welfare of the state than do the attorneys and it is well known that the wisdom and justice of our laws are dependent upon the erudition, probity, and integrity of these professional men. The bar of Wallace compares favorably with the balance of the state of Idaho and well to the head of this important body we find the subject of this sketch, a man possessed of excellent natural ability; a forceful, forensic orator, a thorough student and especially well fortified in legal lore, a man of integrity, and a gentleman of honor. His bright success in his practice here has demonstrated these excellent qualities and acquirements and a bright future is presaged for this talented and popular attorney.

Henry Floyd Samuels was born in Washington county, Mississippi, on April 4, 1869, being the son of Floyd and Isabelle (Jenkins) Samuels. The Samuels family came from the British Isle long before the Revolution and settled in Virginia. Soon after the Revolutionary war one branch of the family blazed the path to Kentucky and was among its first settlers. From there, John Samuels, the great-grandfather of our subject, moved into southern Indiana, and was a friend and neighbor to William Henry Harrison, and was with him in his Indian struggle at Tippecanoe. His brother, William, was an officer in the war of 1812. Their father was one of the patriots of the Revolution. Floyd Samuels, the father of our subject, was born in Indiana and reared in Kentucky, and when Lincoln called for volunteers to save the Union, he responded by organizing Company E, of the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, being captain. His brother joined the southern cause. Captain Samuels with his company was surrounded seven times and it was a struggle of saber against bayonet. He participated in fifty-three battles. The mother of our subject, Isabelle Jenkins Samuels, was a native of Indiana, and died in 1873, at the age of twenty-seven years. Three of her brothers were soldiers on the Union side during the Rebellion, and when the smoke of battle had cleared away two of them were sleeping in unknown graves in the sunny south. Henry Jenkins, her father, was state senator of Indiana during the Civil war, and was a prominent and well-to-do citizen. The Jenkins family is one of the old American families and contributed aid in gaining our freedom from England. Thus we note that our subject comes from patriotic and strong ancestors on both sides. Mr. Samuels was raised in Indiana on a farm and received a common education from the district school. Realizing much the need of a higher education, he allowed no obstacle to turn him from gaining it. He boarded at home and walked five miles every night and morning to attend the high school at Leavenworth, Indiana. At eighteen he started westward, wrought for the summer as a farm hand in Nebraska, saved his wages, and started to school in the fall. By working night and morning he continued paying his expenses as he went until he graduated at Ulysses, Nebraska. There he commenced the study of the law with Waldo Brothers. He next went to Ann Arbor to attend the law department of University of Michigan. While attending there his health broke down and he returned to the homestead in southern Indian, and as soon as he recovered secured a positoin with the law firm of Tracewell & Founkhouser, and continued the study of the law. He was admitted to the bar in February, 1892, at Leavenworth, Indiana.

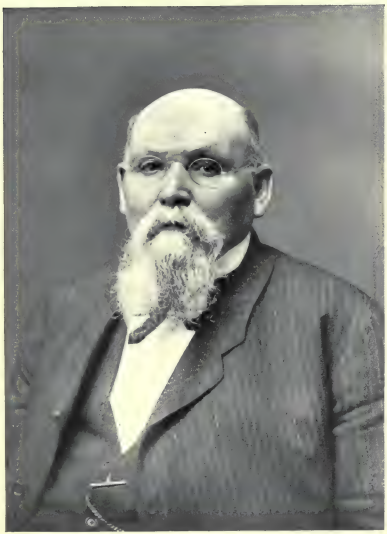
Mr. Samuels, in April of 1892, came to Idaho, and soon opened a law office at Grangeville. In 1895 he moved to Wallace, where he soon built a lucrative business. In 1897 he was chosen attorney for the city of Wallace, and in 1898 was elected the first county attorney for Shoshone county. During his term of office occurred the labor strike of 1899, which brought with it one of the most trying ordeals that could befall an official, but Mr. Samuels was equal to the occasion, and his deep love for justice and right characterized his actions all through his term, and he filled the office with distinction and credit. Mr. Samuels always having a desire to finish the law course he had to give up on account of his health in 1901, in 1901 he took a post-graduate course at the Columbian University, Washington, D. C., and received the degree of Master of Law.

Not only has Mr. Samuels been successful at the practice of the law but mining as well, for he is a co-owner of the famous Hercules mine, and many other valuable mining interests, and each year as it goes by adds to his prestige and wealth.

HENRY L. DAY is one of the prominent and enterprising mining men of the rich Coeur d'Alene district, and his skill and sagacity, coupled with long experience in the business world, have made him one of the foremost men of the section, and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant to him a representation among the leading citizens of northern Idaho.

Henry L. Day was born in Washington county, Maine, on January 28, 1835, the son of William and Sarah (Averill) Day, natives also of Maine. The father was a lumber man, and died in Maine June 6, 1854, and the mother died in Minnesota December 12, 1864. Our subject was well educated in the public schools and completed his training in the Bucksport seminary. He came to California via the isthmus in 1854 and located first near Nevada City. He mined there for a year and then bought a claim and did well. The following spring he sold out and turned his attention to lumbering. For twenty years Mr. Day was principally engaged in lumbering, and he wrought in various sections. Four years out of this, however, he was engaged in butchering in Nevada. Following that he was in Truckee, and for about twenty years he was active in lumbering there. During this time his family was in Sacramento about four years. Then Mr. Day came to Wardner, and the dairy business engaged him for four and one-half years. Then he went into the grocery business until 1902, in which year he sold out and retired from business. He has a beautiful home at the corner of Second and Cedar streets in Wallace, where the family reside at the present time. Mr. Day has one sister, Mrs. Bernice Robinson, in Minneapolis, her husband being a retired capitalist.

At Virginia City, Nevada, on December 29, 1864, Mr. Day married Miss Ellen, daughter of James and Mary (McAvit) Powers, and a native of Plattsburg, New York. The father was a native of Ireland and came to the United States in 1812, being seventeen years of age. He came at the time of the battle of Plattsburg, New York, and was in company with his uncle, Captain Edward Hayes. He died in May, 1865. The mother of Mrs. Day was also a native of Ireland, and came to New York state when a young girl. Mrs. Day has one brother and one sister,—Richard Powers, an extensive land owner in Plattsburg, New York; Mrs. Katherine Bancroft, in Westfield, Massachusetts. Mrs. Day was educated in the public schools and later in select schools. Mrs. Day is a devout Catholic and an estimable lady. Mr. Day is one of the principal owners of the famous Hercules, and his son, Harry L., mentioned elsewhere, is manager of the same. Mr. Day has always been a stanch and active Republican and has held many responsible offices at the hands of the people. He was county commissioner for five years in California, and for several terms in this county. He is a man of worth and integrity and has always been active in business, and now, in the golden years of his life, he is retiring to enjoy the rewards of his enterprise and sagacity.



Mr. and Mrs. Day have the following named children: Harry L., Eleanor, Eugene R., Jarome J., Blanche E. These all own equal shares with their father in the famous Hercules mine.

JOHN W. WIMER, who is at present the efficient assayer for the Frisco mine at Gem, is one of the reliable and progressive business men of the district, and has demonstrated in long years of excellent enterprise here his worth, integrity and skill. He was born in Eugene, Oregon, on January 14, 1872, the son of Adam J. and Lydia E. Wimer. The father was born in Ohio, crossed the plains to California in 1849 and after six years of mining, came to the Willamette valley, where he embarked on the mercantile sea. He now dwells with his wife in Uniontown, Washington, retired from active business. The mother was born in Iowa and crossed the plains with her husband and has been his constant companion since. Our subject was reared principally in Uniontown, Washington, and there received a good public schooling. Later he finished his educational training in the Spokane business college, and then commenced as a bookkeeper. He operated for the White & Bender and the Tiger stores for four years and then took a position with the Frisco people, where he has continued for eight years. He commenced the study of assaying years ago, and has continued a devoted pupil to the science and has attained excellent skill and a deep knowledge of it in the time of his study.

Mr. Wimer has three brothers, Glen, Frank, Ellis, and three sisters, Estelle Wade, Zola and Bernice. He is a member of the Elks and the A. F. & A. M. In political matters he is allied with the Republicans and is a man of keen perception and weighs the questions of the day with a discriminating and discerning mind.

OTTO FREEMAN. A man of integrity, enterprise and talent, well informed in business and especially so in his line, which embraces real estate and mining brokerage, Mr. Freeman is to be numbered with the substantial business men of Wallace and is transacting a thriving business. A detailed account of his career will be quite in place in the history of his county and we append the same with pleasure.

Otto Freeman was born in Sweden on February 19, 1858, being the son of Jeppa Froberg and Anna (Ofelt) Freeman, natives of Sweden. The father was born in 1812 and died in 1899. He was a non-commissioned officer for eighteen years in the army and later was a bookkeeper. The mother's father was also a non-commissioned officer in the Swedish army, was born in 1815, and died in 1881. Our subject attended the public school in his native place, and took a special course in geometry when twenty. In 1882 he bade farewell to his native land and came to the United States. In Michigan he did contract work on the railroad and then spent four years in some of the leading iron mines of that state. After that he did various work all the way from that place to the west, and landed in Spokane, where he remained until May, 1890, at which date he came to Wallace, and was engaged in various capacities in the different mines of this section. Mr. Freeman was active in these years and he became personally acquainted with about every property of any note in this entire mining region, and also did considerable prospecting. In April, 1901, he opened his present office and since that time he has attended strictly to this line of business and made a good success. He is prepared to furnish information regarding any mine in the Coeur d'Alene district, and handles stock on commission. Last year he disposed of over fifty thousand shares of the Tarbox and other mines. He is promoting the Horn Silver mine, Powhattan, Arlington, Belmont and several others. He has promoted others and he is considered an expert in deciding on mining property in this section.

Fraternally Mr. Freeman is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., Wallace, No. 33, being noble grand and recording secretary. Politically he is a Socialist. He has the following brothers and sisters: August, a tobacconist; Johannes, school inspector in Sweden; Nels, station master on the railroad; Per, baggageman; Carl, switchman; Elsie Eliason; Christina, a widow: Johanna, a school teacher.

JAMES H. TAYLOR. The Coeur d'Alene Iron Works, one of the prosperous and large business industries of the city of Wallace, is handled and owned by Taylor & Whitlow. The subject of this article is manager of the establishment and is both a practical man in all departments of the plant, as well as a thorough business man. The plant consists of a first class blacksmith shop fitted to do the largest work, a fine machine shop and a good foundry and they are prepared to do any piece of work in their lines demanded in this section of the country, and are having a thriving and ever increasing patronage, owing to the excellent work turned out and the thorough business principles upon which the industry is operated.

James H. Taylor was born in Philadelphia on January 13, 1869, being the son of Timothy and Jemima Taylor, natives of England, where also they were married. They came to the United States in 1868 and the father wrought at his trade, that of a millwright, until his death in 1898, being aged fifty-four then. The mother is still living in Philadelphia. Our subject remained in Philadelphia until he was twenty-one. During these years he attended common schools, worked in the woolen mills and learned the millwright's and patternmaker's trades. When twenty-one he came to Montana and wrought at his trades in various places and in 1895 he came to the Coeur d'Alene country. He wrought here for eighteen months and then returned to Montana for one year, after which he came back to Wallace and leased his present foundry. In September, 1902, Mr. Taylor formed a partnership with Charles Whitlow and purchased the plant. Since then they have devoted their entire attention to the work and have made a good success of it. They handle as many as twenty-three men and their business is rapidly increasing.

Mr. Taylor has one brother and four sisters: Frank, a machinist in our subject's foundry and shop; Mrs. Clara Guest, Sadie Wickworth, Bessie and Nellie, single, all in Philadelphia. Mr. Taylor is a member of the W. W. and the Elks in Wallace. He is a Republican and active, having been in the conventions. Mr. Taylor is a member of the Board of Trade, and always labors for the general welfare and advancement of the city.

GUS EHRENBERG, the assistant manager of the Frisco Consolidated Mining Company, limited, is one of the capable and thorough mining men of the northwest, and the position which he now holds, wherein he has manifested efficiency and a consummate knowledge of both men and mines, with executive ability and insight into details, becoming a leader, has been graced with a completeness in management that brings satisfaction alike to mine owner and operators.

Gus Ehrenberg was born in Sweden, November 15, 1868, the son of John P. and Bertha (Christopher) Ehrenberg, both natives of Sweden also. The father died when this son was one year old and the mother was called to the world beyond when he was seven years old. Thus being left an orphan, he remained with his older brothers and sisters and with them came to the United States when he was aged ten. They lived in Leadville, Colorado, for three years and there he attended the district school. Then came a move to Boulder, Colorado, where he was engaged in the pursuit of knowledge until 1885, at which time he entered Bethany College, at Lindsboro, Kansas, from which he took his degree in 1888. He returned to Colorado and soon we find him in the office of the Leadville Mines, limited. In the spring of 1889, he went thence to Sonora, Mexico, with the Santa Anna Mining Company and was hoist engineer for a year. After this Mr. Ehrenberg came on to Montana, where he worked under ground in the Clipper mine for a time. Next he came to Helena and there entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Express Company, remaining until 1893. He then took a position with Peter Winne, a real estate and insurance man, where he remained for one year and then entered into partnership with him, the firm being known as Winne & Ehrenberg. He continued in this capacity until 1897, then sold his interest in the firm and came thence to the Coeur d'Alene country and at once was installed in charge of the office of the Frisco mines. He held this position with display of excellent ability until December, 1900, when

Mr. MacDonald, manager, retired from the employ of the company, and Mr. Ehrenberg was installed in his place. Since that time Mr. Ehrenberg has conducted the affairs of the company, both its mines and its mills, and has shown himself a man of capabilities of a high order and worthy of the fullest confidence of the management of the mine. It will be noticed by this outline of Mr. Ehrenberg's career that he has had practical and full experience along all lines from the underground work, the management of the office, the positions requiring technical skill, to the general management of a large concern, all of which has amply fitted a man of his talent to fully discharge his important duties with becoming skill and sagacity. Mr. Ehrenberg has two brothers and two sisters, Charles, J. Walter, Mrs. Bernard MacDonald, Mrs. Swan Anderson.

Mr. Ehrenberg is an enthusiastic member of the Elks and is also a member of the A. F. & A. M., the R. A. M., the K. T. and the Shriners. He is a Republican and active in the interests of the county and state. Mr. Ehrenberg has been delegate twice to the state conventions and three times to the county conventions. He is a man of influence and of decided ideas and is able to give good and sufficient reasons for his acts and belief. In fact, although Mr. Ehrenberg is a man of excellent spirit and maintains a high sense of honor, he is strictly governed in all his business and social life by wisdom and sound judgment and conserves the interest of right and justice in all lines.

ARTHUR C. COGSWELL. The natural ability and real worth of the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article, brought to the front by a determined will and fitted for the prosecution of a large business by a careful and thorough training, have fitted him to hold the leading position in Burke, where he is operating at this time. He is postmaster of that town and manager of the Tiger Mercantile Company's establishment in connection. He is one of the rising men of the district and is popular and highly respected.

Arthur C. Cogswell was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, on April 11, 1868, the son of William H. and Mary (Woodill) Cogswell, natives of Nova Scotia. The family is an old English and prominent line and some of them were the Pilgrims in the Mayflower while others came and founded Halifax. Our subject descended from the Halifax line. The father died in Rockford, Washington, in 1897. The mother came from an old English family and died in Rockford in 1894. Our subject was reared and educated in Halifax and graduated from the high school there when thirteen, having also carried the business college course in the evenings. When he was seventeen, the family came to Oregon and four years later removed to Rockford, Washington, where our subject was partner with his father in general merchandising. In 1895 Mr. Cogswell came to Murray and took charge of the late M. Prager's business and continued with the company for one year. After the death of that gentleman our subject came to Burke and took charge of the Tiger Mercantile establishment and has demonstrated his ability and efficiency here. He has one brother, Byron F., and one sister, Mrs. Rose, whose husband is manager of a steamboat company and a prominent merchant in Dawson, where they dwell. It is of note that the well known philanthropist, Cogswell, now deceased, of San Francisco, is a second cousin of our subject's father.

In April, 1897, at Rockford, Washington, Mr. Cogswell married Miss Anna, daughter of Alfred M. and Regina Rud, natives of Norway, now residing in Rockford. Mrs. Cogswell was born in Elgin, Illinois. Mr. Cogswell is a member of the K. P., being past C. C., of the Elks and in political matters is a Republican and active. He has been delegate to the state convention and was secretary of the fifth senatorial district in Washington several years. He is now a member of the county central committee.

O. D. JONES, a popular and successful business man of Wallace, is one of the firm of Hayes & Jones, leading clothiers, gents' furnishers and shoe dealers of Wallace. They carry an excellent stock, both as to quality and assortment, do a thriving business and are up-to-date merchants in every respect. Fifteen thousand dollars worth, and more of well selected goods are on their shelves at all times.

O. D. Jones was born in Indiana on August 23, 1861, being the son of James R. and Mary A. (Carr) Jones, natives of Kentucky and Indiana, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Indiana, served through the Civil war in an Indiana regiment and died in 1892 at Humansville, Missouri. The mother now lives in Missouri. Our subject was raised in Indiana and graduated from the high school at the age of nineteen. At that age he went to Missouri and one year later to Arkansas and in a few months from that time he was in Pocatello, where on March, 1883, he went to railroading. He did contract work there and in Pullman, Washington, and in February, 1884, he came to Murray, where he did excellent business in the placer mines. After that venture Mr. Jones did quartz mining, having an interest in the Occident. He sold that property in 1892 and about that time he was appointed postmaster of Murray, which position he filled with faithfulness and efficiency for four years. During this time he had been interested with Mr. Smith in the coal and brokerage business and after he resigned the postmastership in Murray he came to Wallace and actively engaged with Mr. Smith. Two years later he sold out and bought a half interest with Mr. J. J. Hayes, where we find him at the present time. He brought to the firm a wealth of excellent business ability, enterprise and integrity and they now do one of the finest trades in the city.

Fraternally Mr. Jones is affiliated with the K. of P. and the Elks and is popular and highly esteemed in these relations as also in all his walks. Politically he is a Democrat and a forceful factor in the campaigns. Mr. Jones has two brothers and one sister, W. P., a miner at Wardner; Frank S., a merchant at Deer Lodge, Montana; Lione J. England, in Missouri.

On February 27, 1894, Mr. Jones married Miss Ella Stabnenow, whose parents now live in Germany. The nuptials occurred in Murray and to this couple there has been born one child, Leslie.

JOHN CARLSON, of the firm of Carlson & Erickson, proprietors of the Carlson & Erickson saloon, in Gem, is a man of large experience in the mining world and in addition to his business here has some fine interests in a promising group of claims that he assisted to locate some years since. He was born in Sweden on December 30, 1870, the son of Carl and Lizzie (Swanson) Peterson, natives of Sweden. The father is a carpenter and builder and lives in Sweden now. The mother died in September, 1902, in her native land. Our subject was educated in the public schools until he was fifteen and then came to the United States. He at once took a position in the mines and in the mining mills in Colorado and for six years he was found steadily pursuing his way in these lines and during this time he became a very skillful miner and a good judge of minerals, which knowledge has been of inestimable value to him in his subsequent career. In 1891 Mr. Carlson came to the Coeur d'Alene country, and for the first eleven months was engaged in the Frisco. Then in company with his brother, Andrew Peterson, Gus Nelson and Gus Peterson, he located the group of claims referred to and known as the Great Eastern. They are located near the Mammoth and since their location they have been pushing development work vigorously. They have eleven hundred feet of tunneling and the showings justify the work being done, as the property is one of the promising mines of the district. And here we wish to mention that Mr. Carlson is one of the men whose skilled knowledge tells him that the Coeur d'Alene country is one of the greatest mining districts of the world and he manifests his excellent judgment in unbounded faith in the mineral resources of this section, which doubtless are but in their infancy at the present time. In June, 1898, Mr. Carlson embarked in the saloon business and since that time he has conducted the business with his partner in addition to his mining interests. He has one brother, Gus, and two sisters, Mrs. Emma Lundine, Mrs. Tilda Wineburg.

At Spokane, in 1897, Mr. Carlson married Mrs. Anna Sawyer, a native of Minnesota. She has one daughter, Maud Conlon, in Rossland, British Columbia. Mr. Carlson is a member of the K. P.

PAUL F. SMITH. When the time was ripe for the organization of the Wallace Board of Trade the subject of this sketch was a prime mover in the accomplishment of the excellent enterprise and to-day he holds the responsible position of president of that body and skill, executive ability and keen business discrimination are of inestimable value to the board, and thus to the town of Wallace. Mr. Smith is conducting a prosperous business in the line of grain, coal and merchandise broker, and his efforts are crowned with a gratifying success.

Paul F. Smith was born in Adams county, Illinois, On November 20, 1861, being the son of John P. and Janie (Selby) Smith, natives of Illinois and Kentucky, respectively. Major Robert F. Smith, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was born in Philadelphia, of English parentage, and enlisted in the Sixteenth Illinois Infantry. He served four and one-half years and rose to the rank of major general. He had been in the state militia many years previous to this, and was engaged in putting down the Mormon troubles at Nauvoo and Carthage. The mother of our subject came from an old and prominent southern family, and died when this son was eight. Paul F. was reared in Illinois, and attended the district schools. When nineteen he went to Montana and entered the transfer business, where he operated for several years, and in 1884 we find him among the early ones in Eagle City, and in 1889 he settled in Wallace. He at once engaged in his present occupation, and since that time has given strict attention to business and has achieved a flattering success in this line. Fraternally Mr. Smith is a member of the Elks and of the K. of P., Lodge No. 9, in Wallace, being past C. C.

On November 25, 1889, Mr. Smith married Miss Mabel E., daughter of Oscar and Minnie Pease. The father is deceased, but the mother is now residing in Murray. Two children have been born to this marriage,—Frank, aged eleven, and Clarence, aged nine. Mr. Smith is one of the leading citizens of Wallace, and his popularity is unmistakable, for he has three times been chosen chief executive of the city.

ALBERT S. BALCH is at the present time conducting a saloon in Gem, but he is a thorough mining man, and has wrought in that line largely, while also he is now interested heavily in promising properties of this district. He was born in Kalamazoo, Michigan, on April 24, 1862, the son of Samuel R. and Elizabeth (Woods) Balch, natives of Vermont. The father came to Michigan in 1837, and his father was a native of Massachusetts. This gentleman entered the employ of John Adams when he was quite young and was brought up by Adams. The first ancestor of the Balch family known now was one of the first white children born in Plymouth bay settlements. Samuel R. Balch died in Kalamazoo, Michigan, August 3, 1890, aged eighty-six. He had been a farmer and stockman all his life. The mother of our subject was called from the scenes of earth on December 25, 1866. She came from an old New England family. Our subject was educated in Michigan and remained there until 1881, when he migrated to Missouri, doing railroad work there for two years. Then he went to Eldorado, Kansas, and learned the butcher trade, remaining until 1886. He also operated a meat market in Scott City for two years. In 1888 Mr. Balch came to Puget Sound and for eighteen months was in Tacoma, and then went to Fairhaven, where he continued until 1896. December 6, of that year, found him in the Coeur d'Alene country, where since that time he has been. Mining occupied him until 1900, when he started his present business. Mr. Balch has four brothers and one sister,—Herbert M., Elmer A., William A., Uriel K. and Laura O. Chapman.

On May 7, 1902, Mr. Balch married Miss Josephine Wandou, the wedding occurring in Wallace. Mr. Balch is a member of the I. O. O. F., Fairhaven Lodge No. 79, having been noble grand five terms; of the K. P., past C. C., being in the order since 1883; of the Uniform Rank, being Sir Knight Captain; of the Elks, and has been financial secretary of the miners' union. Mr. Balch was one of the most enthusiastic workers of the I. O. O. F., and especially of the K. P., in the Sound country, and was one of the most prominent members of the latter order in that section. He was a charter member of these lodges and did much for their advancement.

CHARLES EHRENBERG is a popular man of Gem, where he has resided for some time. He is now an efficient shift boss in the Frisco, where he has served with acceptability for some time. He was born in Sweden May 10, 1864, and his parents are mentioned elsewhere in this work. Our subject came to the United States with his brothers and sisters when young and settled in Leadville, Colorado, where he attended district school for some time, later taking a high school course. In the spring of 1881 he went to Lake valley, New Mexico, and mined there for five years. Then he returned to Colorado and remained until 1889, mining, at which time he made a trip to his native country and also traveled through the countries of Denmark, Scotland, Ireland and England. Returning to the United States, he later came on to Sonora, Mexico, where his brother was, and there he wrought in the mines for a time. Next we see Mr. Ehrenberg in Pony, Montana, and also he visited other places in that state and was employed in various capacities in the mines. It was 1891 that he came to the Coeur d'Alene country, and for three years he was in the Tiger and Poorman, and then five years were spent in the hoist, making continuous service except the time he was at the World's Fair in 1893. After this long term of service was expired Mr. Ehrenberg spent six months in British Columbia and then came to the Frisco, where he mined six months and then took his present position, in which he has constantly operated since.

On August 9, 1897, Mr. Ehrenberg married Miss Freda Larson, daughter of Carl and Ulrika (Peterson) Larson, natives of Sweden. The father died in Boulder county, Colorado, in 1885, and the mother lives there now. Mrs. Ehrenberg was born in Sweden and came to the United States with her parents when three years old. She has two brothers and two sisters,—Andrew G., Emil, Christine Norberg, Elizabeth Rawley. To this marriage have been born the following children: Thelma, aged four, Gladys, aged two, and Helen, aged six months. Mr. Ehrenburg is a member of the A. F. & A. M. the R. A. M., the K. T. and the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. In political matters Mr. Ehrenberg is an independent thinker.

ABRAHAM L. LEHMAN, M. D., V. S., is one of the leading physicians of northern Idaho and stands as a most skillful surgeon, having demonstrated his skill and ability on numerous occasions. He is not only popular with the people but is held in high repute among his confreres and is a man of keen ability in diagonsis and of deep erudition in the medical lore of the day.

Abraham L. Lehman was born in New York city, on April 14, 1865, being the son of David and Rachel (Burgham) Lehman. The father was a native of Pennsylvania, and died in 1870, aged forty-five years and had followed a mercantile life. The mother was born in Germany and died in 1898 aged sixty-five. Our subject was raised in his native place and after the grammar and high school came west, following merchandising in Mullan from 1888 to 1894. He then spent five years in the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, receiving his diploma from the medical and veterinary departments. He commenced practice in Montana and then came to Wallace, opened an office and is now at the head of a large and lucrative practice. Dr. Lehman is surgeon for the Northern Pacific and the Providence hospital. He is a man of quick and brusque manner but is possessed of a tender heart and alert sympathy and has rendered untold benefit in his service to the suffering. He has no brothers or sisters and fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., Shoshone Lodge No. 25; and with the Scottish Rite in the thirty-second degree at Spokane.

In January, 1889, Dr. Lehman married Miss Hannah, daughter of Henry and Fanny Levinger, both deceased. Five children have been born to crown this happy union, Benjamin, Walter, Fanny, Henry and Rachel.

ROY H. KINGSBURY, the capable and popular bookkeeper of the Empire State & Idaho Mining & Development Company, in Burke, is one of the rising young business men of this section and deserves representation in the history of this county. He was born in Yankton, South Dakota, on January 19, 1877, the son of Theodore A. and Frances M. (Hollister) Kingsbury. The father was born near Utica, New York, and served in the Civil war, being a surgeon. Following the war he was in a drug store in Yankton and then acted as chief clerk in the United States land office at Watertown of South Dakota. After this he owned and operated a drug store at Watertown and in May, 1888, he was called hence by death. The mother was born near Delavan, Wisconsin, and now lives in Spokane. Her father still lives at the old home place, a prominent man and an old pioneer of that state. Our subject's father and his father's brother, George W., were pioneers in South Dakota, and Kingsbury county is named for them. The uncle has served in the state legislature and is at present owner and editor of the Press and Dakotian, one of the leading papers of the state. Their sister is the wife of Colonel Melvin Griggsby of the Rough Riders. Our subject remained in Dakota until thirteen, being in the high school in Watertown then. At that time he and his mother and sister removed to Spokane where he resumed his studies in the high school. After the high school course, Mr. Kingsbury learned bookkeeping and stenography and occupied a position in the office of the Echo mills. When he resigned from there he was wheat buyer and bookkeeper. Then he was with the Washington Mill Company for a time and in January, 1900, he accepted his present position with the Empire State and Idaho Mining and Development Company, and has since that time steadily continued in the discharge of the duties incumbent upon him here. He has one sister, Mabel I., court stenographer several years in Spokane and now in Chicago.

On February 20, 1901, Mr. Kingsbury married Miss Bertha L., daughter of John W. and Ina A. Henderson, natives of Pennsylvania. The father is now deceased and the mother lives at Sprague, Washington. Mrs. Kingsbury was born in Erie, Pennsylvania, and has one brother, Martin C., and one sister, May. Mr. Kingsbury is a member of the K. P., while he and his wife belong to the Episcopalian church.

J. WALTER EHRENBERG is well known as one of the most skillful wood workers in the Coeur d'Alene district. He comes from the nation whence came some of the most skillful mechanics known to the civilized world, among which is Ericsson, world famous for his skilled inventions. Our subject was born in Sweden, February 19, 1856. His parents and brothers and sisters are mentioned elsewhere in this work. In 1879 Mr. Ehrenberg came to Leadville, Colorado, with his brothers and joined his sister, Mrs. Anderson, already there. He was well educated in the public schools of his native land and served a good apprenticeship in the wood working craft. He wrought in Leadville on the new smelter and the Little Chief mine for a year and then went to Lake Valley, New Mexico, where he did carpenter work in the mines, his brother-in-law, B. MacDonald, being there also. Next we see Mr. Ehrenberg in Boulder, Colorado, visiting, after which he went to New Mexico again and then visited his native land. He returned after the summer and wrought in various mines in New Mexico and Colorado and from Denver came to Spokane. In the time of the Murray rush, in 1884, he went thither and later went to Montana and wrought in the Lee Mountain and Cumberland mines. In 1892 Mr. Ehrenberg returned to Denver and erected a commodious dwelling and determined to remain there. But soon his adventurous spirit led him to the Coeur d'Alene country and he wrought in the Frisco for six months and then returned to Denver and married. The lady becoming his wife was Ingard Johnson, who was born in Sweden, in October, 1870. Her parents, Magnus and Martha (Gummerson) Johnson, were natives of Sweden and now live there. Mrs. Ehrenberg had one brother, Peter, and two sisters, Inez and Sophie. On August 20, 1899, death invaded the happy home of our subject and took hence the beloved wife. Typhoid fever was the cause of the death and it occurred in Spokane. Two children were left to mourn this sad loss, Arthur and Ruby, aged now nine and seven respectively. After his marriage, Mr. Ehrenberg took a trip to Sweden and also visited the World's fair with his bride. Then he came to this district and took a position in the Frisco and, excepting six months in the Tiger, has been with this company since that time. In 1901 he was given entire charge of the carpenter work and is an efficient and faithful man, deserving of the confidence and esteem that are reposed in him liberally. Mr. Ehrenberg's children are with his sister, Mrs. Anderson, in Boulder, Colorado. Mr. Ehrenberg is a Republican and is also a member of the Maccabees.

DAVID A. PORTER, deceased. Although Mr. Porter was no politician in the sense of the word's ordinary use, and never sought personal preferment, still in the election of 1902 he was chosen county surveyor of Shoshone county by a handsome majority, his name appearing on the Republican ticket.

David A. Porter was born in Chicopee, Massachusetts, on October 13, 1871, being the son of James E. and Eliza F. (Westcott) Porter, both descended from prominent and old New England families. The father was born in Maine and his family dates back to David K. Porter, who came from Weymouth, England, in 1635. James E. Porter graduated from West Point in 1869 and was first lieutenant in the Seventh United States Cavalry under General Custer and was killed in the famous Custer massacre in 1876. Our subject spent the first thirteen years of his life in Rhode Island and Maine and then came with his mother to California and during the next ten years he prepared for and completed a university course in Berkeley, graduating as civil engineer in the class of 1894. He was then appointed on the United States geological survey for southern California and in the Wodd river country, Idaho. In 1895 Mr. Porter came to Wardner and for five and one-half years he was civil engineer for the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine. In 1901 he came to Wallace. This was in March and he followed his profession until his election and after that he added to his duties those of the county position, in which he was faithful and efficient. Mr. Porter was a popular young business man and was recognized by all as possessed of excellent talent and integrity.

Fraternally he was affiliated with the United Order of Junior Mechanics of Wardner; with the A. F. and A. M., Shoshone, 25; with the Wallace Chapter, R. A. M.; with the Delta Kappa Epsilon, a college fraternity.

On Septemebr 11, 1898, in San Francisco, California, Mr. Porter married Miss Augusta, daughter of Urias S. and Susan H. Nye. The father was a California pioneer, crossing the plains in 1849. He was one of the most prominent raisers of fine stock in California and his large ranch was situated in Glenn county, where he lived for many years, but is now deceased. The mother now resides in Willow, Glenn county, California. Mrs. Porter is a graduate of the Berkeley high school and also took a special course in the university. Mr. and Mrs. Porter were blessed with two children, Ernestine, aged three, and James F., aged two.

On account of his excellent work in the university, Mr. Porter received the rank of major in the National Guards. He always displayed those excellent qualities of worth, integrity and kindness which commended him to all who had the pleasure of his association. He rose rapidly in his profession and had he lived, doubtless he would have become signally honored for the excellent work he would have accomplished. The sudden and painful taking away of Mr. Porter occurred on April 18, 1903. He was working hard on a flume line for the New Jersey mine four miles from Wallace, the company being anxious to have it in working order soon; he was putting forth every effort to complete the work in hand. He ate as usual on the night of his death, wrote until late on his notes and after making the last entry, "The grade came out fine, will finish tomorrow," he retired. In the morning he was found cold in death. Failure of his heart action is attributed as the cause of his demise.

The funeral was held amid mourning on every hand for David A. Porter was a general favorite and was an exemplary young man. His sorrowing-widow and two children are left to mourn the sad death.

MICHAEL MAHER is one of the worthy pioneers of the Coeur d'Alene country and at present a citizen of Burke, where he handles a cigar store and attends to the business of justice of the peace, having had the confidence of the people reposed in him by being elected to that office. He is a capable and impartial peace officer and has the respect and esteem of all .

Michael Maher was born in Ireland, on September 28, 1846, the son of Edmund and Margaret (Doyle) Maher, natives of the Emerald Isle, but now deceased. Our subject was reared and educated in Ireland and in 1867 he determined to try his fortunes in America and accordingly came hither. He spent four years in New Jersey and then journeyed to Sacramento in 1874. After a few months there he went to Nevada and for ten years was active in mining, being in the Comstock. In 1881 he came to Oregon and did railroad contract work on the O. R. & N. Two years later he was similarly employed on the N. P. and in 1884 he came on the crest of the Prichard creek excitement to Eagle City. He operated a general merchandise establishment in Murray for two years, then removed to Mullan, where he was in the mercantile business for ten years. In 1897 Mr. Maher came to Burke and opened his present establishment and has continued in its operation and the duties of justice of the peace since. He was justice in Mullan a number of years and has served in this office for ten years altogether. Mr. Maher is a Democrat, always has been and always expects to be. He has the old Jeffersonian doctrines well established in his political belief and is solid. He is a member of the Catholic church. Mr. Maher has two brothers, John and Thomas. He has never left the retirement of the celibatarian and is still blessed with its quiet joys and charms.

MRS. ELEANOR BOYCE, whose parents, Henry L. and Ellen (Powers) Day, are well known in the Coeur d'Alene country, is now a resident of Denver, Colorado. She was born in Story county, Nevada, on December 23, 1867. She remained with her parents until she arrived at the age for teaching and then, having been well prepared by various educational courses for that important work, she took it up. Mrs. Boyce had finished the grammar and high schools and had graduated with distinction from the state normal at San Jose, California, the oldest one in the state, before she took up her profession and then she entered on the work with the sense of a first-class preparation and she made a first-class success in the educator's chair. Shortly after her graduation, Mrs. Boyce taught school in Spokane and for a number of years was one of the prominent teachers there. Then came three years of devoted labor in this line in Wardner and two years followed in Wallace. For five years after that we might have found her toiling conscientiously in the Gem schools. She is interested in the mine with her father, brother and sisters. She is at the present residing in Denver, but she has been closely identified with the Coeur d'Alene country and is highly esteemed here.

JACOB LOCKMAN stands at the head of one of the larges establishments in Wallace, being manager of the Sunset Brewing Company and part owner. He is a keen business man and has manifested his ability in the affairs of the company and in bringing to the front the products of the brewery in a most successful and popular manner.

Jacob Lockman was born in Germany on January 23, 1857, being the son of Jacob and Rebecca (Pain) Lockman, natives also of the fatherland. They came to the United States in 1871, and the father died in 1894 in Benton county, Iowa, having been a farmer. The mother died in Germany in 1902. Our subject was reared and educated in Iowa, after coming to this country, until 1876, when he went to the Black Hills where he did butchering and mining. In 1880 he went to southern Idaho, and in 1886 he came west to Butte, Montana. He was engaged in various employments for two years and then came to north Idaho, landing in Wallace in 1889. He was engaged in the saloon business with Thomas Mitchell until 1892 when he sold that business and went into the bottling business and handled ice. In 1897 he bought out his partner and on January 1, 1901, he organized the Sunset Brewing Company, of which David Holzman is president and our subject is secretary, treasurer and manager. They have the finest and largest brewery in the northern part of the state, and it is equipped with the best and latest appliances for the manufacture of beer. They have an excellent large ice plant and do a good business in that line, as also they do in wholesaling liquors and bar supplies. The beer made here is justly famous for it is of the best to be found and rivals any made in the United States. The plant is of ten thousand barrels capacity per year. Mr. Lockman is the moving spirit and really the head of this establishment, and it is due to his wise skill and energy that such fine success has crowned their efforts.

In 1893 Mr. Lockman married Miss Frieda, daughter of John Graf, a prominent farmer in Kootenai county. Two children have been born to this union,—Paul, aged nine, and Tilden, aged seven. Mr. Lockman is a member of the B. P. O. E., Cœur d'Alene Lodge, No. 331, being one of the organizers of the order in Wallace. He is allied with the Democratic party and is active in all campaigns. Mr. Lockman has two brothers,—John and Henry, living in the east.

JULIUS BRASS is a prominent and substantial business man of Wallace and is one of the members of the board of trade, while his enterprise and sagacity have built for him a business of generous proportions and thriving patronage. He is proprietor of the meat market where he has been found closely attending to business for a number of years.

Julius Brass was born in Sheboygan county, Wisconsin, on May 24, 1868, the son of Cornelius and Freda (Strassbergur) Brass. The father was born in Germany, came to the United States when sixteen, located in Wisconsin and died in 1881, aged thirty-six. The mother was born in Wisconsin and now lives on the old homestead. Our subject attended district school and labored on the farm until he was fourteen years of age, and then he went to Sheboygan and learned the butcher trade. Following this he spent three years in Milwaukee and three and a half in Michigan. Next we see him in Seattle, Portland, Spokane, and in 1889 he located permanently in Wallace. For six years after coming here Mr. Brass was associated with Follett & Harris, and then he entered partnership with Frank M. Rothrock and together they conducted a thriving business until May, 1902, when Mr. Brass bought the interest of his partner and since that time he has conducted the business himself. Mr. Brass has four brothers and three sisters,—Otto, Herman, Gustave, Cornelius, Bertha Myer, Lena Buscher, Emma Hahn.

At Wardner on December 2, 1894, Mr. Brass married Miss Anna, daughter of Thomas and Anna (Owens) Ryan. Mrs. Brass was born in Bloomfield, Nevada county, California, and she has two brothers, John and Thomas R., the latter being on the gunboat Helena in Manila. Mr. Ryan was born in New York, and died in California in 1888. He came to the Golden State in the early 'fifties and followed mining and the hotel business, and for years was in the employ of Fair & Mackey and superintended the Comstock and other of their properties. He had valuable mining interests of his own and was a prominent man in Nevada county. Mrs. Ryan was a native of Ireland and now lives in Wallace. To Mr. Brass and his wife three children have been born, Lester J., Gustav W., Verla A. M. Mr. Brass is a member of the I. O. O. F., W. W. and in political alliances is with the Republicans.

DAVID C. McKISSICK, of Wallace, Idaho, is a man of first class business qualifications, possessed of a genial spirit, has had a vast experience in the affairs of life, and is particularly acquainted with the hardships and arduous labors incident to frontier existence.

Mr. McKissick was born in Jordan, New York, on February 15, 1853. In 1882-3 he was superintendent of a wheat farm in North Dakota, in January, 1884, came to the Coeur d'Alene country, locating at Kingston, and later he came to what is now known as Wallace and went placer mining on Canyon and Nine-mile creeks, but met with poor success. In 1886 he was purser on the Coeur d'Alene steamer, running from Coeur d'Alene City to Old Mission. The following spring he opened a wholesale liquor and cigar house, and did well until the depression of 1893, when this, coupled with the strike of the year previous, caused him to suspend business. He had previous to that time been burned out in the big fire. Following the strike, Mr. McKissick was engaged variously until he entered the employ of the Wallace Light & Water Company, and two years later was placed as superintendent, in which position he is still engaged. On September 12, 1892, Mr. McKissick married Miss Madeline Joe Colburn, a native of Kansas. One child has been born to this union, Joe Carson, aged five. Politically, Mr. McKissick is a Republican. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Shoshone Lodge No. 25, and of the Rose Croix Scottish Rite, also of the Elks Lodge No. 331, all of Wallace.

CHARLES FRIDSTRAND is well known in Mullan and at the present time he occupies the position of shift boss in the Morning mine, in which capacity he renders efficient service and has the confidence and esteem of all. He was born in Sweden, on March 28, 1864, the son of Peter and Mary (Erickson) Fridstrand, natives of Sweden, where the father lives now retired from active work. He was a miner. The mother died in 1892. Our subject was educated in his native place and learned thoroughly the mining art from his father, and in 1890 came the time when he sought the greater opportunities of the United States. Bidding native land and friends farewell, he came hither, landing on April 14th of that year. He went at once to Wisconsin mines and two years later he wrought in the iron mines of Michigan. There he remained until 1896, when he came to Mullan and took a position in the Morning mine. He rose in the esteem of the management and over a year ago he was appointed shift boss and in that capacity he is now operating. Mr. Fridstrand has three sisters, Louise, Jennke, and Eva, all in Sweden.

On July 5, 1896, Mr. Fridstrand married Miss Jennie Massing, whose parents and brothers and sisters are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Four children have been born to this union, Hilda, Hannah, Esther, and Helen. Mr. Fridstrand is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Scandinavian Brotherhood. Mrs. Fridstrand is handling the Golden Rule restaurant and she and her husband are good substantial people of the community. Mr. Fridstrand has a good reputation as a capable and reliable man and is worthy of it.

CHARLES H. REEVES is a leading capitalist and mining man of the Coeur d'Alene country and has his headquarters in Wallace, where he devotes himself to supervising his mining matters and also gives attention to other property. Mr. Reeves is a man of large business experience and has demonstrated himself to be possessed of both executive ability and keen discrimination, while sound wisdom has always characterized him.

Charles H. Reeves was born in Illinois on April 22, 1842, the son of John and Elizabeth (Jennings) Reeves, natives of Ohio. They both came from old and prominent American families, the father of English and the mother of Irish extraction. The father died in 1897, aged ninety-one, and the mother died shortly after the war, aged sixty-three. The family removed to Wisconsin and then to Iowa, and in these states our subject received his education and was reared. In 1862 Charles H. enlisted in Company B, Twenty-first Iowa Infantry, under Captain W. D. Crook. When he was mustered out he was under Colonel S. S. Merrill, who afterwards was governor of Iowa for four terms. Mr. Reeves was active the first winter after Price, then was transferred to the Vicksburg campaigns, then participated in the movements and battles at Jackson, Mississippi. He also was in the struggle about New Orleans, then went to Texas, helped capture Mobile and took part in the Red River expedition. At the close of the war Mr. Reeves was honorably discharged, and having gained a good knowledge of the tonsorial art in the army, he went to work in that occupation and more or less until seven years ago he followed it. He operated a shop in Iowa, Wisconsin and Minneapolis and came to Wallace in 1889. Here Mr. Reeves opened a shop and did an excellent business, also handling mines. He owned a half interest in the Hercules and later sold a portion, having now a goodly portion of it. He has been associated with Harry L. Day and with him located the Happy Day group, adjoining the Hercules. He also has interests in many other fine properties. Mr. Reeves has one brother and one sister,—Nathan and Mrs. Mary M. Shattuck. Mr. Reeves is a member of the A. F. & A. M., the Elks, and takes an active part in the Wallace board of trade.

On July 4, 1861, at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, Mr. Reeves married Miss Annie, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Walker) Watson, natives of England. The father is deceased, and the mother lives in Mason City, Iowa. Mrs. Reeves was born in Wisconsin, and has three sisters,—Mrs. Mary J. Farrell; Mrs. Louisa, widow of V. K. Goss; Mrs. Josephine, widow of C. B. Maben. To this marriage there have been born fifteen children, ten of whom are living, as follows: Ella, wife of L. H. Woodcock, a millwright in Wallace; Carrie, wife of F. H. Hopper, a prospector in Spokane; Ida, wife of C. E. Brooks, who has charge of Mr. Reeves' stock ranch at St. Regis, Montana; Lemuel C., a barber in Colfax; Jay A., a student at the university in Moscow; Alice J., at home; Arthur E., at home; Sidro D., a student at St. Helen's hall in Portland; Harry H., a student at Moscow; Bessie, at home. Mr. Reeves has a stock ranch of four hundred acres, besides his other property. He is a Republican, but while he has frequently been delegate to the conventions, he does not aspire to political distinction. Mr. Reeves is a good, substantial man of excellent business ability and has not only made a first class success in his career but has so conducted himself that he has won the respect and admiration of all.

EMIL ZEITFUCHS is one of the leading liquor dealers of the town of Wallace and he also handles bar fixtures and supplies of all kinds. He was born in Germany, on August 24, 1836, and his parents died when he was small. He received his education in that country and in 1852 came to the United States. He landed in Cincinnati and at once began to learn the cabinet maker's trade. In 1858 he went to San Francisco and there wrought at his trade until 1862. Then came the journey to Portland, where he remained until 1896. From 1862 to 1873, he was at the head of a large furniture establishment which was burned in that year. After the adjustment of the insurance companies the business was continued and the partnership dissolved. Mr. Zeitfuchs then bought a farm for five thousand dollars and after improving it for some time sold it for fifteen thousand dollars. In 1878 he embarked in the wholesale liquor business in Portland and took as partner, his son-in-law, Carl Seelig. The business continued until 1884 when he dissolved partnership and engaged in other transactions. In 1888, with associates, he organized the Pacific Coast Furniture Company, being secretary and treasurer and principal stockholder. They did well until the advent of the Northern Pacific, when the eastern competition closed their business and he lost fourteen thousand dollars in the transaction. Our subject remained in Portland, closing up his various business deals and handling real estate until 1896, when he came to Wallace and opened his present business and since that time he has enjoyed a good patronage. Mr. Zeitfuchs has one brother, Ulrich.

At Portland, in 1864, Mr. Zeitfuchs married Miss Carmelita Savedra, a native of Chile and now deceased. In 1884, Mr. Zeitfuchs married Tillie Stockman, a native of Germany who came to the United States with her parents when young. Her father is dead and her mother is living in Wallace. Mr. and Mrs. Zeitfuchs have one adopted daughter, that married Carl Seelig, who is now deceased. Two sons were born to Mrs. Seelig, Emil and Charles and they live with Mr. Zeitfuchs. Emil has been with White & Bender for five years and Charles is assistant cashier of the Wallace bank. Both young men are prominent in social circles and are members of the Elks.

JOHN B. JOHNSON. Among the substantial and capable business men of Wallace, we should not fail to mention J. B. Johnson who is proprietor of the Banquet restaurant, one of the finest and most popular eating places in the northwest. It is especially noted among traveling men and enjoys a first-class patronage, which its excellence in appointment, service and cuisine richly merits. For twelve years last passed, this restaurant has been in constant operation and it is the oldest one in the county. Mr. Johnson has been in the restaurant business many years and is skilled in all departments. He is a member of some of the leading fraternal orders and is allied with the commercial and general development of the district.

SYLVESTER MARKWELL is one of the hardy pioneers whose sterling worth and enterprise have enabled him to become one of the leading men of the Coeur d'Alene district where he is of enviable standing and has wrought well for more than a decade, leading the good work of developing the country and building up the industries.

Sylvester Markwell was born in Indiana, on June 12, 1842, the son of Hiram and Sarah (Noggle) Markwell. The father was born in Kentucky and served two years for the Union. The mother was born in Pennsylvania and his father is a relative of the Hearsts of Kentucky and the Arbuckles, of New York. Our subject early learned dairying and came to Nodaway county, Missouri, and remained there until twenty-five. Then he went to Alder gulch, Montana, and located a rich claim, which, however, he deserted on the strength of richer ones ahead and in the endeavor to find them they were left afoot by the Indians stealing their horses. Thus handicapped, they made their way to Denver through great suffering and hardship. Mr. Markwell went thence to Cheyenne and operated a dairy, later returned to Missouri, and next we find him in Nevada. He was engaged in stock raising and was present in Virginia City when the noted Slade was hung. Ten years in that state and Mr. Markwell went to California and took up the butcher business for ten years in Healdsburg. In 1890 he came to Wallace and managed the dairy of Robert Neill. The next year he bought the business and with his sons continued it until 1896, in which year he retired. Mr. Markwell has two brothers, John, James, and four sisters, Maggie Boatright, Levisa Conklin, Monia Gossett, Mrs. George Cane.

On June 15, 1866, Mr. Markwell married Miss Hattie F. Stevens, at Denver, Colorado. Her father was a Methodist minister and her mother was a Crocket. Mrs. Markwell has manifested talent in the composition of poetry. She has three brothers and two sisters, Charles, Jacob, Andrew, Ella Adair, Mira Reynolds. Four sons have been born to this couple, J. Fred, Jesse E., Frank P., Charles A., and two daughters, Effie Wilmot, Emma Hardwick. Mr. Markwell and his sons are interested in the Father Lode, an extension of the famous Hercules, in which property also they bought an interest in 1896. They also have other property and are handling a force of men in development work. Mr. Markwell served in the Union army, is a member of the I. O. O. F., K. of P. and G. A. R. He and his wife are members of the Methodist church. For many years Mr. Markwell was a stanch and prominent Democrat but for the last two years he has been allied with the Republicans.

HAROLD J. READ. Among the leading business men is to be mentioned the gentleman whose name appears above and who is a professional man of excellent standing and skill, handling a fine patronage in his dentistry work and being at the head in this important calling.

Harold J. Read was born in Hudson, Kansas, on July 14, 1875, being the son of James H. and Laura J. (Johnson) Read. Mr. James H. Read was a native of Illinois and a lineal descendant of George Read, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He was a merchant and served through the entire Civil war. He was captain and escaped from Libby prison, and endured all the hardships of that terrible ordeal. He was lieutenant of a volunteer company from Illinois and died in 1879, aged thirty-seven. The mother of our subject is a native of Portland and lives in Portland, Oregon. She was married in Kansas and comes from an old family. Our subject was raised in Coffeyville, Kansas, until sixteen and graduated from the high school. Then he came to Butte, Montana, and entered a dental office and after completing his course he came to Wallace, where he has practiced his profession since. In 1901 Dr. Read took a supplementary course in the dental department of Harvard University. He is skillful in his profession and has a fine patronage.

Dr. Read is a moving spirit in the business realm of the city and has done a great deal of excellent work in promoting its welfare. He was one of the leaders in the organization of the Board of Trade and has since its existence taken an active part in its work. He is chairman of the committee on mines and is active and skillful in the work devolving upon him in this capacity. Dr. Read is vice-president of the Oom Paul Mining Company, which owns the extension of the Hercules. He promoted the company and is also interested in several other mining propositions.

WILLIAM K. MOE is foreman in the Hunter mill, a position which he has held for some time and for which he is well fitted, having worked his way up in the mining business from the beginning and understanding thoroughly the intricacies of the place. He is a man of ability and good practical judgment and stands well.

William K. Moe was born in Norway, September 12, 1863, the son of Martin W. C. and Walberg (Saqueland) Moe, natives of Norway, where they now dwell. The father is a miller and farmer. Our subject was educated in his native land and remained there until 1887 when he came to the United States to seek the opportunities and success that were offered here. He located first in North Dakota, then went to Minnesota, later to Wisconsin and logged. Then he railroaded in Montana and Utah. His next enterprise was to take construction work on the Northern Pacific and continued with it as it built through this country. After this he spent a winter in the Palouse country and in the following spring he came to Mullan and took a position in the mill. He continued until the mill closed, then he wrought at Burke and came to the mill here again when it opened. He continued until 1893 when it closed again. In 1893 Mr. Moe went to the World's Fair in Chicago and then returned to the Coeur d'Alene country and was engaged in the Frisco mill two years. In 1895 he made a visit to Norway and then returned to the Frisco mill. He also wrought in the Tiger. In July, 1901, Mr. Moe accepted his present position and since that time has continued here with good success attending his efforts. He has one brother and one sister, Olof, night shift boss in the same mill; Mrs. Lena Dewey, at Independence, Colorado. Mr. Moe is a member of the I. O .O. F. and of the Scandinavian Brotherhood. He is an independent thinker in politics.

J. FRED MARKWELL is one of the men of pronounced personality, whose business successes have stamped as a man of excellent capabilities and worth. He is well known throughout the Coeur d'Alene country and has wrought here with display of keen foresight and sagacity which have brought their due reward of a good property holding and a prestige which is enviable.

Mr. Markwell is a native of Cheyenne, Wyoming, and his parents are mentioned in another portion of this work. He was educated primarily in the public schools and then took a degree from the Methodist College at Santa Rosa. He was valedictorian of his class and carried the college honors for oratory. Mr. Markwell carries from his classical work the degree of A. B., and upon completion of this course he entered the Harvard University of law and took his degree with distinction from that institution. Mr. Markwell has never turned his attention to the practice of law, as he deemed there were better opportunities in the mining world than in the legal profession. Being thus determined he refused flattering offers from large firms in California and came to the Coeur d'Alene country and his unbounded success here has led him not to regret his choice. He is operating a dairy with his brothers and in addition to this has large mining interests, among which may be mentioned the famous Hercules. Mr. Markwell has always been in business with his father and they have shared together the labors and hardships of handling a large business and have also reaped together the result of their wisdom and thrift in good returns.

On June 15, 1901, at Spokane, Mr. Markwell married Miss Elizabeth Smith, whose parents live near Deer Park, Washington. Her mother is from the Hobart family of which Vice President Hobart was a member. The maternal uncles of Mrs. Markwell are prominent in the Methodist ministry. Mrs. Markwell was reared in Minnesota. She is a graduate of the state normal and taught in Minnesota, Seattle, Topeka and Spokane. In 1896 she graduated from the school of oratory in Washington, D. C. Mrs. Markwell has the following brothers and sisters, Julia Dollman, Ruby, Maria Clark, John, William, Edward. Mr. Markwell is a member of the A. F. & A. M., the R. A. M., the K. T., the Scottish Rite Masons of Perfection Lodge, and of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Markwell and his wife are members of the Methodist church.

FRANK P. MARKWELL represents one of the largest industries of the state of Idaho and the position he occupies is held by reason of especial fitness and ability to handle large and intricate interests. He is in partnership with his brother Fred and they own and operate the dairy that supplies the entire Coeur d'Alene country. They milk two hundred and forty-six cows, having Jersey, Holstein, and Durham stock. From beginning to finish the entire business is operated with the best of wisdom and the latest and most approved methods and appliances are in use. The executive ability of our subject is manifest in the discharge of the responsible duties devolving upon him in the relation of managing with his brother the concern and they are to be congratulated on their magnificent success, which is the result of enterprise and business ability. They employ from fifteen to twenty hands all the time and the dairy is a model of order and cleanliness.

Mr. Markwell is a member of the Elks and is one of the popular young men of the district. He is a liberal supporter of the Methodist church.

Mr. Markwell has with the rest of the family valuable mining interests and among them may be mentioned the Hercules.

GRANT S. POTTER. This well known business man is one of the leading merchants of Wallace and one of the esteemed and substantial men of the section.

Grant S. Potter was born in Tompkins county, New York, on August 21, 1863, being the son of Roland E. and Mary A. (Schaeffer) Potter. The father was a native of North Carolina, from an old colonial family and is now a retired farmer in Ithaca, New York. The mother of our subject is a native of Pennsylvania and of German descent. Grant S. was reared in New York and remained there until 1888. He attended the high school and took a two years' course in the Cornell University and in 1888 he came to the Coeur d'Alene country. He did carpenter work in Wallace and other labors for a time and then opened a paint and oil store. He carries a fine stock of wall paper and also handles building material and does a good business. Mr. Potter has as a partner, G. Scott Anderson, his brother-in-law.

On July 5, 1897, Mr. Potter married Miss Nora E., daughter of Norton R. and Elnora (Atwater) Penney, who live in Gem. Mr. Penney is postmaster there. Mrs. Potter has one brother living, Norton, attending high school in Wallace, and one brother, Theodore, a graduate of Amherst College, who was drowned in Massachusetts in 1899. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Potter, Elnora, aged three years. Mr. Potter and his wife are members of the Congregational church and are highly respected and esteemed people.

JOHN L. BAYNE, who at the present writing is in charge of the Wallace employment office of the Mine Owners' Association, is one of the well known men of the entire Coeur d'Alene district and enjoys at this time an enviable standing and is popular with all. His duties require an executive ability and discrimination that make the position trying, but Mr. Bayne has shown himself master of the situation and has rendered service that gives satisfaction alike to mine owner and employee.

John L. Bayne was born in Grass Valley, California, on July 2, 1868, the son of George and Mary (Lyle) Bayne, natives of Scotland and now living in Corvallis, Oregon. The father came to California in 1861, mined and later went to farming. Our subject was four when the family came to Oregon and there he received a very liberal education, but was prevented from taking higher courses by ill health. He had studied in the Philomath college and in the agricultural college of the state. Following his educational courses, he went to railroading, operating in the bridge construction department, near Spokane. Then he did carpenter work for a time and in July, 1895, Mr. Bayne came to Wardner. He accepted a position in the Bunker Hill mines and for five years continued there. Eighteen months were spent in the work of the miner and the balance of the time he was shift boss. In December, 1900, Mr. Bayne was chosen to handle the employment office in Wardner and there he continued until March 4, 1903, when he was transferred to Wallace, where we find him at the present time and in the discharge of his responsible and trying duties he has manifested a clearness and keenness in discrimination and judgment, a thoroughness in handling the details and efficiency throughout that have commended him to all concerned. Mr. Bayne has one brother, George A. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., is a member of the Knights of Kadosh and is a Shriner in Spokane. Mr. Bayne is a Republican and has frequently been a delegate to the county conventions but is never an aspirant for office. He is interested in the Sierra Mining Company of Sierra county, California, and also owns other property.

CYRUS J. COLE is a leading and popular citizen of the Coeur d'Alene country and his enterprise and sagacity have placed him among the thriving business men of the district and he is today a heavy property holder. He is engaged in contracting timbers for various mines and also owns a ranch of two hundred and eighty acres near Cataldo, where he superintends a general farming business and raises stock. In addition to these interests, Mr. Cole owns large mining interests, among which we may mention the Banner, Nine Mile, Happy Day, Kismet and others.

Cyrus Cole was born in Canada, on September 1, 1846, the son of Ethan and Lucretia (Gilson) Cole, natives of Massachusetts and Vermont, respectively. The father died in Missouri Valley, Iowa, in January, 1864, aged sixty. He had been a lumberman most of his life. His ancestors came to the American shores early in the seventeenth century and figured in colonial days and were prominent in the Revolution and the war of 1812. The mother was born in 1810 and died in 1873. Her ancestors were an old family in American matters and served in the Revolution. Our subject was brought to the United States when a year old, then came to Illinois and later to Iowa. He received education from the public schools, the Tabor Academy and a Chicago business college. In October, 1862, when sixteen, he enlisted in Company D, Second Nebraska Cavalry, for nine months on the frontier, but was kept two months over time. He had hard service in long marches, scant clothing and short rations. He fought the Indians and one especial battle was waged on June 22, 1863. Being discharged, he returned home and remained a year, the father having died, and then enlisted in the Third Iowa Battery of Light Artillery and served until the close of the war. Following the business course Mr. Cole sold lightning rods and pumps, then came to the Pacific coast and railroaded for ten years, being baggageman, fireman, engineer and so forth. Then he farmed a time and in 1883 came to Stevens and Spokane counties, Washington. He took a claim and lost it by mortgage. In 1892 he came to Kingston and contracted timber and took his present land and in this vicinity he has been since, engaged in handling the farms and contracting timber work. Mr. Cole has the following brothers and sisters: Ethan, Enos, Zerina, widow of Roger Wolcott, Maria Davidson, living. The following are deceased: Eleazar, Eliezer, Isaac, John G., Abigal, Lucretia.

On November 19, 1875, at Sacramento, California, Mr. Cole married Miss Hannah M., a native of Ireland and daughter of Martin and Jane Sullivan. The father is deceased and the mother lives in Ireland. Mrs. Cole has three brothers and two sisters: Maggie, Charles, Michael, Thomas and Tilly. Three children are the fruit of this union, Arthur E., born November 1, 1876; Roy, born April 24, 1882; Glenden, born November 27, 1894. Mr. Cole is a member of the G. A. R. and in political matters he is independent, but has often been delegate to the Republican conventions.

HERMAN J. ROSSI. The genial, generous, and popular young man whose name appears above is doubtless as well and favorably known as any man in the entire Coeur d'Alene country and his friends are numbered by the scores from every walk in life. A stirring business man who made his way into the mining country without a penny, endured the hardships incident to such a position, and by sheer worth and sagacity and deferential treatment of everybody he has won the esteem of all, gained a business standing of the best and is a social leader and a favorite.

Herman J. Rossi was born in Switzerland, January 21, 1870, being the son of Gartano and Josephine (Renner) Rossi. The father was born in Italy and was a noted architect in his country. He built a remarkable piece of masonry on the Rhine at Basle, Switzerland, which is one of the noted labors of the country. It extends for miles along the river. He is now retired and lives in San Francisco. The mother of our subject was born in Switzerland and died in 1896, at Wallace, aged fifty. Our subject came to the United States with his parents in 1880, and they located in Napa county, California, taking up the hotel business. Herman was educated in the public schools. After this he worked for a hardware house in San Francisco for years and in 1888, he came to Burke. He entered the employ of S. S. Glidden, a general merchant operating in connection with the Tiger. Four years later he went to work for White and Bender Company and took charge of their store in Gem on July 12, 1892, the day after the Frisco was blown up. He remained there until 1896, gaining friends from all by his kind ways and geniality. In 1896, Mr. Rossi bought out the firm of Vedder, Sawyer & Herrington, and the company was known as Herrington & Rossi. They took up insurance and loans and in the former line do a large percentage of the entire business of the Coeur d'Alene country. They erected a fine pressed brick, two-story business block in a good portion of the town and half of the ground floor is occupied with their commodious offices, while the other portion of the ground floor is occupied by the Wallace Light and Water Company. The upper story is rented as offices. At the close of the year 1902, on account of Mr. Herrington's ill health, the firm was dissolved and Mr. Rossi handles the entire business. He owns property in the various towns of this section and has many residences. Some time since an old prospector interested Mr. Rossi in some claims adjoining the Poorman and the result is the organization of a company by Mr. Rossi and twenty claims are known as the Famous Hummingbird mine, which is about ready to begin shipping. In this one scheme of promotion, Mr. Rossi has achieved a good life's work, for right in the midst of great mines he has brought a magnificent property that promises to rival the well known dividend properties of this rich country. Few would have had the faith to have gone forward as he has done and it demonstrates his keen insight and practical judgment. Mr. Rossi is secretary of the Board of Trade and was a moving spirit in its organization. He was elected mayor of Wallace on the Citizens' ticket in 1898 and was councilman for two years. Mr. Rossi is past exalted ruler of the Wallace Lodge No. 331, of the B. P. O. E.; is a member of the A. F. A. M., Shoshone Lodge No. 25; of the Wallace Chapter, R. A. M.; and of the K. T.

On February 4, 1894, occurred the marriage of Mr. Rossi and Margaret Lawson, a native of Solano county, California. They have one child, Justin, aged seven. Mrs. Rossi is a member of the Roman Catholic church.

JOSEPH E. ST. JEAN, M. D., physician and surgeon in Burke, is a popular and capable professional man and is deserving of the thriving practice that has come to him as the reward of his skill and excellence as a physician and uprightness and integrity as a man. He was born in Adamsville, Quebec, on May 30, 1875. His parents are mentioned in another portion of this work. When the family came to Anaconda he attended the common schools a time and then was sent back to Canada and thoroughly educated in classical training in the Marysville and Montreal seminaries. Then he entered the oldest medical college in Canada, the Laval, which has branches in both Montreal and Quebec, and after four years of most careful training, he was the recipient of his degree with honors. His entire education has been in French and he sat under some of the most skilled demonstrators and scientific men of the age. After receiving his degree in 1896, he came to Anaconda and practiced eighteen months, then one year in Mullan, then two in Butte, after which he located at Burke, where we find him at the present time. Dr. St. Jean is a member of the W. of W., the M. W. A. and of the United Moderns, to which latter order his wife belongs. He also belongs to the Elks and the Foresters.

On February 18, 1901, at Butte, Montana, Dr. St.

Jean married Miss Phedora A., daughter of Joseph A. and Delia E. Nadeau, natives of Quebec and Switzerland, respectively. They now reside in Butte and the father is one of the prominent and wealthy citizens of that city. Mrs. St. Jean was educated at Villa Anna, a college at Lachine, Quebec, graduating in 1898. After this she travelled in the United States, Italy, Belgium, France, and so forth, up to the time of her marriage. Dr. St. Jean and his estimable wife are leading members of society and are widely known and highly esteemed by all.

ENGELBERT TURK, of the firm of Belville & Turk, is one of the best known tailors in the entire Coeur d'Alene country and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to state that he is one of the finest artists in his line in the northwest. He is a man of integrity and sound principles and justly deserves representation in the history that has to do with northern Idaho.

Engelbert Turk was born in Austria on November 3, 1861, and there received a first-class education and served in the army three years. After that he was revenue officer for two years and then for two years he was clerk in the Vienna postoffice. He learned the art of the tailor and draper and became master of the art of handling cloth and making garments of all kinds and his experience has been unique in that he has made clothing and uniforms for all nations. In 1889 Mr. Turk located in Columbus, Nebraska, and there and in Kearney spent some time. He was in various other eastern places until 1894 when he came to Boise from Salida, Colorado, being accompanied by his partner, Mr. Belville. They were employed two years by J. O. Baker and then Mr. Turk returned to Nebraska. In 1894 they opened a shop in Payette and later were in Salmon City, whence they came to Wallace and since that time they have been engaged in handling the finest trade of the district, which came their way as soon as their skill became known. Mr. Turk is a member of the Foresters and the Red Men and in politics he is independent. Mr. Turk has a sister, Mrs. Mary Wanke, in Nebraska.

MARTIN BELVILLE. Among the genial, popular and capable business men of Wallace we are constrained to mention the subject of this article, whose career has been fraught with interesting experience and who has ever manifested that uprightness and integrity which command the respect and win the confidence of all.

Martin Belville was born in Italy, on July 18, 1855, and came to the United States in December, 1886. He attended the common schools in his native land until twelve and then went to the seminary, having been chosen to fill the priesthood. His education from that time on was to fit him for that position and later in life he preferred to take up business instead of the clerical orders. From eighteen to twenty Mr. Belville was employed in a wholesale wine house, after which came three years in the standing army. Then Mr. Belville went to Marseilles, France, and there learned the tailor trade, spending four years in it. Next we see him in Algeirs railroading, after which he returned to Marseilles and went thence to Barcelona, Spain. Later we see him in Paris and in these various places he wrought at his trade and doubtless it may be asserted without fear of contradiction that Mr. Belville has had experience in making clothes for different nations and uniforms of various kinds beyond that of any man in the entire northwest. This has given him a skill that stamps him a real artist in his profession. Mr. Belville has one sister, Mrs. Severmá Bonn, in Wallace. His parents are deceased, as also are those of his partner. Mr. Belville is a member of the Foresters and of the Red Men and he is independent in political belief. Mr. Belville is, as is his partner also, a single man and they may well be termed "Jolly Bachelors," as they are both genial gentlemen of excellent standing in the community and are popular.

EDWARD H. MOFFITT. The energy, capabilities, keen perception and executive force of this gentleman have won him a leading and prominent position in the various walks of life. Being one of the earliest pioneers at the time of the Eagle rush to Prichard creek, he has been intimately acquainted with the Coeur d'Alene country in every respect and stands one of the promoters of its resources and most capable business men in northern Idaho. Practical contact with various lines of business in his earlier days and rising by reason of his worth and ability to handle large interests, Mr. Moffitt stands today the manager of the Standard and Hecla mines, is director of the company and operates with some of the heaviest capitalists in the northwest.

Passing more particularly to the details of his career, we note that Edward H. Moffitt was born in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, on August 22, 1845, being the son of Thomas and Maria L. (Patterson) Moffitt. The father was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, in 1813, and died in 1878, having been a faithful preacher of the gospel in the Methodist church for thirty years. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a native of Scotland and of Scotch-Irish lineage. The mother of Edward H. was born in Virginia in 1818 and now lives with this son, aged eighty-five. Our subject was reared in his native place until thirteen and attended the city schools. In 1858 he went with his parents to Illinois and there attended the public schools. In February, 1864, he responded to the call of patriotism and enlisted in Company F, Second Illinois Cavalry, under Captain M. H. Musser and Colonel John J. Mudd. Two years Mr. Moffitt served in the arduous duties of the soldier, participating in the battle of Mobile and much other active service. At the close of his term he was honorably discharged and returned to Illinois, where he operated a grocery for two years. Then he spent two years in Kansas and traveled in Colorado, Dakota and Utah, mining in various camps. In 1879 he see him in the Wood river country in Idaho, where four years were spent in active mining. In February, 1884, Mr. Moffitt made his way to the Murray country and in partnership with C. E. Bender, he opened the first meat market there. He was also interested in some good properties. In 1887 Mr. Moffitt came to Wallace, where he has resided since. He at once manifested his worth in the business and political world and among the excellent achievements of his skill we may mention the organization of the Coeur d'Alene Hardware Company, of which concern he is an important member. He has been the promoter of numerous enterprises and in 1898, he became interested in the Standard and Hecla mines and the following year he was chosen general manager, in which position he has consummated important achievements in reference to the properties. Mr. Moffitt is also general manager of the Finch & Campbell properties in the Coeur d'Alene country and has skill and sagacity and fine practical judgment have placed him as one of the leading mining operators in the entire northwest.

Politically Mr. Moffitt stands as one of the potent factors of the state and has attended all the county and state conventions since residing in Wallace. He is allied with the Democrats and is a man of great influence in the campaigns.

In fraternal affiliations, Mr. Moffit is a member of the Shoshone Lodge, No. 25, A. F. & A. M.; of the Wallace ChapterNo. 7, R. A. M.; of the Wallace commandery, K. T.; U. D.; of the El Katif Temple, Mystic Shrine, in Spokane.

Mr. Moffit has three brothers and two sisters: Thomas M., an artist in Illinois; Grantly R., in Texas; Lewis, at Nashville, Tennessee; Mrs. Anna E. Bradbury, Canyon City, Colorado; Mrs. Elvira C. Morgan, in Chicago.

On February 15, 1888, occurred the marriage of Mr. Moffitt and Miss Effie J. Colborn, the daughter of J. F. and Iola Colborn. They were the first settlers in Iola, Kansas and the place was named from Mrs. Colborn. The town is an important zinc smelting place of eight thousand. Mr. Colborn is a retired merchant. Two children have been born to crown this happy union, Robert C., aged eight, and Thomas E., aged five. Mr. Moffitt is one of the highly esteemed men of the county, while Mrs. Moffitt is a leader in society circles and presides with gracious dignity over their pleasant home, which is a center of refined hospitality.

HON. WELDON BRINTON HEYBURN, of Wallace, Idaho, was born in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, May 23, 1852. His parents were Quakers, of English descent. He received an academic education and afterwards studied largely under private tutors; was admitted to the bar in 1876 and has practiced law continuously since that time.

In the winter of 1883-4 he came to Shoshone county, and has resided there ever since. Mr. Heyburn has always voted and supported the Republican ticket; was a delegate to the Republican national convention of 1888, 1892 and 1900; was not affected by the silver craze of 1896 and was largely instrumental in maintaining the Republican organization in Idaho during that campaign, and since, which resulted in the sweeping Republican victory in 1902; was the nominee of the Republican party of Idaho for congress in 1898, but was defeated by a fusion of the Democrats, Populists and Silver Republicans; was elected to the United States senate on January 13, 1903, receiving the entire Republican vote of the legislature to succeed Henry Heitfield, Democrat, and took his seat March 4, 1903. His term of service will expire March 3, 1909.

FRANK M. ROTHROCK, a prominent mining man and capitalist of the Coeur d'Alene country, is a leading business man of Wallace, where his headquarters are at the present time. He is well and favorably known throughout the district and has many friends from every quarter.

Frank M. Rothrock was born in the vicinity of Wyandotte cave, Crawford county, Indiana, on July 29, 1870, the son of Harrison W. and Alice G. (Miles) Rothrock, natives of the same vicinity. The father came from an old Pennsylvania Dutch family of prominence. He was a leading miller. His father located the famous cave where our subject was born. It is a famous summer resort and our subject's father resides there now and conducts a large hotel. The mother died when Frank was five years of age. He remained at his native place until eighteen, gaining a good education from the district schools and the Danville college. Following that five years were spent as a stock broker at the stock yards in Louisville, Kentucky. In the spring of 1894 Mr. Rothrock came to Wallace and shortly afterward entered partnership with Mr. Brass, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume. They operated a butcher shop until recently, when they dissolved partnership and Mr. Rothrock now devotes his entire attention to his real estate and mining interests. Mr. Rothrock is one of the owners of the famous Hercules and also owns interests in the Hummingbird and numerous other mines and prospects. He has one sister, Catherine Sibert.

On June 26, 1895, at Wallace, Mr. Rothrock married Miss Minnie E., daughter of Jesse and Frances (Mauck) Snyder, natives of Indiana, and now living at Medimont, Idaho. They are descendants of old Pennsylvania Dutch families and are substantial people. Mrs. Rothrock has one brother, Raymond, and four sisters: Iona Samuels, Ora, Cora, Ada. One child has been born to this happy marriage, Zena, born February 15, 1901. Mr. Rothrock is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the W. W. He is a Republican. Mr. Rothrock is a man of keen discernment and broad business experience and has made a brilliant success in his career.

Our subject and his uncle, H. A. Rothrock, are sole owners of the famous Wyandotte cave, heretofore mentioned in this article. It is a cave of twenty-three miles of underground avenues and palaces, a perfect mecca for travelers and sightseers.

LEOPOLD J. ST. JEAN is one of the leading professional men of the county of Shoshone and has made a reputation for himself by his skill in his profession and close attention to business that is truly enviable. Dr. St. Jean is a dentist of marked success, which has been achieved as a result of natural ability, first class training and a love for adherence to his profession. A detailed account of his life will be interesting to the residents of northern Idaho. Leopold J. St. Jean was born in Montreal, Canada, on December 19, 1870, the son of Ludger and Sophie (Vautrin) St. Jean, natives of Montreal. The father and his ancestors owned a large part of the site of Montreal but the property was confiscated by the English. He now dwells at Anaconda, retired from active business, having by good business ability secured a generous competence. The mother of our subject comes from a prominent French family of old ancestrage and she now resides in Anaconda. Our subject was raised in Montreal till fourteen and secured good training in the excellent public schools of that place, besides a course in the normal school. Then the family removed to Anaconda, where he also studied in the schools and then returned to Montreal and took a thorough course under private tutors. Following this Mr. St. Jean entered Laval Medical College and one year later came to St. Louis, where he matriculated in the Missouri Dental College, a department of the St. Louis Medical College. He graduated from this institution in 1894 and returned to Anaconda and practiced for four years. Then Dr. St. Jean took up mining in British Columbia, but being unsuccessful in it he returned to his profession and located in Mullan. He came three weeks before the strike in 1899 and as soon as that affair was settled he at once gained a good practice. The fact that Dr. St. Jean is a man at the head of the profession has brought him patronage from every quarter and he richly deserves it all, as he is capable, skillful and first class. He has two brothers, Felix L. and Joseph E., the former a physician in Anaconda and the latter a physician in Burke. He also has one sister, Mrs. T. L. Mitchell, in Spokane. Dr. St. Jean is a Redman and in political matters is an independent thinker.

F. CUSHING MOORE. Prominent among the mining men of the Cœur d'Alene country, as well as of wide experience in the various mining fields of the entire northwest, a man of manifest ability and a master of his profession, that of mining and civil engineering, the subject of this article is deserving of especial mention in any volume that has to do with the leading people of northern Idaho.

F. Cushing Moore was born in Walla Walla on December 3, 1875. His parents, Charles and Julia (Kneen) Moore, are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. The father was really the founder and promoter of Moscow and one of the prominent men of the state. He was a native of Ohio, and his ancestors came from the Isle of Man. He served in the First Wisconsin Volunteers and was wounded at the battle of Shiloh. Upon recovering he re-enlisted and served faithfully to the close of the war. He died in Walla Walla in 1888 and was a well known and prominent man, interested in general development, and handled mills, real estate and did mining. Mrs. Moore, his widow, is living in Moscow and is a large property owner. Our subject was reared in Moscow principally and studied in some of the leading institutions of the land. He was a student in the Northwestern University of Chicago, at the University of the Pacific, in California, and in 1899 he graduated from the Idaho University at Moscow. Following this, Mr. Moore associated himself with J. C. Ralston, mining engineer, of Spokane, who operated in the northwestern camps. He was there until January, 1901, when he came to Wallace and opened offices in the Herrington-Rossi building, where we find him at the present time. During his work with Mr. Ralston Mr. Moore had charge of the construction of the cyanide works at Republic for the Republic Consolidated Gold Mining Company. He also did some excellent service in charge of the Deer Creek Gold Mining Company's engineering work in Deborgia, Montana. He is United States deputy mineral surveyor for Idaho, Montana and Washington, and has done considerable patent work in these states. Last summer he did extensive engineering work in the Cascades for the Bonanza Queen Copper Mining Company. Mr. Moore is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers and is a young man of excellent qualities and gives himself to his business strictly, in which he is winning a fine success. He has hosts of friends and is a genial and affable man. He is a member of the B. P. O. E., Lodge No. 331, of Wallace, and stands well in fraternal and social circles. Mr. Moore has one brother, Harry K., an attorney in Moscow; and two sisters, Flora P. and Edna L., at home in Moscow.

FRED W. WALTON, who is proprietor of the planing mill and wood working establishment so well known in Wallace, is a skilled mechanic and competent contractor in his line and has done, since taking up this business, a large amount of the best work in the town and is handling now a thriving patronage. He is a man of good, substantial qualities and is prominent in general affairs and popular.

Fred W. Walton was born in Livermore, Maine, on January 10, 1862, the son of Jeremiah D. and Beulah P. (Norris) Walton, natives of Maine and now living at Wayne, in that state. Our subject was reared in Maine and there received a good education from public and private schools and a good training on the farm with his father. He had operated successfully three large farms before he was of age and at that important time he went into an oil cloth factory and learned the printing trade connected with that business. He spent some years there and in various other employments and was also employed in Boston and in 1886-7 Mr. Walton made his way to Butte, Montana. He wrought that summer at Philipsburg on a ranch, then returned to Butte, where he worked for the Alice and Moulton Mining Company, in the amalgamation mills, returning to Phillipsburg in 1890. In 1891 he made his way to Wallace and since then has remained here with the exception of two years, 1895 and 1896, when he was county assessor and resided at the county seat, Murray. Following a successful term of office he returned to Wallace and bought his present business from Lyman Wood, H. K. Helbostal being his partner. Mr. Walton bought out his partner in January, 1898, and has since continued the business. He does all kinds of wood work and has a thoroughly equipped plant, embracing all the latest contrivances for wood and ornamental work. Mr. Walton has two brothers, Charles H. and Herbert N.

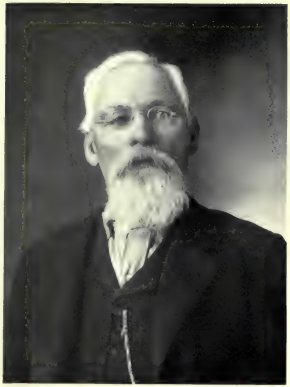
In May, 1882, Mr. Walton married Miss Emma F. Remich, a native of Winthrope, but this relation was ended in 1891, by a divorce. Two children were the fruit of the union, Gertrude E. and Arthur A. In February, 1892, Mr. Walton married Mrs. Florence Coon. Mr. Walton is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the Encampment, being past grand, also past chief patriarch. He has been delegate to the grand lodge for four terms. Mr. Walton also belongs to the Carpenter's Union and is one of the executive board of the American Labor Union. In political matters Mr. Walton is a member of the Socialist party and was for years prominently identified with the Populists. He was chairman of the first county central committee of that party in Shoshone county. Mr. Walton is a director in the Granite and Allie Consolidated Gold Mining Company, owns stock in several other prominent mining interests. Mr. Walton is secretary and treasurer of the Tribune Publishing Company.



JESSE T. WRIGHT is one of the rising young men of Wallace and is deserving of the popularity that he enjoys, both because of his geniality and ability. He is at the present time assistant assayer in the Standard, Hecla and Mammoth mines, with headquarters at Wallace, and he brings to this important branch of science a well trained mind and fortified with practical work in various capacities.

Jesse T. Wright was born in Kansas on December 2, 1876, the son of Thomas Wright, who is mentioned in this work elsewhere. Jesse T. was reared in Kansas and received a common schooling there, and in 1890 he came to Idaho. He studied in the graded schools in Wardner for six years and then went to Moscow, where he entered the State University, and from which he took his degrees in June, 1902. He spent the years in careful study and painstaking investigation, especially along the lines in which he is engaged at present, and the result is that he is a good chemist, a master of assaying and skilled in metallurgy.

Mr. Wright is a member of the Elks in Moscow and also belongs to the Shoshone Club. He is received in the best circles and is a young man of capability and has manifested thoroughness and efficiency in his course.

JOHN GREER. It is with pleasure that we seize the opportunity to chronicle the career of this estimable and well known pioneer, whose life on the rugged frontier has demonstrated him to be made of the qualities that know neither fear nor fatigue and which have left their mark indelibly on the civilization of the west, since he has done much in opening the way for his fellows to follow.

John Greer was born in Westchester county, Pennsylvania, on June 16, 1836, being the son of James and Mary (Patchell) Greer, natives of Ireland. The father came to the United States when nineteen, settling in Westchester county, Pennsylvania, where he married and later moved to Ohio. He died at Steubenville, in the latter state, in 1856, aged about fifty-eight. The mother came to the United States with her parents when she was fourteen, and died in Fraser, in June, 1893. Our subject was raised in Ohio, and there received his education from the common schools, his parents having come thither when he was six. When John was nineteen, the year being 1854, he started, on April 17, with ox teams, to California. He mined at Placerville, then called Hangtown, Eldorado county. Then he wrought in Amador and Calaveras counties until 1860, whence he went to Shasta county for two years. After that Mr. Greer came to the Pierce district, and since that time he has been a well known factor in the development here. He was engaged in mining until 1876. In 1877, the time of the Indian war, Mr. Greer bought the ferry at Greer from L. Dunwell, who started it in 1861. The Indians had burned his property and had set the ferry adrift. Since then he has been the ferryman and everybody for many miles distant knows him as an affable and genial gentleman. He has a residence in the edge of town and also has, across the river, a farm of two hundred acres. Mr. Greer is a stanch Republican and has always been an adherent of that party. He has three brothers,—James and Henry, on the Lolo; and William, in Harrison county, Ohio. Mr. Greer has a nephew and his wife living with him, and who keep house for him. He has been of late years a great sufferer from sciatic rheumatism, and the riper years of his life have been spent in much pain, but this has not dimmed his bright and genial spirit, and he has hosts of friends. During the trying times of Indian warfare Mr. Greer was one of the scouts who kept watch of the actions of the redskins, thus enabling the soldiers to handle them with wisdom. It is pleasant to see the hardy men who braved all the dangers, fought the battles and cleft the way into the wilderness now enjoying some of the prosperity and good cheer of this fertile and wealthy region, and we know of none who stands higher in the opinion of the people and who is more deserving than the subject of this sketch, and we cheerfully accord to him a place among the leaders of the country and feel assured that those who follow will regard with gratitude the labors he has done in opening this country for his fellows. The town of Greer, which was laid out in 1898, was named after the subject of this article.

HON. EDWARD HAMMOND. No more pleasant task could be assigned to us than to write the salient points in the career of the well known and highly respected gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, since he is a man of integrity and sterling worth, since he is a true pioneer in every sense of the word, since he has done a noble work to develop and build up this section of the Pierce district as well as many others in the northwest. These and many other reasons entitle him to especial mention in the history of this county.

Edward Hammond was born in New Orleans on March 1, 1830, being the son of Edward and Mary (Fox) Hammond. The father was born in Ireland and came to the United States in 1824. He was a stone mason and wrought on the old locks of the Erie canal. He then moved to Cincinnati and later came on flat boats, trading on the river, to New Orleans, where he died of the cholera in 1834, aged fifty-four. The mother of our subject was born in Worcestershire, England, and married in England shortly before coming to the United States. After her husband's death she took her children to Cincinnati and there remained until her death, in 1875, being aged eighty-seven. Our subject was raised in Cincinnati and received a thorough education in the St. Xavier college of the Jesuits. Upon leaving the college, at the age of nineteen, he joined the expedition of General Lopez, a filibustering undertaking to Cuba. They were seven hundred and fifty men strong and went by the steamship Creole. Theodore O'Hara, author of "The Bivouac of the Dead," was one of the number. On May 12, 1850, they landed at Cardenas, General Pickett, of Gettysburg fame, commanding them. While they were landing a train was in readiness to go to Mantanzas, and pulled out. Five thousand infantry were dispatched from that point by land and the Pizzaro, a man of war, by sea to intercept and capture the Americans. When General Lopez heard of this he started to return, and at that juncture three hundred lancers, the advance guard of the infantry, came up and a battle ensued, wherein nearly all of the lancers were slaughtered. The Americans then took the town, losing fifteen men and having thirty wounded. They were hardly able to bury the dead before the forces were coming up, and then the Americans took to their steamer. In attempting to take the vessel out of a narrow bypath channel it was grounded, and they were unable to get out for some time. All luggage was thrown overboard, but to no avail. The Pizzaro came steaming into the harbor and, having made the circuit of it and supposing the filibusters were gone to New Orleans, started in pursuit. The Creole had been lying with all lights out and the men unloading to shallow water. After five hundred were out, she bore up and, all being taken abroad, they made for Key West. The Pizarro having cruised for them enroute to New Orleans, came toward Key West, and two pilots came out at the same time for the two vessels. Thus the Creole was hurried into the harbor before the Pizarro could fire on them. The Creole was confiscated, however, but the men made their escape. The wounded were cared for by General Lopez as well as possible.

In 1852 Mr. Hammond came to California, and after a few months on American river went to Sierra county. He spent eight years there and during this time he, in company with Albert Damas, now of Lewiston, sank the first shaft on Holland flat, named from Mr. Hammond's partner, and bed rock dirt showed up three dollars and fifty cents per pan. In 1858 he went to Yreka and mined on Scott's bar until 1860, when one hundred of them went to San Francisco to join the regular cavalry. Not being able to join only after being distributed in the infantry, about half of them, including our subject, came back to Yreka. In the spring of 1861 Mr. Hammond came to Lewiston and on to Pierce the same year. A few months later he returned to Lewiston and then went to Montana and California, and in 1872 came back to Lewiston. He has followed mining, merchandising and ranching since. He now has a farm of hay and timber about eleven miles southwest from Pierce. In 1874 he was probate judge, and again in 1880. In 1877 he was called by the people to represent them in the legislature, and did his work well and to the satisfaction of all. He was also auditor and recorder for four years.

The last mining that Mr. Hammond did was on the old Nelson ditch, which he owned. This originally cost Nelson about twenty thousand dollars. He sold it to Chinamen and in later years, as they had no legal right, they sold it for five dollars to Pat Kane, who leased it to them, thus avoiding danger from jumpers. Later the jumpers came again, and Kane feared they might succeed, so he called the neighboring farmers in to assist him. They all remained at the Chinese boarding house all summer and spent a fine holiday. They tired of the expense and came to Mr. Hammond and agreed that if he would buy the ditch they would pay him any rental he would choose. He bought it from Kane for two hundred dollars, and then charged the Chinamen one hundred dollars per year for it. This continued for ten years. Mr. Hammond also had the privilege of taking the surplus water, which netted him about five hundred dollars per year. Last year the lease expired and he sold the ditch to the Gold Hill company, and the Chinese returned to China.

Mr. Hammond had one brother, James, who perished in Andersonville prison during the Civil war.

On January 8, 1884, Mr. Hammond married Mrs. Mary F., widow of John Carrigan, who was born in Missouri in 1846. Her father and his family settled in Oregon when Mrs. Hammond was a child. Mr. and Mrs. Hammond are highly respected people and have the good will and esteem of all. They are fully entitled to the goodly share of this world's goods which they have gathered by their industry and are now enjoying in the golden years of their lives.

HON. FRANK GAFFNEY is one of the best known men of southern Shoshone county, and he is as popular as he is well known. When but twenty-six years of age he was called by a hearty vote of the people to act as the representative to the state legislature, and in that capacity, as in all others, he has been found a man of intelligence, integrity and executive force. He is now the owner of a fine farm of two hundred acres, which is well stocked with cattle, horses and hogs, while also he does a mercantile business in Weippe. He is a thorough business man and has done a lion's share in the development of the country.

Frank Gaffney was born in San Francisco, California, on October 16, 1866, being the son of Patrick and Bridget Gaffney, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. When nine months of age he was brought in his mother's arms to Pierce, and here he has resided since. Before the schools were established his wise father hired a college graduate for eighty dollars per month to teach his sons, and the result was that the boys all have a fine practical education. Our subject worked with his father and studied until twenty-one, and then he filed on a claim adjoining his father's place and has raised stock and hay since that time. When the new county was organized he was appointed auditor. It was in November, 1892, that Mr. Gaffney was called to the legislature, and he has appeared in politics, always a stanch Democrat, but owing to the Populist movement, he was defeated. Last year he lacked only five votes of being county commissioner.

On September 24, 1895, Mr. Gaffney married Miss Belle, daughter of Andrew and Susan (Mitchell) Steele, natives of Kentucky. The father was a prominent and wealthy stock owner, and died in Woodbine, Kentucky, on May 9, 1902, aged sixty-nine. The paternal great-grandfather of our subject was in the war of 1812. The parents of our subject's mother were prominent land owners, and the father was a Christian preacher and influential man in politics. Mrs. Gaffney was born in Woodbine, Kentucky, on November 24, 1868. She was educated in the Cora Institute at Pleasant View, Kentucky, being thoroughly qualified for the work of the educator. She taught in Kentucky for two years, and in 1889 came to Washington and taught, then following her profession in Lewiston and later in Weippe she taught ten months. Mrs. Gaffney has two brothers and one sister,—Edmund and Emby, both in Kentucky; Emma, wife of Walter Graves, a merchant in Kentucky. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gaffney,—Frank E., John P., Fay S. and Clyde A.

JOHN J. GAFFNEY. It is seldom our privilege to be able to chronicle the career of one so thoroughly a pioneer as the subject of this article, as the following will testify.

John J. Gaffney was born in Barclay's gulch, three miles east from Pierce, on November 19, 1868, being the son of Patrick and Bridget (Gaffney) Gaffney, natives of Ireland, and although of the same name yet not related. John was raised in the Pierce district, and thus has known the frontier all of his days. He was educated in the schools which the wisdom and energy of his father established, and he was an apt scholar both in books and in learning the ways of raising stock, mining and other pioneer undertakings. In 1889 he filed a pre-emption and later took a homestead, the half section being near Weippe. He handles one hundred acres to hay and most of the balance is first class timber. Mr. Gaffney gives his attention mostly to mining, and is a master hand at that. He owns the Ozark group of four claims, about one mile southeast from Pierce, having as partners in this his brother, William, and John Pond. Our subject discovered the property in 1898, and they now have a Kendall roller mill, eight hundred feet of tunnel and have milled three hundred and six tons, which averaged eighteen dollars and thirty cents per ton. The milling has all been done since June, 1901. They use from six to twelve men when running and the property is now bonded for fifty-seven thousand dollars. Mr. Gaffney also has eighty acres within the limits of the Pierce town site. He also owns the Pioneer hotel, which he has recently erected in Pierce, and which is doing a good business. Mr. Gaffney has three brothers,—Frank and William, who are mentioned in this work, and Robert, who is operating a farm near Weippe. Also he has one sister, Mary, wife of Matthew Dowd, in Tammany hollow. Mr. Gaffney is a stanch Democrat and is generally found at the conventions, and is committeeman for his precinct.

On January 1, 1893, Mr. Gaffney married Miss Dora, daughter of George and Harriet (Dorothy) Barrows, natives of Iowa and now living near Fraser. Mrs. Gaffney was born in Iowa on May 26, 1874, and has one brother and five sisters,—Emmet, at home; Fannie, wife of Flemming Smith; Annie, wife of Charles Loney; Effie, wife of James Jolly; Jannie, wife of Charles Myers, all near Fraser; Arlie, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Gaffney have two children,—Edwin and Ella. Mr. Gaffney is a man of intelligence and energy and has made a place for himself among the leaders of this enterprising community, where he is recognized as a man of sterling worth and integrity.

AUGUST PAULSEN. We greet with pleasure the privilege of recounting, though necessarily in an epitomized form, the salient points in the career of the subject of this article. Not alone because he is one of the leading capitalists in the Coeur d'Alene districts, and has demonstrated himself one of the keen and far seeing mining men, but because of the personal characteristics that are manifested in his every day walk and the stability and firmness, dominated with cool reserve and consummate wisdom which have brought to him his brilliant success.

August Paulsen was born in Denmark on July 29, 1871, the son of Paul and Anna (Andersen) Paulsen, natives of Denmark, where the mother now lives, the father having died when August was an infant. Our subject received an education in his native country and in 1891 bade farewell to all native scenes and friends and came to the United States. He landed in Chicago on June 1st, and followed farm work in Illinois until September, 1892. Then came a trip to Spokane where he entered the employ of some of the leading dairymen and continued steadily at this calling until April, 1894. Then he came to Wallace and entered the employ of Mr. Markwell, mentioned elsewhere in this work. He continued with him until June, 1896, and during this time he bought an interest in the Hercules, paying eight hundred and fifty dollars for a fourth of the property. In the summer of 1896 Mr. Paulsen worked in the mine and in the winter returned to the dairy business. He continued this method until December 12, 1901, and it is testified to by all that in all these years of trying labor and pushing forward under great difficulties the development of this property, none manifested such zeal in the labor, such faith in the property and such steady determination to reach the goal of showing up what the property possessed as did Mr. Paulsen. He was ready for the hardest part and always willing to take up the most arduous burden and with vigor and good will put the work along. Following his labors in the mine, Mr. Paulsen went to San Francisco and accomplished a purpose long in his mind, that of getting higher training in the field of education and there under private instruction he continued his studies with the gratifying result that he desired.

On September 15, 1902, Mr. Paulsen married Miss Myrtle White, who was born in Colfax, March 20, 1880. Since that date Mr. Paulsen has been traveling with his bride and they have visited many popular and famous resorts. Mrs. Paulsen has three brothers and one sister: John, Warren A., Edward, Mrs. Anna Conner. Mr. Paulson has one brother, Charles, and one sister, Emma.

Mrs. Paulsen is a graduate of the high school at Colfax and also took a business course in Spokane. Mr. and Mrs. Paulsen are of excellent standing and are among the substantial and capable people of the city of Wallace. Mr. Paulsen has manifested in his career, when he was facing the wave of a strong battle, in the industrial world and all along from the time that he commenced to do for himself, the quality that won for him his mammoth holding, namely that of cool and calm deliberation in sagacity and backed up by an unflinching determination that would surmount any difficulty and unlock the most intricate problem.

HORATIO L. GRAY: A well known mining man, a genial and intelligent companion, an upright and well posted citizen, with public spirit and progressive ideas, and withal, one of the leading mining property owners of this section, it is quite fitting that we should accord to Mr. Gray representation in the history of Shoshone county.

Horatio L. Gray was born in Maine on January 3, 1838, being the son of Horatio and Eliza (Madden) Gray, natives of Maine. The father died in 1840, aged thirty-five. The mother died in 1882, aged ninety. Our subject was reared and educated in Maine, and when he was eighteen went to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, where he did lumbering for two years. In 1859 he came to California and mined and freighted and did general merchandising. In 1862 he was in Pierce and two years were spent in the different camps and then he went to Eagle creek, in eastern Oregon, and there spent six years in mining, merchandising and freighting. He finally returned to the Pierce district in 1870 and located the Agnostic mine and several others of the French Creek Mining Company, which is doubtless a company with some good property. Our subject also owns three hundred and eighty acres of fine placer ground, upon which he operates about six men in season. In 1897 he located on what is now known as the Ellis Small place, and having commuted, he took an interest in the Wright & Small addition to Orofino, and there he makes his home in the winters. Mr. Gray has one-third of this property. He has two brothers, one half brother and one sister, named in their order, George, William Gray, Andrew White, Martha Cracker.

On January 1, 1879, at Lewiston, Mr. Gray married Miss Louisa, daughter of Joseph and Louisa (Morrison) Cox, natives of Pennsylvania and Illinois, respectively. The father came to Oregon in 1847 with ox teams and was a sturdy pioneer. He died March, 1894. The mother came to Oregon with her parents in an early day and was married in Yamhill county. Mrs. Gray was born in Silverton, Marion county, Oregon, on June 9, 1860, and she has four brothers—Wesley, Leander, Edgar, Ernest—all farmers. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gray—Mabel, Robert, Joe, Roxie and Martha.

ANNIE SQUANCE. Among the leading business people of Wallace there must not be failure to mention the name of the subject of this article, a lady whose skill and executive ability have wrought out excellent success in all her career, which has been an active one in various large centers of the world.

Annie Squance was born in Devonshire, England, on December 3, 1865, the daughter of Thomas and Susan (Lee) Squance, natives of England. The father died March 23, 1902, and the mother lives in Exeter, England. Miss Squance was well educated in her native land and in 1881 landed in New York. She soon went to St. Paul, Minnesota, and took up the lodging house business. Later we find her in the same business in Chicago, whence she returned to New York and after a time in that metropolis she went to England and in London and later in Paris she did good business in the lodging house and hotel business. Since that time, Miss Squance has crossed and re-crossed the ocean nine times. She settled in California, and for seven years was prominently identified with the hotel and lodging house business in that state. Later she went to Calaveras county and paid attention to mining for one year. She now owns the Ellen Vunnon, a paying mine six miles from San Andreas. The mine is provided with an eight stamp mill and is a paying property. On September 18, 1900, Miss Squance came to Wallace and soon thereafter leased the well known Pacific hotel, one of the leading hostelries in the Coeur d'Alene country. It is the only strictly American plan house in the town and is one of the popular resorts of mining men and the public in general. Miss Squance has put her practical knowledge into execution in this property and the result is now one of the finest places for the traveling public in the northern part of the state.

Miss Squance has the following brothers and sisters: George, Richard, William, Thomas, Henry, Mary Evarren, Ellen Wright. She has much property in various places, especially in England, where she owns twelve fine dwellings. She is a woman of culture and refinment and withal possesses the happy faculty of business ability and sagacity which have been demonstrated in an unbounded success in the financial world.

RODERICK J. McLEOD is at the present time the efficient and capable blacksmith in the Morning mine at Mullan and is a man of good standing and the recipient of the esteem of the people. He was born in Gelgarry county, Ontario, on October 27, 1854, the son of John and Mary (McDonnell) McLeod, natives of Ontario, where they now live. The paternal ancestors came from Scotland in 1786 as also did the maternal ancestors. Our subject was educated in the excellent public schools of Ontario and assisted his father on the farm. When eighteen he came to Michigan and learned the blacksmith trade, which he wrought at until 1877, when we see him in Leadville, Colorado. In 1885 he went back to his native place and visited for three years and then, it being 1888, he came to Mullan. From that date until 1894, he was blacksmith for the Hunter mine. Then we see him in the same capacity for the New York and Last Chance until 1896, in which year he returned to Mullan and held the position of foreman of the Hunter mine for two years. The next year he was blacksmith for the Morning mine and the two years following that he was again foreman for the Hunter mine. After that time had expired he returned again to his former position of blacksmith for the Morning mine where he has continued until the present time. Mr. McLeod has the following named brothers and sisters: John C., John S., Christopher, Finley, Mrs. Annie McDonald, Mrs. Jeanette McDonald.

On June 30, 1879, at Leadville, Colorado, Mr. McLeod married Miss Sarah, daughter of Alexander and Sarah McPhee. Mrs. McLeod has one brother and five sisters, Alexander, Mrs. Mary McDonald, Mrs. Christie Foley, Mrs. Flora McDonald, Mrs. Hattie McKay, Mrs. Isabelle Crawford. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McLeod, Isabella, Sarah, wife of Joseph Fay, in Butte, Montana; Mary, Cassie, John and Jennet, deceased. Mr. McLeod is a member of the W. W. and the A. O. U. W. He is independent in political matters and a man of substantial qualities and always allied on the side of progress and unbuilding.

WILLIAM R. TURNER, of the firm of Turner Brothers, is a popular and substantial business man of Wallace and at his neat and attractive store, where he deals in confections, stationery and cigars, he is to be found always attentive to business and characterized by a geniality and gentlemanliness that have won him the esteem of all.

William R. Turner was born in Michigan, on February 19, 1877, the son of Dionysius J. and Eliza J. (Sharpe) Turner, natives of Ireland and Canada, respectively. The father died in Michigan in 1885 and had been in the office of the overseer of the Grand Trunk lines for twenty-one years. The mother lives in Quebec. Our subject was raised in Michigan until eight and then went to Canada to dwell with his uncle on a farm. He attended district school until thirteen and then commenced his career in a general merchandise store. Five years were spent in this fine training and then we see him in Butte, Montana, where he was employed in a concentrating plant. Four years were spent in that service and in 1899, Mr. Turner came to Wallace. Shortly after arriving here he and his brother, Winfield Turner, bought out the business of Honeker & Fordyce, and since that time the Turner Brothers have been one of the prosperous and progressive business firms of Wallace. Our subject gives his personal attention to the business and his brother is now in Montana taking care of other interests of the firm. They have a nice new store and carry a large stock of goods, of the choicest brands, and their kind and deferential treatment of all have given them a thriving patronage. Mr. Turner has one other brother, Richard J., and two sisters, Theresa A., Charlotte L. Eager.

On November 14, 1898, at St. Marie, Michigan, Mr. Turner married Ida M., daughter of John and Annie (McCutcheon) Craigie, natives of the province of Quebec. The father is deceased and the mother lives there now. Mrs. Turner was born in Quebec and has two brothers, William and Harry. Two children have been born to this union, Esther A., born February 11, 1900, and Harold D., born August 30, 1901. Mr. Turner is a member of the I. O. O. F. and he and his wife are members of the Episcopalian church.

CHRISTIAN D. JONES was born in Swansea, Wales, on May 7, 1824, being the son of David Jones, who was drowned at sea when Christian was two years old. The father was a sea captain. The mother died when this son was one year old. Left an orphan, he was brought up on board a ship and has visited all parts of the globe. In 1849 he came as mate on a bark to San Francisco and went at once to mining, and as he was successful, he bought the schooner Francis Adams, took her to Tahita to get oranges, and as he was sailing to San Francisco he was obliged to beach her to save the crew. Again he turned to the mines for a stake, which he made. Then came a trip to Maine to marry Emma Moody, with whose father he had sailed for a long time, and whom he had known since they were children. He brought her to the coast and located twenty-five miles above Marysville on the Yuba river and did a butcher business. Then he mined a couple of years and went to San Francisco and left his wife and child. Later divorce proceedings came on and he secured his child, Ida, who is now the wife of H. Gollings, an inventor in Chicago. She has a practice in a private hospital, being a skilled physician, having graduated from Kinsell College, Lewiston, Maine. After this blow our subject remained in California until 1861, then came to Pierce and Elk Creek. Going out for supplies, he was snowed out and wintered in Walla Walla. He then packed, mined and freighted. He was taken sick with typhoid in Salt Lake City and upon recovery went horseback to Omaha, thence to St. Joseph, to see his daughter there in school. In 1865 Mr. Jones went to South America. He prospected in Peru, Ecuador, United States of Colombia, up and down the Isthmus region and in Central America and found gold, but was unable to stand the people and the climate. Then he returned to the United States and mined and wrought in various sections and finally drifted back to his present place, one mile east from Blake, which he took in 1881. He raises stock, wintering as high as ninety-five head. He has given his attention to this labor since his settlement here, and Mr. Jones is one of the substantial men of this section. He is passing the golden years of his eventful and active career alone in the quiet retreat of his home, and labors on with the gratifying meed of success in financial matters. He is respected by all, has been a faithful and upright man, has hosts of friends and is traveling the pilgrim journey in the evening of life with an assurance that he has wrought well.

EDWARD H. WRIGHT, who manages the Pacific Hotel in such a skillful manner that he has made it one of the popular houses of the entire Cœur d'Alene country, is a genial and affable man, with great experience in the ways of business, and is a successful and leading citizen.

Edward H. Wright was born in Wabasha, Minnesota, on September 24, 1862, the son of Warren W. and Mary J. (Isman) Wright, natives of New York. The father died in January, 1902, and his parents were natives of Ireland. The mother lives in St. Cloud, Minnesota. Our subject was educated in Minnesota and was well trained, having the benefit of a State Normal course and a special course in Bishop Whipple's school, Shattuck Hall. On leaving his studies he took up telegraphy and was soon in the railroad service, and so faithful and efficient was he in this line that for twenty-four years Mr. Wright could have been found at his desk in some of the leading positions in the country. He was city ticket agent in St. Cloud for twelve years, then chief clerk in the superintendent's office of the Duluth, Mesaba & Northern, and in 1897 he came thence to Portland, where he was with the O., R. & N. for some time. Following that time Mr. Wright was for several months engaged in traveling on the Pacific coast, after which he was agent at Burke and cashier in Wallace. Next we see Mr. Wright in his present position, and since he has devoted his energies to the interests of the Pacific House, and a flattering success has attended him, as is evidenced in the thriving patronage which the hotel enjoys.

Mr. Wright has three sisters, Mrs. J. C. Gude, Mrs. J. D. Stevenson, Mrs. Charles Oram.

On Januaury 22, 1884, Mr. Wright married Miss Charlotte, daughter of Henry and Charlotte (Lee) Brown, natives of England. The wedding occurred at St. Cloud, Minnesota, and there, also, on April 29, 1899, Mrs. Wright was called by death, and she left two daughters, Charlotte B. and Helen J., now aged eighteen and sixteen, respectively. They live in Sheboygan, Wisconsin. On December 14, 1901, at Wallace, Mr. Wright married Miss Ellen Squance, a native of England, whose parents and brothers are mentioned elsewhere. Mr. Wright is a member of the A. F. and A. M., the R. A. M. and the K. P. Mr. Wright is a Democrat, but does not participate in politics for personal preferment.

MAURICE H. HARE is cashier of the Bank of Commerce and in that responsible position he has manifested great skill and fine business ability, while commensurate therewith has been displayed stanch and unswerving integrity and a faithfulness and uprightness which have commended him to the esteem and confidence of the entire community.

Maurice H. Hare was born in Greensburg, Pennsylvania, on June 11, 1868, the son of Felix N. and Anna E. (Cochrane) Hare, natives of Pennsylvania also and descended from old and prominent families. The mother died in 1898, but the father still lives at Lima, Ohio. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place till about thirteen and then he started out in life for himself and worked at various employments in the oil regions, never forgetting to keep industriously at the books and reading, even to the present day, which have furnished his mind with a wide range of knowledge and information on all subjects of interest and advantage. He learned telegraphy and followed it almost constantly until his acceptance of his present position, in November, 1902. He came west in 1888 and until 1892 he was cashier in the N. P. office at Coeur d'Alene city, in the auditing department in Spokane and agent of the Spokane Falls & Northern. In 1892, Mr. Hare went to Michigan and was agent for the C. & W. M. R. R. at Charlevoix and Petoskey for five years. Then we see him in the superintendent's office of the N. P. in Missoula. Later he was agent at Burke and after that he was agent here at Wallace for more than three years. Mr. Hare has shown efficiency and faithfulness in all of his career and he is a good man now in a responsible position. Mr. Hare has the following brothers and sisters: Charles V., Paul F., Olive Fitch, Helen Powell, Katherine.

On September 25, 1892, Mr. Hare married Miss Ruby, daughter of Willard B. and Julia Field, natives of Illinois. The father died in Spokane in 1902, but the mother still lives in that city. They were descended from prominent and old American families and Mr. Field was a prominent man in the state affairs of Washington, having been state senator from Stevens and Spokane counties. Mrs. Hare was born in Iowa and her wedding occurred in Lamont, that state. She has three brothers and three sisters, Orin, Fred, Willard, Alice Bungay, Mary, Bernice. To Mr. and Mrs. Hare four children have been born, Bernice, Hellen, Dorothy, Maurice. Mr. Hare is a member of the A. F. and A. M., the R. A. M., of the K. T. and of the Elks. He is a strong Republican and is treasurer of the city of Wallace. Mr. Hare is interested in mining property and is treasurer of the Oreano and secretary of the Comet and treasurer of the Trade Dollar.

EDWIN W. BLAKE was born in the province of Quebec on June 15, 1839, being the son of Francis and Sophia (Brown) Blake. The father was born in New Hampshire and his father also. He went to Canada when twenty-one and remained until his death in 1866, when he was aged eighty-seven years, seven months and twenty-seven days. He was an officer in the British army, being both major and recruiting officer. He was prominent in political matters and was county judge for eight years. The paternal grandfather of our subject served for years in the Revolution. The mother of Edwin was born in Vermont from a prominent family. Her father was in the Revolution and her brother Moses was a captain in the Civil war. Our subject was educated and reared in Canada and learned there the carpenter trade. He worked with his father until twenty-two and then received land from his father and that he farmed until the father died. At that time he moved to New York and wrought at his trade for twenty years. Then he wrought in Sully, South Dakota, Duluth, Minnesota, Spokane, Postfalls, erecting a large flour mill in the latter place. He was captain of a steamboat on Lake Coeur d'Alene for a year, then built a flour mill at Leland and after a couple of years farming he came to his present place, at Blake. Mr. Blake is postmaster. He has one of the best if not the best place in the vicinity and raises tomatoes and kindred vegetables and fruits. He has good improvements, a fine supply of pure spring water, does general farming and stock raising. Mr. Blake has four brothers, Moses, Isaac, Oscar, Ashley, and four sisters, Lucinda, widow of N. Wentworth, Nancy Moore, Emily Lockwood, Mary J. Lippett.

At Gray Eagle, Minnesota, on May 27, 1888, Mr. Blake married Miss Minnie E., daughter of Alvin P. and Sarah M. (Ives) Davies. She was born in Mankato, Minnesota, on May 27, 1860. Mr. Davies was born in New York, on October 30, 1832 and died in 1897. He served in Company E, Ninth Minnesota all through the war. He was sergeant and refused a captaincy. His father served in war of 1812 and his grandfather was in the Revolution, crossed the Delaware with Washington, participated in Valley Forge sufferings and served through the entire war. Mr. Alvin P. Davis came from Wisconsin to Minnesota with ox teams and was prominent in affairs of the latter place. The mother of Mrs. Blake was born in New York from a prominent New England family and her father's ancestors were leading individuals in the Revolution. Six children were born to Mr. Blake by a previous marriage, Charles E., Arthur C., Chauncey W., Henry E., Eva A., Ida M. By his present marriage he has six children, Francis A., Clyde D., Mabel, Earl, Ruth, Teodore. Mr. Blake has been a member of the Baptist church for forty years and has acted as pastor and local preacher for many years and in many places. He has also been superintendent of Sunday school for much of his life, having been engaged thus in some very large schools. He is a stanch Republican, is justice of the peace and clerk of the school board. Mr. Blake has given considerable intelligent attention to rearing trout and has two fine ponds and is constructing others. He receives consignments of he small fishes from the government hatcheries and is an expert and quite enthusiastic in this line of important industry.

HARRY COLLER. From the noted land of Greece, born of a family of merchants and prominent people, comes the subject of this article, who is now one of the patriotic and substantial citizens of Mullan, Idaho, where in partnership with Fred Greenwald, he conducts the Windsor hotel. This hotel is the leading commercial and popular hotel of the town, is headquarters for mining men and prospectors and is a popular resort. They maintain a fine exhibition of minerals, have a stock quotation board and are one of the leading business establishments of the district.

Harry Coller was born in Greece, on February 8, 1870, the son of Peter and Mary (Smith) Coller, natives of Greece, where they now reside. Our subject graduated from the high school of Corfu and came to the United States in 1891, having also been bookkeeper in Greece a time before that. After a short time in New York, he came to Seattle and worked in various hotels until 1893. Then he came to Spokane and in the Spoknae hotel he was in every capacity in the kitchen from the broiler to head cook, leaving there in 1898. The next year he was in the fine seventy thousand dollar hotel in Grand Forks, British Columbia, and later had charge of the dining room. When the boom broke, he returned to Spokane, then came to the Morning mine and worked for Larson & Greenough for twenty-eight months. After this service, Mr. Coller entered partnership with Mr. Greenwald, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume, and they are still in the management of the Windsor house, which they have placed as the leading hotel of the section. Mr. Coller has one brother, Fred, in this country, now in the Morning mine boarding house. He has two brothers in Greece, Alchibiades, a student in college: Demitrious, who is managing the family estate. Mr. Coller is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Encampment, and the Rebekahs. He also belongs to the Foresters, while in political matters he is not bound to any party or under any dictations, but reserves for himself the right of independent thought and unrestricted choice.

HENRY GROVES. It is with unfeigned pleasure that we are enabled to give a review of the active and interesting career of this good man and substantial and intelligent citizen. Henry Groves was born in Franklin county, New York, on March 13, 1831, being the son of Thomas and Eunice (Fall) Groves. The Groves family is an old and prominent New England house and six generations are buried in the cemetery at Brimfield, Massachusetts. Thomas Groves was born in 1790 and died in 1860, the death occurring in Iona, Michigan. He served all through the war of 1812 with General Scott, being two years in active service. Joseph Groves, the grandfather of our subject, served seven years, six months, and fourteen days in the Revolutionary war and was with George Washington at Valley Forge, crossing the Delaware, and at the surrender of Cornwallis. He was broken in health and survived the war only a few years. The mother of our subject was born in Vermont in 1795 and died in Iowa in 1867. Her father was a sea captain, born in England and died six months after the birth of this daughter. Our subject was raised in New York until nine, then went to Michigan and remained twenty years. He was educated in the district schools and in 1860 he came to Iowa with his mother. Two years later he went to Colorado and farmed and freighted for five years. A year was then spent in Chicago in a tannery and planing mill. The next year he was married and with only a small capital farmed near by for a period of two years. Next with his wife and baby and only a team and wagon he journeyed to Kansas and took a quarter there, bought another which in tilling he did well for the first ten years, when the drought struck the country and that with bad health ate all his holdings and he landed in Pullman, Washington, with a few head of stock and some farm implements. Two years there and he bought a farm, paying nearly three thousand cash and giving a mortgage for twelve hundred. 1893 tells the rest and he went to Moscow financially depleted. He worked out and rented ten acres near town. In the winter of 1895 Mr. Groves moved to the forks of the Potlatch, bought improvements on unsurveyed land and went to dairying, but the failure of the mines which were his market, spoiled this deal. Then he went to the Tee meadows, where the snow, six feet deep, drove him away and he found a place on Ford's creek ridge in Shoshone county. A year later he came to his present place, five miles from Orofino, which place is owned by his son. They do general farming, raising stock, dairying and fruit raising, find a ready market to the miners and prospectors and are doing well. Their home is called "Fair View Fruit Farm."

On November 18, 1870, at Sandwich, Illinois, Mr. Groves married Miss Mary, daughter of Walter and Sarah A. (Parks) Whipple. The father was born of an old family in Chenango county, New York, being of Scotch descent, and died in Kansas on March 2, 1883, aged seventy-seven. The mother was descended from a prominent English family and was born in Rochester, New York. She died in the same state on January 14, 1866, aged fifty-two. Mrs. Groves was born in New York, on October 8, 1845. Threee children are living, out of a family of nine born to this worthy couple, and their names are as follows: Elson H., who owns the ranch where the family lives, and who was born in Kansas, Smith county, on January 8, 1878, and who has constantly been engaged with his parents and is a faithful and substantial young man; Chester W., born November 22, 1882, in Kansas, and now teaching school, being one of the promising young men of this section of the county; Emma G., born December 25, 1881, and is now the wife of Fred Luttropp, residing on Ford's creek. They were married on December 25, 1898, and have three children: Chester A., Effie M., and Austin F.

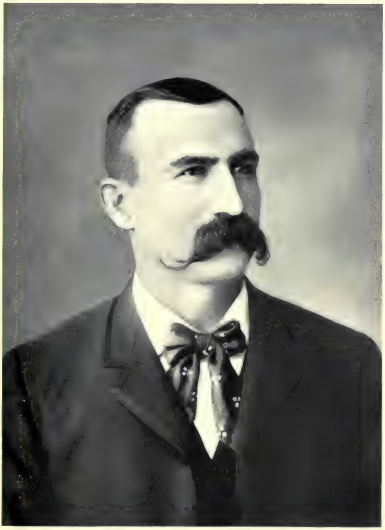
R. P. HEARD, who is owner and operator of one of the leading cigar stores of Wallace, is one of the genial and affiable men who has hosts of friends and whose ability in the business world has been manifested in a long career of railroading in responsible positions. He was born in Ontario, Canada, on May 6, 1862, the son of Richard and Celia (Preston) Heard, natives of England and the province of Quebec, respectively. The father came to Canada, when two years old with his parents. He died in Minesota in 1897. The mother died in 1898. Our subject was reared on a farm until nineteen, having attended the public schools and then he went to Michigan, farming. Being taken sick he returned home for a year and later went to Minnesota and railroaded. He was on the Milwaukee & St. Paul lines and learned telegraphy and was assistant in the dispatcher's office. Then he went to Montana on the N. P., and for five years was operator at Heron. Then he was operator at Sprague for a time and later returned to Heron. Next we see him agent in Portland for the Willamette Valley line, the Southern Pacific and after that he was on the O. R. & N. as operator for eight years and for about two years he was cashier at Wallace. He was taken sick and went east for relief but finding none came back to Wallace, whence he went to Hot Springs, Arkansas, and was cured. Then Mr. Heard came to Wallace and entered partnership with C. A.

Hill in the cigar business. This was in June and in December of the same year he bought his present business and has since that time conducted it with excellent results and now enjoys a thriving patronage.

Mr. Heard has three brothers, George, Edward, Cecil, and two sisters, Annie Bunton, Belle. Mr. Heard has never quit the charms of the jolly bachelor. He is a member of the Elks and the Order of R. R. Telegraphers. He is a Republican but has never sought for personal advancement in office. He is a man of frankness and enterprise and is a firm believer in the excellent resources of the country.

HOMER G. BROWN. Among the stirring and enterprising young business men of Wallace, we are constrained to mention the subject of this sketch who is to be found in the cashier's office of the Sunset brewery, which department he handles with efficiency and display of merit and faithfulness.

Homer G. Brown was born in Pennsylvania, on September 21, 1866, the son of Andrew and Addie (Swartz) Brown, natives also of Pennsylvania. The father is a lumber inspector in Reed City, Michigan, and his ancestors were the sturdy Scots. The mother comes from an old Dutch family and lives in Reed City. Our subject was permitted to finish the high schools in Michigan whither he went with his parents when he was six. And when he was sixteen he commenced a career of railroading which led him all over the United States, and in which he has made a clean record. He learned telegraphy and was operator, cashier and agent in various places in the east and in 1889 was stationed as operator in Orting, Washington. Later he was with the O. R. & N., at Colfax, Walla Walla, and on May 10, 1892, he was stationed at Osburn. Five months later he was sent to Burke and for eight years he was in charge of that office. On August 14, 1900, Mr. Brown came to Wallace and took the position of cashier of the O. R. & N. and on March 29, 1902, he accepted his present position. He has two brothers, Milton N. and Norman O., and two sisters, Orrel A. Fulcher and Alta C. Ball.



At Wallace, on November 15, 1895, Mr. Brown married Miss Sophia M., daughter of John and Catherine (Cyr) Therriault, natives of New Brunswick and now living in Wallace. Mrs. Brown was born in Missoula, Montana, on January 27, 1877, and has one sister, Alice, widow of Jeff O'Meara. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Brown, Muriel, aged two, and Dorothy, aged four months. Mr. Brown is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and the R. A.M. and the K. T. and the Elks. He is a Democrat and has been central committeeman for several years. Mr. Brown is interested in mining and is secretary of the Little Chief Company.

JOSHUA PANNEBAKER is one of the prominent business men of Wallace and is a leading citizen and an influential man in political matters and the questions of the day. He is handling a large and lucrative business in contracting and building and is a master hand in this art, having learned it young and followed it all his life, being also possessed of a high order of natural ability in the mechanical art.

Joshua Pannebaker was born in Huron county, Ontario, Canada, on November 25, 1860, the son of Henry and Mary (Jacobs) Pannebaker, natives of Ontario. The father died in February, 1900, in Michigan and he had followed carpentering and building all his life. The mother lives in Port Huron, Michigan now. Our subject was reared in his native place and had the advantage of the famous schools of Ontario. When nineteen he went to Michigan and did carpenter work for three years. Then he wrought in Minnesota and in 1891, we see Mr. Pannebaker in Wallace where he spent two years prospecting. He then went to North Dakota and remained for three years. Following this Mr. Pannebaker came back to Wallace and took up his present business which he has followed with good success since that time. He is now one of the leading business men of the town and is substantial and capable. Mr. Pannebaker has five brothers and three sisters: Henry, Jacob, John, Daniel, Charles, Rebecca Hart, Rachel Hart, Mary Neale.

On December 28, 1898, Mr. Pannebaker married Miss Barbara, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Lightweiler) Basler, natives of Switzerland and immigrants to the United States. The father died in Minnesota in 1852, aged fifty-three. The mother lives in Wisconsin. Mrs. Pannebaker was four years old when she came to this country with her parents. She has three brothers and three sisters: Jacob, Robert, Fred, Louise Miller, Bertha Burlingame, Lena Smead. Mr. Pannebaker is a member of the M. W. A. and in political matters is a strong Democrat. He is member of the city council and has been delegate to the county conventions. Three children are the fruit of this marriage, Mary, aged three, Ralph, aged two and an infant unnamed.

JAMES LEONARD is not only one of the successful mining men of Wallace, but is also one of the leading citizens of the Coeur d'Alene country and a man of excellent ability and unquestioned standing. He was born in Beaver Meadow, Carbon county, Pennsylvania, on March 3, 1855, the son of Bernard and Margaret (Ryan) Leonard. The father was born in Ireland, came to the United States when seventeen, served forty years in coal mining and was disabled by a blast and died in Jeansville, Pennsylvania, in 1885. The mother was born in Northampton county and died when James was five. He was reared and received a limited schooling in his native place, and when ten went to breaking coal. Such was the start in life, and he continued at that work and other employment until twenty-six. He had become an expert miner and did river work at Pittsburg, then erected a cofferdam for the government at Davis island. After this he did blast furnace work at Miles, Ohio, then was in the Michigan iron mines and later prospected in Arkansas and finally came to Montana. He remained there until

JAMES LEONARD.

1886, when he came on to the Coeur d'Alene country, and here he has been prospecting and mining ever since. His brother located the Mammoth in 1884, and he is now interested with this brother in that mine. Mr. Leonard also owns several other properties, both adjoining the Mammoth and in other localities. Mr. Leonard also owns a home in Wallace and other property. He has two brothers,—William and Frank; and one sister,—Mary.

January 17, 1900, Mr. Leonard married Miss Anna, daughter of Patrick and Rose (Farrell) Donnelly, natives of Ireland and now living in North Yakima, where the wedding occurred. Mrs. Leonard was born in Washington September 16, 1876, and she has three brothers and two sisters,—Thomas, Peter, Joseph, Kate and Rose. Mr. Leonard is a member of the Elks. Mr. and Mrs. Leonard have one child,—Margaret R., born January 30, 1901. Mr. Leonard is independent in political matters and always votes for the man who will do the best for the country. He is a well informed and substantial man and has hosts of friends.

CHRISTEN ANDERSEN. About four miles east from Orofino is located the establishment of the subject of this sketch. The same consists of a first-class country hotel, well kept and undergoing all improvements to fit it to be a comfortable and attractive stopping place for travelers. Mr. Andersen is off from the reservation and carries a license for the sale of spiritous and malt liquors and has in stock a choice selection of these with cigars and tobaccos. His place is popular and is receiving a good patronage which is handled in a satisfactory manner by the skillful, genial and hospitable host.

Christen Andersen was born in Denmark, on July 4, 1854, being the son of Andrew and Carrie Andersen, natives of Denmark. The father died in 1876, aged sixty-four, but the mother died after coming to the United States. Our subject came to the United States in 1884 and after a sojourn in Wisconsin for three months, he came to Idaho and worked in the Democrat mine in the Pierce district. Then he took a claim six miles out from Orofino and proved up on it and for fifteen years he did general farming and raising stock. He was very successful in this as also in raising vegetables and packing to the mines and his financial rating was of the first-class. Recently, he sold that property and bought his present place of one hundred and thirteen acres, which is well provided with commodious buildings for the trade, and which Mr. Andersen is still improving. Mr. Andersen has one brother and seven sisters: Nels, Stena, Dorothy, Meren, Hannah, Tennie, Sina and Minnie.

In February, 1884, Mr. Andersen married Miss Mary, daughter of Thomas and Matamaria Thompson, natives of Denmark where they now live. This wedding occurred in Denmark and Mr. Andersen brought his wife to this country with himself. She has two sisters, Annie and Mollie, in Denmark. One child has been born to this marriage. Both Mr. Andersen and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. In political matters he is independent and reserves for his own decision both the questions of the day and the men for whom he will cast his vote, rather than being bound by party tenets. Mr. Andersen stands exceptionally well in the community and has a popular stopping place.

CHARLES H. JONES, who is at present a blacksmith for the Frisco mine at Gem, is one of the substantial citizens of that town and a man of reliability and good standing. He was born in Houghton, Michigan, on February 1, 1873, the son of William E. and Keziah (Rule) Jones, natives of England. The father came to this country with his parents while a small boy and they located in Dodgeville, Wisconsin. Later he went to Houghton, Michigan, and was foreman in different mines in northern Michigan for thirty years. He and his wife now dwell at Iron Mountain, Michigan, retired. The mother came to this country when five years old, was married in Wisconsin and now lives in Iron Mountain. Our subject was reared and educated in the various places where the family lived during the years in which his father operated in different mines. He was favored with a good high school education and at Iron Mountain he learned the blacksmith trade. Then he went to northern Michigan and operated a diamond drill for a party for two years. In 1895 he came to Gem and since that time he has been in this vicinity and has given his attention to his trade. Mr. Jones has the following brothers and sisters: William H., Obadiah, Edward, Thomas, Charles, Albert, Joseph, Mrs. Nellie Terbilcox, Mrs. Bessie Hebbert. Mr. Jones is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Encampment, while in political matters he is independent.

ELLIS SMALL. The estate of our subject is situated about three-fourths of a mile northeast from Orofino and is in fact partly platted for a town, and J. G. Wright, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume, is interested in the property with Mr. Small.

Ellis Small was born in Aroostook county, Maine, on September 16, 1859, being the son of John L. and Jeanette (Stephens) Small, natives of New Brunswick. The father was born on August 24, 1814, and died in Lewiston, on March 23, 1901, aged eighty-seven. His parents came from England and he came to Maine when young, thence to Wisconsin and in 1886, to Lewiston. The mother was born on October 17, 1821, married October 7, 1839, and died in Lewiston in 1893, aged seventy-two. Our subject was educated in the district school until sixteen, then worked on the farm and in the woods until twenty-one, and then he left Maine, coming to Walla Walla, where he worked in the saw mills for a year. We next see him in Spokane in the employ of Ira and David W. Small, large contractors of the Northern Pacific and cousins of our subject. After this he worked in Tacoma, then returned to Wisconsin, and in 1885 he came to Lewiston, bought a ranch, married and a few years later came to his present place. Mr. Small has one brother, George, and three sisters, Eliza, widow of R. Ingraham; Lydia Smith, Annie E. Cochran. There were nine children in the family but the others are dead. Mr. Small is a stanch Republican and is a member of the W. W., also is vice-chancellor of the K. P., Orofino Lodge, No. 31.

On October 1, 1887, at Lewiston, Mr. Small married Miss Zoe L., daughter of Malcolm G. and Julia (Johnson) Marsilliot, and a native of Calumet county, Wisconsin. Mr. Marsilliot was born near Euclid, Ohio, and shortly after his marriage he enlisted in the United States army and during the Civil war he was a marine engineer on the Mississippi squadron. He was commissioned in the U. S. Revenue service in 1865 and served for thirty years. He was in Behring sea several seasons. Mr. Marsilliot was a man of considerable prominence in marine circles and his death occurred at Port Townsend on April 26, 1895. He was born on August 29, 1833. The mother of Mrs. Small was a native of Staten island, New York, born September 21, 1844, and now lives at Asotin, Washington. Mrs. Small has two brothers and one sister, Verner L., Malcolm G., Blanch Richards. Mrs. Small is a member of the Methodist church. She was educated in the public schools and Wilbur college, graduating in 1886. When sixteen, Mrs. Small began teaching and has been engaged in educational work more or less since. She is now assistant county superintendent of schools in Shoshone count. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Small, Hattie, aged fifteen; Jay, aged thirteen..

CHARLES H. BELLMER. This prominent business man of Orofino conducts a first-class jewelry store and is known as one of the early pioneers of this section and is established as one of the leading business men and progressive spirits of the town.

Charles E. Bellmer was born in Bremen, Germany, on May 17, 1867, being the son of Frederick and Marie (Essen) Bellmer, natives of Germany. The father is a wood mechanic and a contractor and lives in the home place. The mother of our subject died in 1894, aged forty-nine. Our subject was well educated in his native place and learned the jeweler trade and had charge of a large establishment when he left Bremen at the age of nineteen. He spent a short time in Baltimore and Chicago and then came on to Iowa. Four years were spent in Iowa at his trade and during this time we note the energy of our subject in that he mastered the intricacies of pharmacy. In 1888 he came to Lewiston and worked a time and then opened a drug store and jewelry store in Juliaetta. Six weeks later, this burned down and he was left with a few old clothes and two dollars in cash. From this stunning loss, he at once recovered and started in partnership with Frank Kelley, in Moscow. He did the bench work and his partner attended to the store. From August, 1889, to April, 1890, he wrought there and then opened a store for himself in Palouse. He did well for a time and then took a position in a drug store. His health failing, he went onto the farm of his brother-in-law and later took to raising stock on his own account. He settled on Whiskey creek and raised stock there for four years. At the opening of the reservation he took one hundred and twenty acres. He abandoned the Whiskey creek place and brought his thirty head of stock to his homestead. In 1899 Mr. Bellmer came to Orofino and opened a drug store in partnership with Dr. Moody. He now occupies a window in the store, Dr. Beck owning it. He does a good business in the jewelry line and is one of the substantial and prosperous men of the town. He also owns forty acres near town besides other property. Mr. Bellmer has two sisters, Meta, wife of John Black, in Leland; Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Goldman.

On June 6, 1900, Mr. Bellmer married Miss Rosetta, daughter of John and Charlotte (Mason) Taylor, who now reside in Orofino. One child, May, has been born to this marriage. Mrs. Bellmer was born in Latah county, on October 25, 1871, and has the following brothers and sisters: Alfred, at Grangeville; Ira and Ernest, in Rosetta; Elmer, John, and Roy, at home; Eva, wife of Charles W. Green, in Lenore; Iona and Mina, at home.

JAMES BOND, of the firm of Bissinger & Bond, proprietors of a leading saloon in Wallace, is a man of wide and large experience in the business and mining world and is really one of the best expert miners of the entire Coeur d'Alene country, which is demonstrated by some of the trying and difficult work which he has accomplished successfully in the face of great odds.

James Bond was born in England on August 27, 1864, the son of Henry and Ellen (Webb) Bond, natives of England, where the father now lives. The mother died there in 1864. Our subject was well educated in his native land and in 1881, he came to the United States. He was the youngest of thirteen children and early learned self reliance. In this country he worked in the New Jersey mines, then contracted to sink shafts in the Pennsylvania coal fields and then we find him in the iron mines of the Lake Superior region. He was one of the first five who went to the Cascade, called now the Volunteer. He was there four years, being shift boss. During this time a terrible epidemic of typhoid fever raged and our subject and the bookkeeper were the only two of the officials left and they managed by almost superhuman effort to keep things running, sometimes remaining forty-eight hours at a time without sleep. He and his wife operated the boarding house there and later sold it and went to England. They returned to this country and Mr. Bond was foreman in the Sheridan near McKinley for four years. Then he went to Montana and there accomplished a timbering of a cave-in of a mine which was accounted impossible. Later he put into practical execution the hydraulic drill which was thought by all to be impractical. He was night boss for a year, then came to the Tiger. Six days later he hurt his foot and went to the hospital, then went to work in the Standard after which Mr. Bond opened a grocery store at Black Bear and conducted it until recently, and still owns the building, it being rented. Mr. Bond owns the Anglers' Inn on Lake Coeur d'Alene and March 14, 1903, he opened his present business which is thriving because of the fact of his extensive acquaintance and popularity. Mr. Bond has two brothers, Ernest, Charles, policeman in Liverpool, England. He has two sisters, Nellie, Annie.

In England, in 1885, Mr. Bond married Miss Ellen, daughter of Joseph and Lane Pierce. The father was killed in a Cornish mine a few years previous to this marriage and the mother lives in Wales. Mrs. Bond has four brothers: Alfred, Frank, William, Richard, and three sisters: Annie Rolfe, Beatrice, and Helena. Beatrice sang by royal command before the queen. Mrs. Bond has always been associated with her husband in business, having acquired a good training in business schools in England. Mr. Bond is a member of the K. P., of the Foresters, of the Redmen, of the A. D. K., being oriental guide in the last order. Mr. Bond is largely interested in the Headlight and the Surprise and many other leading mining properties.

LYMAN WOOD, a prominent man of Wallace, a leading and enterprising citizen, has for years and is now handling a fine building and contracting business. He is a skilled and capable man in his line of business and has the confidence of the people and his wisdom and skill have been active in producing some of the finest edifices of the town.

Lyman Wood was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, on March 18, 1852, the son of Eli C. and Elizabeth (Ross) Wood. The father was born in Vermont and he came from an old New England family of prominence. He went to Murray in the first rush and died there in November, 1902, having spent the intervening years there in mining. The mother was born of a Dutch family in Pennsylvania and died in 1893. Our subject was educated and reared in La Salle county, Illinois, whither his parents had removed in 1856. In 1864 he left the parental roof and went to Streator, Illinois, taking up the carpenter trade, which he had learned from a skilled father. He followed the trade in Illinois for the intervening years until he was twenty-two and then went to Denver, Pueblo, and other places in Colorado and Kansas. In 1875 he journeyed to Wisconsin and remained a decade. Next we see him in Murray and there he remained until 1890. He followed his trade and in 1890 he wrought in Osburn and the following year he located in Wallace and this has been the scene of his labors since. For a time Mr. Wood operated a planing mill and later built another but of late years he has given his attention entirely to his craft. In addition to this, however, Mr. Wood has large interests in various mining properties, is a trustee for the Comet and acting agent for the Atlas, whose owners are largely in Boston. The latter is a Stevens Peak copper property. He also owns property in Wallace and is a substantial man. Mr. Wood has three brothers, James R., Josiah, Jesse, and three sisters, Lydia Dunn, Sarah Ashley and Katherine Greenman.

On April 16, 1876, at Omro, Wisconsin, Mr. Wood married Miss Mary J., daughter of John and Elizabeth Challoner, natives of England, where they were married. They came to this country and the father died in 1897 and the mother in 1894. Mrs. Wood has one brother, John. Four children have been born to this marriage, Bessie, wife of G. W. Brown, with the N. P. in Wallace; John C., operates the concentrator in Gem; Edgar, a carpenter in Wallace; Earl A., handling a poultry ranch at Tekoa, Washington. Mr. Wood is a member of the Elks, of the Maccabees, and in political alliances is with the Republicans.

CHESTER B. BOYDEN is a miner of extended experience in the northwest and also in southwestern United States. He was born in Canton, New York, on May 18, 1850, the son of William D. and Dolly (Nash) Boyden. The father was born in Massachusetts, coming from an old American family of English descent. He died in 1882 aged sixty-five. The mother was born in St. Albans, Vermont. Our subject was raised and educated in his native place and when nineteen he went to Chicago, thence to Pioche, Nevada, where he spent eight years prospecting, mining and assaying. He was in various places in Nevada and Arizona, then operated a hoisting engine for four and one half years at Tombstone, Arizona. In 1884 Mr. Boyden started out on a trip to Nevada, California, Colorado, then to Missouri, and then went east on a visit. Later we see him in St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was in a railroad office for eight years. In 1896-7 he came to the coast and prospected in British Columbia, then went to Alaska, going over the Stickeen pass to Teslin lake and thence down the river to Dawson. He was taken with typhoid pneumonia and went down the river to St. Michaels with four other prospectors in an open boat, dining on salmon and rice. Then he took passage on a sailing vessel and in thirty-eight days, after a stormy voyage, was in Seattle, whence he came to Spokane. The next spring we find Mr. Boyden in the Buffalo Hump country and after some prospecting for that season, he came to Mullan and since that time he has been here in mining operations. Mr. Boyden is of the opinion that this is the best mining section that he has visited and is satisfied with its promises, which are daily being verified into paying mines. Mr. Boyden is interested in the Boston group, a lead property, about one mile west from Mullan. He also has other properties and is giving his attention to their development and improvement. Mr. Boyden has three brothers, Henry D., William H., Leslie A.

On October 20, 1878, Mr. Boyden married Miss Delia, daughter of Charles and Angelina Gleason. Mr. Gleason is dead, but his widow lives in Canton, New York, where Mrs. Boyden was born. The wedding occurred at Pioche, Nevada. Mrs. Boyden has two sisters, Mrs. Hattie Roys, and Mrs. Cora. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Boyden, Dwight A., aged twenty; Dollie, aged nineteen; Nellie, aged nine. Mrs. Boyden and the children are at present in Canton, New York, but expect soon to come to the west again. Mr. Boyden is a member of the K. O. T. M., and a Republican.

NORTON R. PENNEY is the postmaster at Gem and also conducts a large mercantile establishment which, because of his capabilities and enterprise in this line, has become a leading establishment of the district and is now favored with a thriving patronage.

Norton R. Penney was born on Long Island, New York, on April 1, 1840, the son of Manassah F. and Phoebe (Robinson) Penney, natives of Long Island. The family of Norton was one of the early families on Long Island and prominent in the American cause. Our subject's paternal grandmother was a Squires and the family was one of the first settlers on Long Island and they still retain the old homestead. A cousin of his grandfather was retained in the Halifax prison for trying to blow up a British man-of-war in the time of the Revolution. Joseph Penney, brother of our subject's father, was in the war of 1812 and was afterward a famous sea captain. The father came to Illinois in 1853 and died there in 1890, having been a prominent man of the state. The mother of Norton R. died in 1854, aged thirty-nine, in Illinois. Her father came to that state with the Andover colony in the early part of the nineteenth century. Norton R. was reared and educated in Illinois, and when nineteen went to California, it being an extension of a trip to Pikes Peak. He located at Poorman's creek and mined three years and then returned to Illinois. In 1870 he went to Iowa and in 1874 journeyed to Utah, where he mined until 1888. Then Mr. Penney came to Wallace and took a contract on the O. R. & N. between Tekoa and Wallace and a year later brought in his family and opened the Penney hotel. This property was consumed in the big fire of 1890 and then he conducted the Idaho two years, selling to Fred Kratzer at that time. Mr. Penney operated the Carter a while and then did a dairy business and in the fall of 1902, he came to Gem and established the mercantile house which he conducts at this time. Mr. Penney has three brothers, Charles, Theodore M., and Warren D., the last two being prominent in the Civil war and both dying in that conflict. He has three sisters, Maria S. Converse, Rose Jacks, Isabelle Woods.

On January 1, 1866, at Munson, Illinois, Mr. Penney married Miss Elnora, daughter of Elisha and Margaret (Wright) Attwater. The father was born in New York, of an American family of prominence, and served as lieutenant in the One Hundred and Twelfth Illinois Mounted Infantry. During the French and Indian war a brig was captured which belonged to the family and recently Mrs. Penney received a check for two dollars and sixty cents as her part of the reimbursement, the amount being so small on account of the great increase of heirs. Mrs. Penney's mother was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and comes from a prominent family. Mrs. Penney was born in Rocky Island, September, 1848, and has four brothers and one sister: George, Robert, John, Frank, Mary E. Boyd, whose husband is a prominent man in Kansas. Four children have been born to this marriage: Margaret, wife of J. F. Nottingham, a merchant in Dayton, Washington; Nora, wife of Grant S. Potter, a business man in Wallace; Gertrude, Norton E., in the high school; Theodore A., who was drowned at Dudley, Massachusetts. He was a graduate of Amherst and was an instructor in Dudley academy. His death occurred on August 13, 1900. Mr. Penney is a member of the K. P. and of the A. O. U. W. He and his wife are members of the Congregational church.

JOHN C. WOOD is doubtless the youngest foreman in the entire Coeur d'Alene district, and it is unnecessary to remark that unusual ability and efficiency have brought him this position. He is foreman of the Hecla concentrator at Gem and his career has always been characterized by wisdom, enterprise and discretion as have been evinced in the capacity where we find him at the present writing.

John C. Wood was born in New London, Wisconsin, on January 12, 1880, and his parents and brothers and sisters are mentioned elsewhere in this volume, namely: in the sketch of Lyman Wood. In 1885 the family removed to Murray and our subject there began his school course which was finished in the high school in Wallace. In 1896 he left that pleasant part of life, the school days, and began the real battle of business. He was in the employ of Finch & Campbell in outside work about the Standard for three years. Then he was appointed shift boss in the mill at Wallace, where he did good work for three years. In July, 1902, he was transferred as foreman of the Hecla mill and there he is fulfilling the duties incumbent in a capable and faithful manner. Mr. Wood is interested heavily with his father in mining properties and is a stirring spirit in this line. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Elks and the Maccabees and in political matters he is independent. Mr. Wood is a popular and highly esteemed young man.

JOHN F. METZ, of the firm of Metz & Mealley, proprietors of the Idaho resort in Wallace, is an energetic and enterprising business man and is conducting a popular place of business. He was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, on September 22, 1869, the son of Charles and Mary (Gruppel) Metz, who now dwell in St. Paul. The father was born in Germany and followed contracting and building. The mother was born in St. Louis and comes of German ancestry. Our subject spent the first seventeen years of his life in his native place and acquired a good education and then started out for himself. He first went to Montana and was engaged in a hotel and later in a restaurant, learning the business thoroughly. In 1888 Mr. Metz went to Tekoa, Washington, and opened the Pioneer restaurant and conducted it a year. Next we see him in Wallace and for three years he was in the saloon and restaurant business. In 1894 Mr. Metz leased the Idaho hotel and for three years he did a good business and then sold out and went to Ft. Steele, where he operated a restaurant for one year. Next he followed the same business in Saltese, Montana, and also conducted a saloon. Mr. Metz then turned to prospecting and did some exploiting in the Buffalo Hump country. He located a claim but being short of funds abandoned it. It was relocated and sold for ten thousand dollars. In 1899 he returned to Wallace and January first engaged in his present business with Ed O'Mally, who recently sold his interest to Michael Mealley. They conducted a place which is a popular resort for miners and prospectors. Mr. Metz has five brothers, William, Henry, Charles, George, Herbert, and one sister, Christena Hendricks. Mr. Metz is still the possessor of the joys and quietness of the bachelor. He is a member of the Elks and in politics is a Democrat.

FRED C. GREENWALD is the senior member of the firm of Greenwald & Coller, proprietors of the Windsor hotel, the leading hostelry in Mullan, and a house which is a favorite with the traveling public and the recipient of a thriving patronage.

Fred C. Greenwald was born in Herne, Germany, on April 1, 1870, the son of Robert and Alwine (Erdelen) Greenwald, natives of Herne. The father died in 1892. He had been a soldier in the Austrian and the Franco-Prussian wars. The mother still lives in Herne. Our subject was educated in the public schools and learned the confectioner's art. He wrought at this industry until he was eighteen, then came to the United States and located in Hoboken, New Jersey. One year there in a hotel, then to Buffalo, New York, then in Kansas City, later in Arizona, Los Angeles and other places in California he wrought in cooking and at his trade. In the fall of 1891, he came to Spokane and was pastry cook there until June, 1896, in the Spokane hotel. Then he came to Wallace and took a position in the Carter house, after which he was in the Morning mine in Mullan, then cooked at the miners' boarding house in Burke and in September, 1901, Mr. Greenwald entered partnership with Ed Lappat and bought the business of the Windsor house. Later Mr. Lappat sold to Mr. Coller who is now in partnership with our subject. Their excellent cuisine, wise management of business, kind treatment of all and genial manner, have won for them a gratifying patronage and made their house the center of the travelers for this town.

Mr. Greenwald has four brothers and two sisters living in Germany, Paul, Ernest, William, Robert, Adele, Emma. On October 5, 1898, at Spokane, Mr. Greenwald married Miss Thea C. Carter, who is a native of Norway. Her parents are both deceased. Two children have been born to this union, Alma A. and Clara T. Mr. Greenwald is a member of the Redmen and is past sachem. He is manager of the Stevens Peak Copper and Gold Mining Company, secretary of the Wellington Copper and Gold Mining Company and is also interested in several other promising properties.

ALBERT E. BOOKWALTER is master mechanic of the Mammouth mine at Gem and in this capacity has manifested great skill and execution in his line and is a popular and substantial man. He was born in Indiana, on September 7, 1862, the son of William H. and Bettie (Flora) Bookwalter, natives of Indiana, and they now live at Bookwalter, Nebraska. They came from old and prominent families and are leading people in their present home. Our subject was educated well and learned the machinist trade while going on with his school. This was at Pawnee City, Nebraska. Since that time he has given most of his time to engineering and machine work. He followed his trades in Nebraska until 1890 and then came to Corvallis, Oregon. He was engineer and master mechanic in the carriage works there for five years, then went to Salem and took charge of the electric plant there until August, 1899. At the last date mentioned, he came to the Coeur d'Alene country and was installed as master mechanic at the Mammoth and there he has continued since. Mr. Bookwalter has four brothers and four sisters: Frank, Allison, John, Joseph, Lilly, Annie, Lida, Bertha.

On August 4, 1883, Mr. Bookwalter married Malinda J., daughter of Charles and Sophia (Clark) Cruse, natives of Indiana and now living at Liberty, Nebraska. The wedding occurred in Pawnee City, Nebraska. Mrs. Bookwalter is a native of Franklin county, Indiana, and has two brothers and three sisters: Marion, Henry, Elnora Patterson, Elsie Harris, Lulu Doty. To Mr. and Mrs. Bookwalter there have been born six children: Vernon, William, Lewis, Flora, Elnora, Marie M. Mr. Bookwalter is a member of the A. F. & A. M., of the I. O. O. F. and of the W. W. He is a Republican and always allied on the side of progress and improvement.

JACOB MORITZ, one of the best known merchants of Orofino, is eminently deserving of mention in the history of northern Idaho, since he has been more or less connected with the country for a score or more of years, since he is now one of the steady laborers for development and advancement, since he is a man of integrity, and since he is a popular and capable man and possessed of a public spirit. Perhaps no man in the Clearwater valley is beloved sincerely by more people than the subject of this sketch and his affability, kindness, real worth of character, genuine sympathy with his fellows, and cheering words to all, are some of the reasons that have wrought this state of affairs and hold his large circle of admiring friends.

Jacob Moritz was born in York, Pennsylvania, on May 12, 1860, being the son of Moses and Henrietta (Danabaum) Moritz, natives of Germany. The father was a prominent physician in York and died in September, 1879. The mother died when our subject was twenty. Jacob had received a good education in the public schools and high school in York and in 1882 he went to Pueblo, Colorado, to visit relatives. Thence he made his way to Portland, Oregon, and soon was installed as steward on one of the O. R. & N. steamers. For eighteen years he made the Snake river trip and was known favorably all over the country adjacent to that run. He is an only child, but has half-brothers and half-sisters as follows: Frank, David and Pauline. In 1899 Mr. Moritz located in Orofino and opened a general merchandise store and has enjoyed a first-class trade since that time.

At Lewiston, on August 7, 1897, Mr. Moritz married Miss Hattie M., daughter of Frank and Sarah (Maguire) Pixley. Mr. Pixley died when Mrs. Moritz was five years old and his widow is now living at Waha, on the reservation. Mrs. Moritz was born in Kansas, on February 22, 1877, and has three brothers, Orrin, in Lewiston; Walter and James, at Waha.

CHARLES E. FORT, who is well known in the Coeur d'Alene country, is a popular business man in Gem and is also interested in mining, to which he gives his attention a portion of the time. He was born in Rock county, Wisconsin, on February 15, 1867, the son of Thomas S. Fort, native of New York state. The father was a pioneer to Wisconsin and died in Michigan in 1887. Our subject was reared in Wisconsin until twelve, attended district school and then went to Michigan with the family. There he was a constant attendant in school until he was sixteen when he learned the baker's trade and followed it in Michigan for some time. Then after his father's death he was employed in the mines in various places in the state until 1892, when he opened a cigar and confectionery store in Ironwood, Michigan, and sold out one year later. He was engaged in the grocery business there for a time and in 1897 he came to Gem. He took a position in the mines and then opened a cigar and confectionery store. Mr. Fort has one brother, Edward.

At Hurley, Wisconsin, on January 21, 1889, Mr. Fort married Miss Lauretta, a daughter of Joseph and Julia (Johnson) Strike, natives of England and New York, reespectively. The father lives in Wisconsin, where he follows blacksmithing. The mother died April 26, 1902. Mrs. Fort died August 16, 1900, at Gem, aged twenty-five years, leaving two sons, Thomas R., and Harvey. On September 26, 1901, Mr. Fort married Mrs. Mary Lawrence, who is a sister of his first wife. The marriage occurred in Missoula, Montana. Mrs. Fort was born in Pennsylvania, September 23, 1872. She has two girls by her first marriage. Clara M. and Olive M. Mrs. Fort has two sisters living, Sarah J. Jones and Grace, and two brothers, Harry and James. Mr. Fort is a member of the I. O. O. F., Encampment and the K. P. He is handling a fine cigar store and confectionery establishment, his wife aiding in this enterprise, while he also does considerable work in photography and has some elegant views on sale.

FRANCIS E. GILLICE is one of the young men of Gem whose popularity is unmistakable, and whose uprightness and capabilities have hightly won for him this enviable position and the confidence which is his to enjoy in unstinted measure. He is at present the hoist engineer in the Frisco mine and is one of the efficient men of the district.

Francis E. Gillice was born in Placer county, California, on October 10, 1877, the son of Owen and Ingeberg (Wickstrom) Gillice. The father was a native of Ireland, came to California in 1849 and there followed mining until his death, in 1881. He had come across the plains. The mother was born in Sweden and now lives near Salem. After the death of his father our subject came with his mother and the balance of the family to Kansas, whence they went to Oregon. Mrs. Gillice married Samuel Miles in Kansas, a native of Indiana, whose ancestors were of the stanch Quaker stock. Our subject attended the graded and high schools in Salem and in October, 1898, he came thence to the Coeur d'Alene country where he at once began labor in the Bunker Hill and Sullivan. He remained there until the mines closed in 1899 and after work was resumed he came to the Frisco and since then he has been one of the efficient force in that property. He has held his present position about nine months and is a capable hand in this responsible place. Mr. Gillice has one brother, Oscar. Mr. Gillice is a member of the Elks and popular in this leading fraternal order in the Coeur d'Alene country.

HON. CLIFFORD C. FULLER, now conducting a real estate and insurance business in Orofino, is without doubt one of the leading business men of the Clearwater valley, as will be evident from a perusal of his life's review, which we append, deeming it a pertinent portion of the history of Shoshone county.

Clifford C. Fuller was born in Morenci, Michigan, on August 21, 1868, being the son of Morris F. and Mary L. (Page) Fuller. The father was born in New York State, being descended from a prominent family of long standing in the Empire State. His eldest brother, Rev. J. Q. Fuller, was a well known divine of Atlanta, Georgia. The father is now a retired farmer in Huron, South Dakota. The mother of our subject was born in Fairfield township, Michigan. Her parents were natives of New York State and early pioneers to Michigan. They were in Detroit when it was held by the British. The maternal grandmother of our subject was a Morris and her ancestors were of national fame in the time of the Revolution, one of them being a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Our subject attended school in Morenci until fifteen and then came with the family to South Dakota, who were part of a large colony of Michigan people. The father took land and our subject completed his education in a private school and later taught school for three winters. When he was twenty he engaged in the real estate business in Huron, and as this was in the time when the strong fight for the state capital was being taken up, wherein a quarter of a million was spent, there was a great boom. When the capital was located Mr. Fuller withdrew from business, as the boom was over. In 1890 he came to Olympia and read law for one year, thence to Moscow, where he continued this reading, and there also he embarked in a commercial brokerage and collection business in partnership with G. G. Pickett. He continued in business there until the reservation opened up and he came to the present site of Orofino and filed on one hundred and forty-seven acres of land. He erected a store, fenced the land and made other improvements. He conducted a general merchandise business. At this time Mr. Fuller put into execution a plan which he had long considered feasible, that of running a steamer on the Clearwater, and the Lewiston was the boat that he hired for one trip, in which it transported large amounts of cordwood to Lewiston. This was an excellent undertaking, and will doubtless result in much good, as it is demonstrated now that the steamers are able to make the trips, and when a small amount of improving is done by the government this waterway will be opened up and be of untold benefit to the surrounding country. And in this connection we are bound to mention that to Mr. Fuller much credit is due for his aggressive labors in many lines in this section, in addition to this important move, which will be evident as we proceed. In 1896 Mr. Fuller was nominated for lieutenant-governor of Idaho on the Fusion ticket, but declined, being too young for eligibility to the position. In the same campaign, however, he was nominated for representative to the state legislature and elected by a handsome majority, having the distinction of running far ahead of his ticket. In that legislature he took an important part in the Heitfield-Dubois senatorial fight. The former being elected, our subject was appointed his secretary and served for one year in Washington, then resigned to return to his business at Orofino. He had previous to this organized a company known as the Clearwater Improvement Company, he being president and P. H. Blake secretary, to which company he had deeded his land. The company built a warehouse, platted a town-site and did other improving in 1898. They also constructed a ferry and the town commenced to grow. It was named Orofino from the well known creek and a new town with excellent prospects was launched. The railroad came in the fall and the town has become well known and promises great things for the future. Mr. Fuller has also been active in the interests of the new county and spent the winter in Boise in arduous labor for it.

Mr. Fuller is a member of the B. P. O. E., Moscow, No. 249. He is a stanch Republican and is a potent and well known figure in the conventions, both state and county. He has the following brothers and sisters: James M., an expert with a threshing machine company in Grinnell, Iowa; Edward H., a grain buyer in Genesee; Arthur D., a railroad engineer in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin; Nelly, a widow; Alice, a school teacher; Ada, a stenographer, all in Huron.

In February, 1898, Mr. Fuller married Miss Mabel B. Anderson at Moscow. Her father is deceased and her mother was the first postmistress in Orofino, and now lives on the reservation. Mrs. Fuller was born in Iowa on August 31, 1875, and is now attending the State University in Moscow. They have one child, Lucelle.

STEPHEN V. OSBURN is one of the earliest and most prominent pioneers of the Cœur d'Alene district, and since the days of the Prichard creek excitement until the present he has allied himself with this section and is one of the best known men of the country. He was born in Virginia November 1, 1835, the son of Enos and Sarah (Castleman) Osburn, natives of Virginia. The father was born in 1796 and died in 1868, had served in the war of 1812, and subject's grandfather was a patriot of the Revolution. The family started in this country by the emigration of four brothers from England in 1728. The mother came from a prominent old Virginia family who were very wealthy and were leaders in the American cause and fought in all the struggles pertaining to it. Our subject came to Illinois when small with the family and there gained his education from the public schools. He went to do for himself when twenty and bought a farm for one thousand dollars, took two crops off from it and sold it for two thousand dollars. He then bought a large farm in Logan county and there saw the hardest times of his life, corn and wheat selling as low as ten and forty cents respectively. In February, 1863, he came to Montana and mined in Alder gulch, in 1865 went to Butte, at Helena and at other places he mined unsuccessfully, and finally in 1870 he struck it rich in Illinois gulch and went east but stopped at Salt Lake City to mine, being interested in Dry Canyon. In 1876 he went to the Black Hills and to use his expression, went broke and got in debt eight hundred dollars. He returned west and visited Butte and other places and finally on May 12, 1883, he arrived in the Eagle City country. He at once secured a claim, built a hewed log house and brought in a stock of goods and his place was known as Osburn. March 18, 1886, he took his present place and secured eighty acres additional as a townsite. Mr. Osburn has three brothers and four sisters, George, Marion, Thomas, Farrinda, widow of W. Bone, Lucy Ulett, Laura Nance, Sarah Speers. Mr. Speers' mother was captured by the Indians and was forced to marry an Indian, but later escaped and married. Her daughter by the Indian raised a family of boys, two of whom became famous preachers.

At Rathdrum in the fall of 1888, Mr. Osburn married Mrs. Mary M. Smith, a native of Pennsylvania. Mr. Osburn has heavy mining interests, among which we may mention the Mineral Point property, a producer, the Terror, the Evolution, which was the first claim located in the Coeur d'Alene by Prichard, and many other properties. He is a member of the Elks. Mr. and Mrs. Osburn are well known and have hosts of friends in this country and are among the leading people of the entire district.

JOSEPH E. BECK, M. D. A representative and well known business man of Orofino, where the Doctor does both an extensive medical practice and also is proprietor of a first class drug store, it is fitting that an epitome of his career be granted among the prominent men of his town and vicinity.

Joseph E. Beck was born in Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, on May 5, 1864, being the son of Jacob P. and Sophia (Saxmon) Beck, natives of Pennsylvania and of German ancestrage. The father is a prominent Republican in his section and is now leading a retired life from his active labors of a farmer heretofore. The mother of our subject died in September, 1901. Our subject received a common schooling and then graduated from Dayton Academy, Pennsylvania, and then entered the state university of Iowa, taking up the medical course, which he finished with distinction in 1887. An active practice soon began and he followed his profession one year in Pennsylvania, seven years in South Dakota, four years in Kansas, and one year in Washington. Then he retired from active practice for one year, visiting various places in the northwest, finally locating in Orofino, where he purchased his present store from Dr. Charles S. Moody. The Doctor does a good practice in the town and surrounding country in addition to handling his store and he is a leading business man of this section. Doctor Beck has four brothers, Dr. Peter S. Beck, in Genesee; Dr. John A. Beck, in Salinas, California; Jacob S., a farmer in Pennsylvania; Christian S., a miner in Pennsylvania. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., Orofino 64, being vice grand; of the K. of P., Orofino 31, being present C. C.; and of the M. W. A.

On September 22, 1893, in Chicago, Dr. Beck married Miss Della E., daughter of James Yates, whose parents were natives of England and were married in London. Mrs. Beck was born in Tennessee. Her parents now live in Kansas and the father is a retired iron worker, being a very skillful artisan. Mrs. Beck is now conducting a drug store in Pasco, Washington.

PETER SCHUE, a genial and affable gentleman whose uprightness and capabilities have won for him the respect and confidence of all, is now living at Osburn, and is heavily interested in mining properties that have shown great value. He was born in Indiana November 10, 1847, the son of Frank and Lucy (Brunner) Schue, natives of Alsace-Lorraine and Switzerland, respectively. The father settled in Indiana when sixteen and was one of the leading pioneers of the country. He died in 1849, aged twenty-four. He was a prominent young man. The mother came to the United States when five years of age, was married in Dearborn county, Indiana, and now lives in Osage county, Missouri, the widow of John G. Schwind. Our subject had the privilege of but one term in school and like many of the hardy pioneers he was obliged to gather his education from the available means as he grew up. He remained in Indiana until twenty-six, engaged in buying cattle and hogs. On May 26, 1876, he landed in Kansas, returned soon to Indiana, bought horses and mules and returned to Kansas and broke prairie in various places, working for Mrs. White, the mother of Senator White, which person helped him to break twelve miles of fire breaks in two days. Mr. Schue farmed and raised stock there until 1889, when he came to Farmington, Washington. In 1899 Mr. Schue, with Messrs. F. T. Brown, J. J. Winship, John McNull, John Flink and Nathan Wittner, advanced funds and incorporated the O. K. Mining Company. In addition to this property Mr. Schue is interested in the Salmon river mines and has some very valuable property. He has one half-brother and three half-sisters,—Louis, Mary Bengel, Barbara Lambert and Lena Keller.

On September 7, 1899, at Wallace, Mr. Schue married Miss Annie, daughter of Peter and Eliza (Murray) McRedmond, natives of Ireland. The father enlisted in the Civil war, and died soon after from yellow fever, when Mrs. Schue was five months old. The mother died in Springfield, Massachusetts, in January, 1872. Mrs. Schue lived in Westfield, but made several trips to the west to visit friends. Mr. Schue is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Encampment. Mrs. Schue is a member of the Catholic church. Politically they are independent.

OLE H. LINN is a mining man and a leading business man of Wallace, of excellent standing, and one of the foremost men in pressing this country to the front and to the attention of investors. He was born in Sweden March 20, 1871, the son of Hans and Emma (Bur) Linn, natives of Norway and Sweden, respectively. They came to the United States in 1887, and the father died in Douglas county, Minnesota, a few days after his arrival. The mother still lives in Minnesota. Our subject came to this country two years after his parents and spent one year in Minnesota and North Dakota, and then came to the Coeur d'Alene country. He landed here in March, 1890, and went to work in the various mines of the district. He invested his earnings carefully in grubstaking and in stocks, and the results are that he is now one of the principal men of the section. He is president of the Nine Mile properties and manager and director of the O. K., at Government gulch, besides being heavily interested in various other properties that are of value. He is handling a force of eight men in development work on the O.

K. and the property will soon be a producer. Mr. Linn has also an eighth interest in the Sixteen to One claims. Mr. Linn has the following brothers and sisters: Michael, Samuel, Andrew, Annie Flink, Emma Holm, Martha.

On January 22, 1894, at Wallace, Mr. Linn married Miss Annie, daughter of Magnus and Mary (Errickson) Mattson, natives of Sweden. The father died when this daughter was young, and the mother died in her native land in 1891. Mrs. Linn was born in Sweden on January 19, 1871, and she has one brother and one sister,—Charles and Tillie Michael. Mr. Linn is a member of the A. F. & A. M., of the Elks, of the K. P. and of the Scandinavian Brotherhood. He is a stanch Republican and is on the school board and attended the seventh state convention.

JOHN W. FLINK is a leading mining man of the Coeur d'Alene country and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant an epitome of his interesting career in the history of his county. He was born in Sweden on July 6, 1866, the son of Charles and Hannah Flink, natives also of Sweden, where the mother died when our subject was six years of age. The father was for many years a non-commissioned officer in the army, and, as is customary in that country, he was given a name, when he entered the army, and they have retained the name since. He is now retired. Our subject was well educated in his native land, and in March, 1887, he came to the United States. He soon made his way to Minnesota and worked in the sawmills and at various employments for two years, when he went to Puget Sound. In the winter of 1889 he returned east as far as the Coeur d'Alene country and worked on the railroad between Wallace and Mullan. Next we see him in Stevens county, Washington, and in Spokane, and in the winter of 1890 he came to Wallace, and since that time he has been identified with the mining interests of this district. He did contract work on prospects and worked in the different large properties and in 1896 Mr. Flink located the famous Sixteen to One mine. He bonded to Finch & Campbell, and they paid several payments and then let it come back on account of litigation regarding surface rights. Mr. Flink still owns three-eighths' interest in the property, which is considered worth more than a million. He is also interested in the O. K. and owns heavily in the Nine Mile Company. He is manager of one and holds official positions in the others. Mr. Flink has considerable other mining property and also owns considerable residence property in Wallace, which brings in a steady revenue, and also has some fine property in Seattle. He has two brothers and one sister,—Johan, Peter and Emily. Mr. Flink is a member of the I. O. O. F., of the Elks, and of the Scandinavian Brotherhood. He is a Republican and frequently is delegate.

On September 9, 1900, in Douglas county, Minnesota, Mr. Flink married Miss Anna H., daughter of Hans and Ingeborg Linn, natives of Norway and Sweden, respectively. The father died a few days after getting to this country, and the mother lives now in Minnesota. Mrs. Flink is a native of Sweden and has four brothers and two sisters,—Michael H., Ole H., Andrew H., Samuel H., Ingeborg Holm and Martha H.

ALLY McGILLIVRAY. The real worth, enterprise and business ability of the subject of this article have found fitting expression in his excellent achievements and various business ventures in and adjacent to Kingston. He does general farming, operates in the mining realm quite extensively, takes and executes large logging contracts; handles hundreds of thousands of feet of mining timbers in addition to an extensive pole business. In this latter industry Mr. McGillivray is one of the leading men of the Northwest. He drives his products down the tributary of the Coeur d'Alene river and distributes these poles to all sections of the United States, shipping as far as New York. In this alone he handled over one hundred carloads last year.

Ally McGillivray was born in Michigan on June 5, 1869, the son of Duncan D. and Emma (Uden) McGillivray, natives of Scotland and Canada, respectively. The father came from Scotland to Canada, then to the United States in the early 'sixties, settling in Michigan, where he died in 1880. The mother still lives at Nuir, Michigan. Our subject was raised in Michigan, and there received a very thorough education in the high school, graduating from the latter in 1887; then he came to Livingston, Montana, whence he soon made his way to Cataldo, and there and in Kingston he has continued in the industries as outlined above. Recently Mr. McGillivray bought forty acres of good tillable land, where he erected his present residence. He has two brothers,—George H. and Duncan D.; and four sisters,—Edith Toan, Jessie Jones, Ada and Minnie, teachers in Michigan.

On December 25, 1901, at Kingston, Mr. McGillivray married Miss Ina P., daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (Littlefield) Smith. One child has been born to bless this union,—Edna B.

FRANK M. EDMONSON is a well known and stirring business man in Orofino, being manager and one of the proprietors of the Clearwater livery and feed stable in Orofino, which is handled by Demarest & Edmonson.

Frank M. Edmonson was born in Newaygo county, Michigan, on November 22, 1870, being the son of William P. and Adelia (Fairbanks) Edmonson, natives of New Jersey and Michigan, respectively. The father's ancestors also were natives of New Jersey, and he served in the Seventh Michigan for four years, being in thirteen battles. He was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness and died at Leland on October 10, 1894, aged fifty-six. The mother lives with our subject, and her father and mother were natives of

New York and Vermont, respectively. Frank was raised in Michigan until nine and then came with his parents to Idaho. He was educated in the district schools in Michigan and in the Potlatch country. He remained with his parents until twenty-two and after his father's death he engaged in a meat market in Leland for two years. At the opening of the reservation Mr. Edmonson went to Central ridge and took a place, which he later sold. Then he took another claim, across the river from Orofino. In August, 1902, in partnership with Mr. Demarest, he bought his present business, including stock, stables and some rigs. The barn will accommodate nearly forty transients, and they own fifty head of stock. About twenty-five head of saddle animals have been in constant use and they also have some first class rigs, and all that care, diligence and pains can do for the comfort and accommodation of their patrons is done, which gives the barn a fine reputation.

Mr. Edmonson has one brother and three sisters,—George, who owns a farm adjoining his; Mary E., a widow, with our subject; Grace and Esther, both single and with our subject. They are school teachers, and Esther will graduate from the state normal at the next term. Mr. Edmonson has never seen fit to leave the ranks of the bachelors, although many are falling around him, and he, too, is a first class man who enjoys the confidence and good will of all. Politically he is a Democrat and able to uphold intelligently the principles of his party.

JOHN H. HANSEN. No more patriotic and true American citizens come to the shores of the United States than the descendants of the early discoverers of this continent. Among this class of sturdy men and noble women we are constrained to mention the subject of this article, who is one of the substantial and leading business men in Wallace, where for more than a decade he has followed successfully his occupation of contractor and builder, doing a good business and erecting some of the best buildings in the city, among which may be mentioned the Pacific hotel, the Coeur d'Alene Hardware Company, Finch & Campbell's office and many others, besides completing much work in the various mines adjacent to this centre.

John H. Hansen was born in Denmark on September 23, 1864, being the son of Hans and Caroline (Henriksen) Hansen, natives of Denmark and dying in 1900 and 1876, respectively. The father was a contractor and builder, and our subject learned the business thoroughly from him. He was also educated in his native land, and in 1882 he came to the United States. He wrought first in Watertown, South Dakota, then went to Minnesota, and to Spokane, whence he came to Wallace in 1890. He has made a fine reputation for himself, not only as a first class builder, but also as a man of integrity and stability, having demonstrated his intrinsic worth, and he stands well in the community. Mr. Hansen has no relatives in the United States, but he has brothers and sisters in Denmark.

On September 1, 1895, Mr. Hansen married Miss Christina Christensen, whose parents live in Denmark. The wedding occurred in Wallace, and they have two children,—John H., born September 1, 1896; Chester A., born January 23, 1898. Mrs. Hansen has one brother,—Rasmus, dwelling near Spokane. Mr. Hansen is a member of the A. O. U. W., Mullan Camp, No. 22. He is an active and progressive member of the board of trade, and in political matters he is allied with the Democratic party. Mr. Hansen is president of the North Star Mining Company, which has a fine gold and copper property on the St. Joseph river. He also has interest in the several mines adjacent to Wallace and is vice-president of the Pretoria Mining Company.

GUS PETERSON is a member of the firm of Furst & Peterson, who conduct the Colorado saloon in Gem. He was born in Sweden on September 22, 1859, the son of Peter Person and Ingre (Erickson) Peterson, natives also of Sweden, where they live now. Our subject was educated in the schools of his place and remained in his native country until 1881, when he came to Chicago. He was soon employed in Pullman, when there were but fifteen houses there. Later he did railroad contract work, and then went to Fort Collins, Colorado, where he worked in the stone quarry and later was boss of the quarry for two years. In 1886 he went to the state of Sonora, Mexico, where he was engaged in mining. Then he worked in the Gold Hill mines, and mining from that time until 1900 was his constant occupation. He made a trip to the old country in 1889, and in 1892 Mr. Peterson came into the Coeur d'Alene country and engaged with the Tiger, where he remained in efficient labor until 1899. He was a year with the Frisco people, and then came the time of starting his present business. Mr. Peterson has one brother, John N., and four sisters,—Blenda, Matilda Anderson, Ida and Fea Swanson.

At Helena, Montana, on April 10, 1891, Mr. Peterson married Miss Lena Roelson, whose parents dwell in the Black Hills, where she was born. Her sister is the wife of Mr. Peterson's partner. Mrs. Peterson has three brothers and one sister,—Jacob, Ole, Rudolph and Tena Christianson. Mr. Peterson is a member of the K. P., of the Scandinavian Brotherhood, and is a popular man in the district. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Peterson,—Myrtle, aged eleven; Clara, deceased; Pearl, aged seven. Mr. Peterson is interested in a number of promising and valuable mining properties.

CHARLES E. BENNETT. Of one it is said "Let his works praise him in the gates." Surely no greater praise could be bestowed upon the subject of this sketch than to properly represent the excellent work he has done in his profession. He is one of the most skilled machinists and mechanical engineers in the northwest, and has wrought in the interests of some of the largest companies, installing intricate machinery in difficult positions and accomplishing some of the most difficult operations in the line of mechanical engineering and in the art of machinist.

Charles E. Bennett was born in Maine on October 16, 1865, the son of Otis G. and Hannah (Bursley) Bennett, natives also of Maine. The paternal great-grandfather of our subject came from England to Gloucester, Massachusetts, was a sea faring man and fought for the independence of the colonies. The father of our subject opened the noted slate quarries of Monson, Maine, in 1873. He died in March, 1892, at Tacoma, Washington. The mother of our subject comes from a prominent and old New England family, some of the ancestors arriving on these shores in the Mayflower. She died in May, 1876, in Maine. Our subject was raised in Maine and received a good high school course, and before that was completed he took up the problem of learning the machinist's art, carrying the two at the same time. Later he went to Cambridgeport, Massachusetts, where he finished his trade and returned to Maine. A year later he was in Pennsylvania, then spent a time in Maine, and soon was in Montana. He was master mechanic in the Empire mine, then came to Seattle, and traveled some and later went to the Spotted Horse mine in Montana. Later he was machinist in Dewey Flat and at the Big Ox mine, then returned to the Old Empire. Five years were spent in Helena in charge of the electric plant, and in 1898 he came to the Frisco. Fifteen months here and he went to Alaska for the Moore Investment Company. From there he returned to the Frisco, and here he has been since. In all these places Mr. Bennett was handling large and intricate propositions, which required a master mind and a skilled and experienced hand, with talent to direct it all. He has been eminently successful in all the lines which he has pursued, and in the undertakings of his hands, and is also one of the popular men of the district. He is the centre of a large circle of admiring friends and is worthy of the esteem and confidence placed in him. Mr. Bennett has two brothers, Charles S. and Frank B.

On June 6, 1898, Mr. Bennett married Miss Thana A., daughter of William and Frances (Bolin) Thompson, natives of California. The father died in 1880, and the mother in 1895. She was among the very first white children born in Dutch Flat, California. This wedding occurred in Helena, Montana. Mrs. Bennett has one half-sister,—Mrs. James Conway. Mr. Bennett is a Republican and a man of square opinions on the issues of the day.

HARRY M. RICHARDSON. The owner and proprietor of a first class drug store in Greer, and a well known and representative citizen of this commonwealth, it is fitting that we accord to the subject of this article a consideration in the history of his county.

Harry M. Richardson was born in Cedar county, Missouri, on March 8, 1870, being the son of Edward and Milinda (Codrick) Richardson, natives of Tennessee and Illinois, respectively. The father was a physician and lives in Lyons, Kansas. He is a prominent man there and in 1890 ran for governor on the Democratic ticket, and although he ran far ahead of his ticket, he was defeated by a small majority. The mother of our subject was descended from German and English parents and is still living. Harry M. was reared in Emporia, Kansas, and received a good education, finishing in the high school. After that he spent two years in his father's drug store, and then he came to Colfax, where he clerked for Dr. Buzzings for nearly two years. Following this period Mr. Richardson came to the vicinity of Nezperce and took an eighty-acre homestead. After proving up on this he sold it and came to Greer, where he bought the store and stock of Dr. Moody, and since that time he has been identified with the business population of this place. He is a member of the school board and labors faithfully for the betterment of educational facilities. Mr. Richardson is a member of the W. of W. and the Circle, while he and his wife belong to the Baptist church.

In January, 1900, Mr. Richardson married Miss Bertha, daughter of John B. and Ellen (Hayden) Heister. The wedding occurred in Pullman, Washington. Mrs. Richardson was born in Iowa in 1871, and she has the following brothers and sisters: Fritz, a cigar maker in Walla Walla; Eugene, in the United States army in the Philippines; Dell, wife of Charles Elliott, in Kendrick; Edith, wife of John Dunwoody, at Colfax; Lillie, wife of Louis Siebert, in Marysville, Kansas. Mr. Richardson has three sisters,—Sarah, wife of Judge Jarvis R. Crawford, of Nezperce; Alma, wife of Edwin Barber, near Nezperce; Edna, wife of Joseph Donaldson, near Nezperce. Mr. Richardson and his estimable wife have become the parents of three children.—Monnie, Myra Fern and Mildred J. In 1902 Mr. Richardson was elected justice of the peace, and he is an efficient incumbent.

BARNET FORD. The popular and efficient marshal of Mullan is named at the head of this article, and the esteem in which he is held is evidenced by the fact that he is now serving his third term in this capacity. He is a man of reliability and excellent standing and is conscientious in the discharge of his duties in his official capacity.

Barnet Ford was born in Tennessee on December 2, 1861, the son of Isaac and Harriet (Cabbage) Ford, natives of Tennessee. The family dwelt near the state line of Virginia for many years. The paternal grandfather of our subject was in the war of 1812 and the father of that patriot came from Ireland. The father of Barnet was too old to enlist in the Civil war, but two of his sons fought for the Union. The father gave his life for the cause, too, as while he was piloting a party through the mountains to the Union army, where they intended to enlist, he was assassinated. The mother of our subject came from German ancestry. Barnet was reared in his native place and when eighteen years old came to California and there farmed for nine years. Then he did railroad contract work in Washington, and in 1894 he came to the Cœur d'Alene country and worked in the mines until the time of the labor troubles, when, as he was a member of the Miner's Union, he was obliged to retire from that employment, but was soon appointed night watchman in Mullan and then elected marshal, where we find him at the present time. Mr. Ford has three brothers and two sisters,—Wilson, Thomas, Archie, Mrs. Isaac Huston, Mrs. John Gregory.

On November 24, 1900, Mr. Ford married Mrs. Hannah Broderick, daughter of Dennis and Sarah Reardon, natives of the Emerald Isle. Mr. Reardon has since passed away, but his widow, a lady now of eighty years, is living with Mrs. Ford. She is remarkably well preserved for one over four score years old and is enjoying the things of life and the hearty good will and esteem of all. No children have been born to this marriage, but Mrs. Ford has four bright children by her first husband. They are named as follows,—John, aged fourteen, Mamie, aged twelve, Sadie, aged ten, Frances, aged eight. Mr. Ford is a member of the I. O. O. F.

ISRAEL ST. GERMAIN, well known throughout the entire Cœur d'Alene country as a pioneer and an industrious developer of the resources of the country, is now handling a thriving mercantile business at Osburn. He was born in Montreal, Canada, on March 11, 1852, the son of Antoine and Harriett (Onimett) St. Germain, natives of Montreal. The father died in Illinois August 9, 1883, aged sixty-nine, and the mother lives there, aged seventy-seven. The family came to Illinois when our subject was an infant and in Kankakee he was educated. The father operated a tannery in Canada and in Kankakee, which a son is now handling. When Israel was twenty-two the father bought him a farm and he operated it fifteen years, then sold and went to Kansas, Clay county, where he stayed a year and left because of the cyclones. Then he came to Portland, and later was in Vancouver, where he operated a hotel. Next he went to Spokane and afterward to the Cœur d'Alene country. He railroaded here and started a store half way between Osburn and Wallace, when the only settlers were Osburn in the town of Osburn and some prospectors in a shack in Wallace. Mr. St. Germain bought land three miles below Osburn and for ten years raised vegetables and packed to the mines. He did also considerable contract work and put the first mules into the mines. Later he sold out and went to Black Bear and did ore hauling by contract. Then he came to Osburn and started a mercantile establishment, which he is operating. Mrs. St. Germain gives her attention largely to the operation of the store, while her husband is away attending to contract work. He took out ten thousand fence posts for the O. R. & N. last winter and does much contracting. Mr. St. Germain has a property adjoining the Jersey and also several other valuable properties. He also owns real estate in Osburn. Mr. St. Germain has the following brothers and sisters: Louis, Roman, Dennis, Adolphe, Hypolite, Matilda Carrow, Mary Kerrick.

On August 26, 1872, at Kankakee, Illinois, Mr. St. Germain married Miss Victoria M., daughter of Benoni and Melanie (Bouteiller) Maynard. The father came from Paris, where he was born, and he died January 22, 1899, aged ninety-eight. The mother was born in Arcadia, Canada, and she died in Montreal July 21, 1897. Mrs. St. Germain was born in Montreal July 5, 1854, and has the following named brothers and sisters: Peter, Jacob, David, Joel, Florence, Trudeau, Prospere Lanier, Domathilde, Remillard, Judith Maynard, Lia Bertrand. To Mr. and Mrs. St. Germain have been born four children—Rosanna, wife of George Demers, a mining man in Osburn; Walter, Victor A., Arthur H. Mr. St. Germain is independent in politics, but his wife is a Socialist. She is a member of the school board.

AXEL E. HOLMBERG. A popular and well known business man of Orofino, being a member of the firm of I. M. Anderson & Company, which does a fine business in general merchandising, the subject of this article is deserving of representation in any volume that purports to grant records of the leading men of the county.

Axel E. Holmberg was born in Sweden on March 5, 1862, being the son of Gabriel G. and Ebba L. (Elg) Holmberg, natives of Sweden, and now living in Saint Peter, Minnesota. The father came to America with his family in 1864. He filed on a homestead near Saint Peter and remained on it until 1882, when he took a position of tailoring in the State Hospital there. Our subject was reared and educated in Saint Peter, and when twenty took a position in the State Hospital as nurse, and then clerked in the store-room of the institution. Later he was salesman for Stark & Davis in Saint Peter, and also he clerked in Gibbon and Lakefield, near-by towns. Then Mr. Holmberg entered into partnership with Ole A. Anderson, as mentioned elsewhere in the volume. At present he is conducting a fine business in Orofino and is very popular and influential. He has not, as his partner, taken forward ground in political matters, but as a substantial business man and associate, he is no whit behind in general popularity. Mr. Holmberg has two brothers and two sister, Albert J., a merchant in Saint Peter; Martin A., formerly in general merchandise business in Minnesota, but now visiting his brother, the subject of this sketch; Christena, wife of Louis Oleson, in Saint Peter; Anna, wife of Peter Adolphson, a shoemaker, also in Minnesota.

At Saint Peter, on May 23, 1886, Mr. Holmberg married Miss Blenda, daughter of Lars Snygg, a native of Sweden, and now a retired officer of the army in that country. His wife was a native of Sweden and died in 1887, aged seventy-two. Mrs. Holmberg was born in Sweden on April 5, 1863. To Mr. and Mrs. Holmberg there have been born three children: Ebba, aged fifteen; Mabel, aged thirteen; Oliver, aged eleven. Mr. Holmberg is a member of the Orofino Lodge, No. 64, of the I. O. O. F., and has been treasurer of the organization since its inception here. Mr. Holmberg is a Democrat and when in Minnesota was postmaster of Kinbrae for three years. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church.

GILBERT THORKELSON is a man of enterprise and has displayed commendable energy and industry in this country and now is the possessor of some of the valuable claims of the district. He was born in Itswald, Norway, on January 7, 1846, the son of Thorkel and Louise (Gilbrunsen) Christiansen, natives of Norway, where the mother now lives. The father died when our subject was seventeen. Gilbert was trained in the public schools of his country and remained there until 1883, when he came to the United States and located in Minnesota. He worked on the farms there for two years and then went to the woods, where he spent some time logging. After that he came to St. Paul and took up bridge work and later we find him in Montana. While in that state a countryman of Mr. Thorkelson robbed him of one hundred and fifty dollars in cash and hearing that the thief was in the Coeur d'Alene country he came hither in search of him. So good were the opportunities here and such resources seemed to invite him that he remained and has since that date allied himself with the development of the country. He has some valuable claims and spends his time in developing them. He is living on the Hopeful but is interested in the Lincoln, the Bullpen and the Stockman, Aaron Noling and Louis Nelsen being his partners in these. Mr. Thorkelson has one brother and one sister,—Thomas and Dora Tonsegersen. He is still enjoying the freedom of the bachelor and is secure in the confidence and esteem of the people.

OLIVER S. ROOF is a mining man of Mullan, who has wrought with wisdom and enterprise to bring to the front the mining interests of this rich district, many of whose properties need but to be known to be made leading producers by the investment of capital. He is a man of intelligence in this line of work and is the possessor of some valuable and promising properties, such as the Black Traveler group of copper claims, six miles from Saltese, Montana; the Stillwater Fraction, the Jersey Miner and a number of other claims which need but to be brought to the front to be quickly taken up by searchers after wealth producers.

Oliver S. Roof was born in New Jersey on July 25, 1848, the son of John and Mary (Huff) Roof, natives of New Jersey. Our subject was raised in New Jersey and attended the public schools until he was sixteen years old, when he enlisted, the date being the sixteenth anniversary of his birth, in Company D, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, under Captain James Cole and Colonel Penroie. He served the last eleven months of the war and was in many severe battles, among which may be mentioned Perryville, Winchester, Fisher Hill, Cedar Creek, Gettysburg, Yorktown and others. Following the war he went to various sections and finally settled in Texas and bought cotton. Five years later he went to Michigan and visited with his brother two years, and in 1881 he came to Waitsburg, Washington, whence he came to Wardner in 1885. He gave his attention to mining and prospecting there for two years and then transferred his headquarters to Mullan, where we find him at the present time. Mr. Roof has been constantly interested in mining since coming here, and is well posted throughout the district. He has various interests in addition to what has been mentioned and is a substantial man and a citizen of good standing. He has the following brothers and sisters: Barnet, Mrs. Phœbe Tura, Mrs. Nettie Ayeres. Mr. Roof is a member of the A. F. and A. M. and in political alliance he is with the Republicans. Mr. Roof is enjoying the quiet pleasures of the bachelor's life, being thus far satisfied not to embark on the uncertain sea of matrimony.

JAMES LYLE. Few men have had a wider and more active life in pioneering and employments incident to that life than the subject of this sketch, who now is a resident of Osburn and a leading man of the county. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, April 1, 1851, and comes of stanch Scotch ancestry, whose traits of determination and substantiality are inherited by this descendant. His parents, John and Agnes (Yeats) Lyle, were born in Lanarkshire and Renfrewshire, respectively. The father died in the parish of Eskine, Renfrewshire, Scotland, in October, 1902, aged seventy-eight. The mother lives there now. Our subject was reared principally in Renfrewshire, and was well educated. He was then apprenticed to learn the machinist trade and also shipbuilding. When nineteen, it being 1870, he came to the United States, just before his apprenticeship ended. For six months he traveled and then located in Virginia City, Nevada, and for some time worked at his trade with the Comstock people. In 1874 he went to San Francisco, then went to the south Pacific ocean and visited Australia, New Zealand, Fiji islands and Sandwich islands and finally came back. He mined in Butte county and drove nine hundred feet of tunnel and then sold the mine, which has since become very valuable. In 1881 Mr. Lyle went to the Wood river country and in 1884 came thence to Murray, only to return in a few months. He made six thousand dollars in one summer there and then went to Scotland. In January, 1886, he came to Kentuck, now Wardner, and began to build and contract, and he doubtless put up more buildings in Wardner than any other one man. Mr. Lyle owns many there now and rents them. He was also in the wholesale liquor business for eight years and was a prominent man politically, being road supervisor, justice of the peace and county commissioner, was nominated for a second term, but went to Ft. Steele at that time and did not run. There he operated a hotel and returned to this country and later was six months in Portland and now is in Osburn, whither he came from Portland. Mr. Lyle has some valuable property and located the Snowstorm. He has three brothers and two sisters,—William, John, Alexander, Annie and Jessie.

At Wardner, on November 8, 1892, Mr. Lyle married Mrs. Elizabeth J. Hamilton, the daughter of Robert and Minerva (Kneighton) Walker. The father was born in Kentucky, coming from an old and prominent American family. He died in March, 1901. He had crossed the plains in 1847. The mother was born in Missouri, crossed to Oregon in 1847, where she was married and now lives at Forest Grove. Mrs. Lyle was born in Oregon and has four brothers and one sister,—Robert, Samuel, James, William, Willissa Armentrout. Mrs. Lyle has two children by her former marriage,—Charles and Ora Wales. One child, Agnes, has been born to the present marriage. Mr. Lyle had for many years been a prominent Democrat, but is now allied with the present administration. He ran for sheriff in 1900 and was defeated by only one hundred and ninety-six.

WILLIAM H. FARRAR is a typical pioneer in every true sense of the word and is one of the strong characters, whose labors and daring deeds have been bestowed and displayed all over the west in addition to a brilliant career in the Civil war. He is a man who commands the respect of all and is secure in the confidence and esteem of the entire country.

William H. Farrar was born in Fulton, Callaway county, Missouri, on February 18, 1843, the son of Asa and Amanda (Parker) Farrar, natives of Kentucky. The father's grandfather fought for the American cause in the Revolution and that patriot's son helped whip the British again in the war of 1812. The ancestors settled in Boston among the first colonists, and the great-grandfather of our subject migrated to Virginia and his son accompanied Boone, Callaway, Howard, Montgomery and other pioneers to the wilds of Kentucky, and there he died in 1789, aged seventy-eight. The mother of our subject descended from the well known and prominent Parker family, from whom Parkersburg, Virginia, is named. Her father was Major Gabriel Parker, of the Kentucky militia that did valiant service in the war of 1812. Her mother was a Lightel, which family were prominent in the Revolution and the war of 1812. She died at Atlanta, Georgia, in 1880. Our subject was reared in Kentucky and Missouri until nineteen, and then left the junior class of Westminster College to take a position on the Gadsden survey. For about two years he was interpreter and then went to mining in California. In 1860 he commenced the study of medicine in San Francisco, but when the Civil war commenced he went at once to Missouri and enlisted in the Bledsoe Battery, under Price. He was aid to A. S. Johnston and Beauregard and Van Dorn and fought in the battles of Wilson Creek, Carthage, Cane Hill, Lexington, Lone Jack, Shiloh, Pea Ridge and Memphis, and was finally taken prisoner in 1862 and paroled at St. Louis. Then he returned to California and prospected and soon went to Boise basin. Next we see Mr. Farrar in Lewiston teaching, being the second teacher there. After this he was in Warren and operated the first quartz mill there. The mill was packed in by mules and one animal carried one piece, seven hundred pounds, the heaviest load known to have been carried by one animal. From this place he went to Douglas county, Oregon, did merchandising at Canyonville, taught school, farmed and bought wool. Later, in 1871, he went to Linkville, California, and while camped there the Modoc war broke out and he carried express for the government for nine months. In this occupation he had five different skirmishes with the savages, and on one occasion he had a hand-to-hand encounter with one savage. He was unarmed, but the Indian had a knife and was about to dispatch our subject, when he was shot by another express messenger. Mr. Farrar carries a mark of this encounter on one ear. While in Arizona interpreting he was wounded three times by Indian arrows. Following the Indian war, Mr. Farrar took up assaying and mill operating again, being an expert in this, and followed it in various places, and in Utah, then in Wyoming, then in Wood river and finally he came to Eagle, was in Thunder mountain two seasons, and in 1888 came to Wardner. He took charge of the Daddy in 1893 and also handled several other properties in Murray. He now has a bond in the Vortex, Hornet and Wasp, near Osburn, but his family dwells in Murray, where he owns property. Mr. Farrar has one brother, Edward, and four sisters, Emma Parsons, Idalette Kendall, Jesamine A., Ella.

In Oregon, on August 6, 1869, Mr. Farrar married Martha Perdue, a native of that state, whose parents crossed to it in 1849. He was married the second time on February 23, 1892, at Osburn, Mrs. Elizabeth Kelley, a native of Illinois, becoming his bride. By the first marriage one child was born, Cora Summers. Mrs. Farrar has the following children by her former marriage: Addie Burton, Lulu Pritchard, Mina, Samuel, Ernest. Mr. Farrar is a Democrat, but independent. He is a member of the A. F. and A. M., the Maccabees, the Red Men, the I. O. O. F. and is prominent in fraternal circles.

EDWIN M. HARTMUS, who now holds the position of night shift boss in the Hunter mine, dwells at Mullan and is a man of capabilities in his line of industry and has wrought in the Cœur d'Alene country for a number of years. He was born in Livingston, Missouri, on December 3, 1868, the son of George B. and Nellie M. Hartmus. The father was born in Virginia and now lives in Portland, having retired from active business. The mother of our subject died at Salem, Oregon, in 1892. The family came to Oregon when Edwin M. was a small boy, and there he was raised and educated, being a pupil in the Salem public schools. When sixteen he went to work on his father's farm, remaining thus engaged until the time of his majority. Then he took up mining and followed it in various places until 1898, when he came to the Cœur d'Alene country. He was engaged at Wardner first, being in the Bunker Hill mill for nearly four years. After the catastrophe of the explosion he was shift boss for a time, and it was a perilous position. Following that he came to his present position and has remained here steadily since that time. Mr. Hartmus has one brother and one sister, William E., in the office of the Evening Telegram at Portland; Mrs. Alice I. Ellis, residing at Portland.

On May 28, 1902, Mr. Hartmus married Miss Lillie M., daughter of James A. and Polly Richards, natives of England, who now dwell at Mehama, Oregon, the place where the wedding occurred. Mrs. Hartmus has two brothers, James A., John R. Mr. Hartmus is a member of the A. O. U. W. and its auxiliary, Degree of Honor.

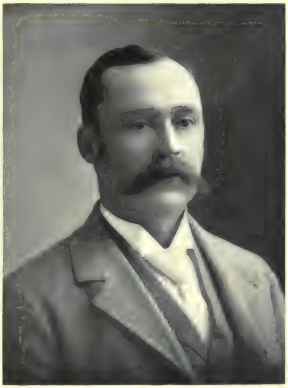
WILLIAM M. CHANDLER was born in Polk county, Oregon, on September 23, 1858, being the son of John and Elizabeth (Buff) Chandler. The father was a native of Illinois and came overland with oxen in 1849 to California and thence to Rogue river country in 1855, where he enlisted in Oregon Mounted Volunteers, under Captain Abel George, to fight the Indians. Four months at this and then he bought land in Polk county. In 1878 he came thence to Walla Walla and four years later to Whitman county. In the spring of 1897 he came to the reservation country, and now lives on an eighty which he filed on at that time. He has always been a prominent Republican, but never sought office. The mother of our subject was born in Platte county, Missouri, crossed the plains in 1852 with ox teams. She married in 1857, in Polk county, Oregon. Her father was a descendant of the Pennsylvania Dutch and his great-grandmother was one of the damsels brought over in 1600 and traded for tobacco, which unique undertaking furnished the material for Mary Johnston's popular novel, "To Have and to Hold." The maternal grandmother of our subject was a Simpson and a second cousin of General Grant and Jeff Davis. Our subject has four brothers and five sisters: James D., at Farmington, Washington; Asa H. and Clarence, in the Walla Walla valley; Perry A., in Nez Perces county; Henrietta, wife of James M. Sanders, of Orofino, Idaho; Lena, wife of Joseph A. Ownbey, of Walla Walla valley; Ida M., wife of J. B. Dickson, in Nez Perces county; Mary, wife of J. F. Dickson, also in this county; Edna, single, and at home. William was raised and educated in Polk county, and when nineteen, in 1877, came to Walla Walla. For four years he was employed in riding the range, ranching and teaching school. In 1881 he came to Sprague and in the real estate and insurance business, handling an agency for Wells, Fargo & Company, and practicing in the land office, he was employed until 1882. He was deputy county auditor later, and from 1887 to 1889 he was probate judge. Mr. Chandler also handled the Mail, a newspaper, which he afterward sold. He was assistant chief clerk of the house in the first and second sessions of the legislature in Washington after it was a state. He was clerk in the office of the commissioner of public lands in Olympia for a short time and also was deputy in the treasurer's office in Thurston county for a year. After four years in Olympia he came to Whitman and farmed near Sprague. In 1897 he came with his father and two brothers to the reservation country, and in 1900 he came to his present place, and is now conducting a real estate and insurance office in Orofino, also does a great deal of practice before the land office and Department of the Interior.

On October 16, 1883, Mr. Chandler married Miss Louisa, daughter of Edwin and Sarah (Phillips) Dane, a native of Oregon. Her parents are both dead. Her mother's parents were early pioneers to Oregon, coming in 1850. Three children have been born to this union—Edith, Edwin and Eugene. Mrs. Chandler was born in Douglas county, Oregon, on September 3, 1866. Mr. Chandler is a member of the I. O. O. F., Orofino, No. 64, and is secretary and district deputy. He is also a member of the Kamiah Encampment, and has been representative to the grand lodge for Washington and Idaho.

JOHN W. EBY. This gentleman is one of the prosperous and intelligent young farmers of the southern Shoshone country and has displayed manliness and uprightness in all his ways, while he is also characterized by industry and thrift.

John W. Eby was born in Marion county, Kansas, on May 30, 1870, being the son of David L. and Mary L. (Shreeves) Eby, natives, respectively, of Illinois and Indiana. The father served in the Civil war and the mother now lives near our subject. When John was about four the family came to Wyoming, thence to the Rogue river region, in Oregon, and about five years afterward they journeyed to Washington, where our subject received his education in the public schools. The father worked there at his trade. When John was eighteen the family came to Camas Prairie, and in 1889 the mother filed on a piece of land one and one-half miles west from Fraser, a part of which was sold to our subject, and this is his family home now. Mr. Eby has six brothers, Charles, Samuel, Fred, Jess, Dallas and Ray. He also has one sister, Etta, wife of Stephen Reed, in Washington.

On August 7, 1899, Mr. Eby married Miss Mary S., daughter of John and Mary L. (Minter) Stuart. Mrs. Eby was born in Missouri, on September 11, 1878, and she has four brothers and four sisters, named as follows: Richard, farming near by; Homer C., Archie L., Elmer O., Belle H., Clara F., Cora L., Minnie E., all at home. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Eby, Myrtle. Politically Mr. Eby is allied with the Socialists and is a clear expounder of their principles.



ELIAS E. HORST, who is one of the enthusiastic mining men of the Coeur d'Alene country, has met with good success in securing some properties of value. He was born in Pennsylvania on July 20, 1854, the son of Samuel and Katherine (Schaeffer) Horst, natives of Pennsylvania. The father died in 1859, the mother in 1882. Our subject was reared in Pennsylvania, where also he was educated and when he had reached his majority he journeyed west through Iowa; later he went to Minnesota, then to Waitsburg, Washington, where he filed on a homestead and also worked in a flour mill. In 1883 he came to Rathdrum and the next spring on to Kingston. From April to August of that year he prospected on the North Fork and the winter was spent in the flour mills of eastern Washington; then he returned to Kingston and since that time has been giving his attention continuously to mining. He is interested in some valuable properties on the North Fork and is president of the Horst Powell Copper Mining Company whose properties are also located on the North Fork; they have six hundred feet of development work done and showings that indicate some very valuable property. Mr. Horst owns one-half interest in the Pine Creek, the Eberta and Maybird; also owns some mining property with T. Brown and a one-half interest in the Big Gem, besides other mining properties. Mr. Horst has one brother, John S., and four sisters, Elizabeth Bittner, Sarah Kreider, Fanny Bucher, Katherine Bomberger. Mr. Horst is fraternally affiliated with the Eagles and the Foresters of Wallace. He is a good solid Republican and has been a delegate to the county and state conventions; his name appeared on that ticket in 1900 for representative to the state legislature, but owing to the defeat of the party he was not elected. Mr. Horst is a genial, capable and popular man and he has great prospects of being very wealthy with his mining properties.

ELIZA HELLER. The energy, tenacity and enterprise manifested in a long career of active business in the Coeur d'Alene country by the subject of this article have placed her high in the esteem of all and have given her the excellent meed of a fine holding in property.

Eliza Heller was born in the vicinity of Frankfort-on-the-Main, in Germany, on March 31, 1849, the daughter of Johannes and Katherine (Matthies) Roth, natives of Germany. The father was in the employ of the German government for many years and died in 1868, aged forty-eight. The mother still lives in Chicago, aged eighty. Our subject came to the United States in 1867, lived in New York three years and then married Frank J. Heller and came to Chicago. Mr. Heller did upholstering for a time after the big fire there and then operated a saloon. The next move was to Denver in 1876, where they lived for some years. During this time they conducted a hotel and also did business in Pueblo, Colorado. In Pueblo he operated the Turner opera house and a large restaurant. Then they came to Missoula and in the winter of 1884 they came to Eagle, the father, mother and four children, the youngest being but fifteen months old. They camped on the summit in eighteen feet of snow and drew their supplies on toboggans. They were the first family in Eagle and the little child was called the Coeur d'Alene Lilly. For three years they did hotel business in Eagle and Murray and at Eagle they lost much by boarders not being able to pay through the failure of the big Hopkins deal. They came to Wallace, it being then but a hamlet of half dozen houses and Mr. Seelig erected them a hotel building and they did well and in July, 1890, they were offered eighteen thousand dollars for it, but the fire came on the twenty-ninth and took everything but the clothes they wore. Then they moved into a cabin and Mr. Heller and his wife determined to separate, believing it best. Mrs. Heller was penniless, but she bravely took care of her little family by washing and soon got started in a boarding house and soon afterward erected the Pacific Hotel and later put up the substantial annex, where she lives now. She rents her property and is retired, having well earned the pleasure of that life from her extra industry and labors. She is highly respected by all and is a capable and true lady. Mrs. Heller has two sisters, Bertha Mangler; Dora, who is a graduate of the college at Rockford, Illinois, and a successful educator of Los Angeles, where she has taught for five years in the Marlborough school. She is now the wife of Walter S. Heinman. Four children have been born to Mrs. Heller: George, with White & Bender; Frank, a mining man; William, a musician, but blind since he was one year old; Lilly, wife of John Curran, an engineer on the Northern Pacific.

JOHN H. TILSLEY. Although the subject of this sketch is at the present time living in the city of Spokane, nevertheless he is deeply interested in the mining properties of northern Idaho and therefore he should be represented among the leading citizens and enterprising developers of this favored region.

John H. Tilsley was born in Newport, Kentucky, on January 10, 1867, being the son of Henry and Catharine (Fitch) Tilsley. When a child he came with his parents to Central City, Nebraska, and a few years later the family went to Greeley, Colorado, where John finished his education, graduating from the Greeley Business College. The father was a carpenter and bridge builder and so traveled over the country considerably and in 1887 they all came to Spokane, Washington. Our subject was soon installed as night manager of the A. D. T. Company and continued in it until the big fire in Spokane. After this dreadful event he opened a grocery in a tent on Howard street, near Sprague avenue, and later bought out the C. O. D. grocery on Riverside, which he operated in partnership with A. M. Bibbins. He continued in this until 1898, then sold out and accepted a position as deputy county treasurer, under A. L. Smith, serving two years. At the expiration of this term Mr. Tilsley took up real estate and mining and since then has given his undivided attention to this business and has made a good success in it. Mr. Tilsley has handled considerable property in the Coeur d'Alene region and is interested there now. His home is at 203 Fourth avenue and he has his offices at 408 Traders block. Mr. Tilsley has demonstrated himself to be a first-class real estate man and a first-class promoter of mining properties and the result is that good financial returns have been his to enjoy. Mr. Tilsley is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Oriental Lodge, No. 74, also of the Royal Arcanum.

On October 10, 1895, Mr. Tilsley married Miss Emily, daughter of John R. Armstrong, who is at present dwelling in Santa Monica, California.

RICHARD H. PASCOE is one of the substantial and popular men of the Coeur d'Alene district and is a skilled artisan in his line of endeavor. At the present time Mr. Pascoe is foreman of the Frisco mine at Gem and in this responsible position he has manifested those qualities which inspire confidence in the owners of the mine and respect and esteem from every man with whom he has to do and his friends are numbered by legion from every quarter.

Richard H. Pascoe was born in Cornwall, England, on April 17, 1862, the son of Edward and Emily (Harvey) Pascoe, also natives of Cornwall, where they now live. The father is now retired and was one of the expert mining engineers whose services were sought after by the leading mine owners of Europe. His ancestors were Cornish miners for generations back. The mother's people were also miners and her brother, Phillip, is foreman of the famous Batalic mine which extends far under the sea. Our subject was reared and educated in Wales and Scotland principally and when fifteen went to practical work in the mines in Wales. In 1883 he came to the United States and first operated in the Pennsylvania coal mines. The next place was Leadville, Colorado, then in Utah, California and so forth he operated. He landed in the Golden state in 1891 and was foreman of the Eureka Tellurium mine and also was in several other properties. He was foreman in the Malvina for two and one-half years, then came to British Columbia contracting in the War Eagle, the Center Star and was in Rossland. Three years were spent there and in November, 1902, he came to the Frisco, accepting the position which he now occupies. Mr. Pascoe has one brother, Arthur, a miner in the Frisco.

At Butte, Montana, in 1889, Mr. Pascoe married Miss Edith, daughter of Richard and Mary Hales, natives of England and now deceased. Three children have been born to this happy marriage: Ina and Katie, two bright and winsome girls, and Edward, the heir. Mr. Pascoe is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and is an enthusiastic adherent of the order. He is a Republican but never seeks preferment in political matters.

JOHN C. FURST is a member of the firm of Furst & Peterson, who do a general saloon business in Gem. He was born in Norway, October 23, 1857, the son of Christopher and Anna (Johnson) Furst, natives of Norway. The father died when John was seven and the mother died in September, 1902. Our subject was educated and reared until 1873 in his native country and then came to the United States, reaching Denver, Colorado, on June 30, 1876. The next year he was employed as office boy in the Colorado Smelting Company's office at Blackhawk, remaining until 1879. He joined the first rush to Leadville and mined there until 1882, when he made his way to Silver City, New Mexico, upon the excitement of Burro mountain. In 1883 he went to California, staging ninety miles through Arizona from Lordsburg, New Mexico. Upon his return, his company of five were attacked by three hundred Apaches. Three were killed; he was wounded in the leg and with one other escaped in the brush. The Indians rushed on and left the mule team plodding on in the road. The same day they killed Dr. McComas and wife and stole their boy. After the rush, our subject came out of the brush and he and his partner caught up with the team and rode into Lordsburg. This occurred near the Gila river. He soon went thence to Benson, Arizona, where he was foreman of the furnaces for the Benson Smelting Company. Getting poisoned by lead, he left there in 1884 and spent some time in San Francisco, whence he came to Murray, stayed over night and came to Garrison, Montana, walking, as there was no railroad. Thence he went to Anaconda, also afoot, and three months later went to Arizona and was employed by the Nogales Mining and Smelting Company as furnace foreman. In 1885 we see Mr. Furst in Leadville, Denver, Pueblo, in which last place he assisted to construct the Philadelphia smelting works. On April 22, 1887, he took part in the rush to Oklahoma and later abandoned it, then went to old Mexico and later was back in Arizona in tha Copper Queen. Again he returned to Colorado and worked in the Ghallager mine and in 1889, after a long and serious illness, went to Pony, Montana. He mined there and in Granite, then went to Helena, where he was married and six months later went to Elkhorn, thence to Castle mountain and in 1892 we find him in Burke. He operated the pump in the Tiger until February, 1893, then came to Gem and erected a two-story building and in company with Gus Peterson has conducted the business since. He also has a fine two-story business building in Wallace, and other property. Mr. Furst has three brothers and one sister: Christopher, Ole, John, Annie.

At Helena, Montana, in 1890, Mr. Furst married Ingoborg, daughter of Ole and Mary Roulson, natives of Norway. The parents live in Lead City, South Dakota, retired. Mrs. Furst is a native of Norway and has three brothers and two sisters: Jacob, Rudolph, Ole, Christena Christenson, Lena Peterson. Three children have been born to this union: Edward, aged twelve; Charles A., aged ten; Mabel O., aged eight. Mr. Furst is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the encampment. He always takes an active and prominent part in the affairs of the I. O. O. F. since he first joined in Wallace in 1893. He is a Republican.

Mr. Furst is president of the Great Eastern mines and the property is one of the promising ones of the district. He also is interested in many others, especially the Rockford group which joins the Bunker Hill on the east.

RALPH R. JAMESON, who is at present holding the important position of assayer for the Hunter mine, is a native of Idaho, being born April 1, 1877, in Latah county, near Garfield, Washington. His parents are Lorenzo D. and Lucinda (Ray) Jameson, who dwell in Moscow at this time. The father is a native of Missouri and his father was born in Kentucky. Lorenzo D. Jameson came across the plains in 1877 with mule teams and located in Latah county, and has been a resident of that place since. The mother of our subject was born in Arkansas. Ralph R. was educated in the district schools as regards his primary training and then attended the graded schools and finally completed a course in the State University at Moscow, graduating in 1900. Immediately upon receiving his degree he went to Isabella, Tennessee, and accepted a position with the Ducktown Copper, Sulphur and Iron Company as assistant chemist. He remained in that capacity for some time, and on August 28, 1900, he accepted his present position, and has continued here since that time.

ANDERSON W. NUCKOLS, familiarly known as Judge Nuckols, is one of the best known old timers of the Cœur d'Alene country and is entitled to representation in any work that has to do with the leading men of the district. He was born in Kentucky, January 15, 1834, the son of Milo C. and Louisa (Shortridge) Nuckols, natives of Kentucky. The father was born in 1806 and died in Texas in 1882. He was descended from a prominent Virginia family and was a successful man. The mother was born in 1811 and now lives in Texas. Our subject came to Missouri with the family when young and there was reared and educated. When fourteen he engaged as salesman and continued until he was twenty-five. He came to California then, mined and followed merchandising for eight years. Next we see him in the Fraser river region, in 1862, packing and selling goods. He returned to San Francisco and came on to Montana and mined, then was bookkeeper for the C. P. when building. He was clerk of court in Elko, Nevada, after which he did mining in various sections and was accountant for several large firms. In the fall of 1888 he came to his present location near Osburn and took a squatter's right and has since proved up. He has devoted himself to producing the fruits of the field for the mining country and has done well. Mr. Nuckols is school director and justice of the peace and has always shown marked uprightness and efficiency. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and has been for forty-five years. He has attained to the fourteenth degree, Scottish Rite. Mr. Nuckols has four brothers, William L., Milo C., Jr.; George W., Samuel.

On November 19, 1891, Mr. Nuckols married Emma Mouza at Osburn. She was born in Texas, January 22, 1859. Her father was a native of Louisiana, and he was killed in a battle of the Civil war. Mrs. Nuckols has one sister, Sarah Parish. Mr. Nuckols is a Democrat, and has been for years, but is always in voting on the side of the issue which is, in his judgment, for the best of the country.

CHARLES L. EBY. The enterprising young man, of whom we have now the privilege of speaking, is one of the active workers in the lines of improvement in southern Shoshone county and dwells on his farm, about four miles west from Fraser, where he pays especial attention to raising vegetables and hogs. In addition to this labor Mr. Eby owns a one-half interest in the only threshing outfit on the Weippe, Mr. Thurman being his partner.

Charles L. Eby was born in Marion county, Kansas, in March, 1877, being the son of David L. and Mary L. (Shreeves) Eby. When our subject was seven the family came to the Yakima country, and for ten years raised horses, the father also doing carpenter work. Charles was there educated in the public schools and in 1887 came with the balance of the family to Camas Prairie. One year later they came to the Weippe region and our subject secured his present place. He has sold portions of the farm and retains about sixty acres, which, as said before, is devoted largely to vegetables. He is one of the prosperous men of his section and is the recipient of the esteem and confidence of all. Politically, Mr. Eby is allied with the Republicans and is able to give a reason for his politics.

On July 25, 1892, Mr. Eby married Miss Cordelia, daughter of William and Christena (Stump) Knepper, natives of Indiana. The father died on November 3, 1895, and the mother is now the wife of Ed Thurman. Mrs. Eby has three brothers and one sister, Samuel W., John, Jesse W., Luella, wife of William Morgan, in Adams county, Washington.

When our subject's father left Yakima he had one hundred and thirty head of fine horses, but they lost about two-thirds of them. Mr. David L. Eby was in the Civil war.

Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Eby—Ella U., Ethel A., Jesse L. and Charles Arnold.

HENRY BILLBERG, of the firm of Billberg & Thennis, who are owners and operators of the Palace saloon, is well known in Mullan, and has been and is still interested in various mining properties. He was born in Sweden on January 22, 1857, the son of Oloff and Christine (Nystrom) Billberg, natives of Sweden, and died in May, 1902, and in 1805, respectively. Our subject came to the United States in the early eighties and located in Murray county, Minnesota, on July 4, 1882. Two months were spent on a farm and then he logged in Minnesota and Wisconsin until the spring of 1890, when he came to Montana and there was engaged for three years, being with the Big Blackfoot Milling Company. Then he was in Anaconda and thence he came to Mullan and took up his present business. He has two brothers and one sister, Peter, John, Christine Wilson.

In 1899 Mr. Billberg married Miss Delia McGraw, whose parents are deceased. She was born in Ireland and came to this country when a child. One child, Oliver E., has been born to this union. Mr. Billberg is a member of the Foresters of America, of the Red Men, of the Eagles and of the Scandinavian Brotherhood. He is a Democrat, and in 1896 was a delegate to the state convention. Mrs. Billberg is a member of the Catholic church, while her husband is an adherent of the Lutheran church. Mr. Billberg is interested in the Snowstorm mining property and the Missoula Copper Mining Company and also in several other properties, and is active in this line and labors for the advancement and development of the country.

CLINTON E. PERKINS is one of the leading, most aggressive and enterprising men of southern Shoshone county, being possessed of excellent ability and executive force, while his wisdom and thrift are apparent in all of his ways. We append, with pleasure, an epitome of his career.

Clinton E. Perkins was born in McHenry county, Illinois, on November 27, 1862, being the son of Edward and Jeanette (Atwell) Perkins, natives of Vermont, and now dwelling in Nebraska. The paternal ancestors came from Scotland and the maternal ancestors dwelt in Vermont for seven generations, many of them being in the war of 1812. Our subject was reared in Illinois until he was fifteen and also there secured his education. At the age mentioned he started in life for himself, and soon we see him in South Dakota, whence he traveled to Minnesota, Wisconsin and Nebraska, employed variously. In the latter state, however, he took a pre-emption and later sold, coming, in 1888, to Washington. A few months were spent in that state and Mr. Perkins made his way to his present place, two miles northwest from Fraser, taking a homestead. To this he has added until he now has a farm of four hundred acres, consisting of both timber, grain and hay land. Mr. Perkins devotes considerable attention to raising stock and also to producing vegetables for the markets. Mr. Perkins has one brother and three sisters, Daniel, a farmer in Nebraska; Addie, wife of Fred Keltz, a farmer in Nebraska; Josie, wife of Charles Woodworth, a farmer in Illinois; Lois, wife of Elmer Adams, a Nebraska farmer. Fraternally, our subject is allied with the K. of P at Kendrick and in politics he is a Republican.

In December, 1887, Mr. Perkins married Miss Margaret, daughter of George Barrow, mentioned in this volume. She was born in Iowa in August, 1869, and died October 16, 1895, being the mother of three children, Leon, Leslie and Lloyd. On January 9, 1897. Mr. Perkins contracted a second marriage, Rhoda A. Wilson becoming his bride at that time. Her father, William P. Wilson, is mentioned elsewhere in this volume, as also are her brothers and sisters. To this union there have been born two children, Holland and Lois. Mrs. Perkins is a member of the Christian church.

FLOYD M. PRICHARD is one of the substantial and industrious men of Osburn, whose labors have since the early days of Eagle been bestowed wisely here in the development of the Cœur d'Alene country, and who is now owner and operator of a saw mill and interested in several mining properties of great value. He was born in Iowa, March 17, 1859, the son of John R. and Isabella J. (Fannon) Prichard. His mother died in 1874 and he lost track of the balance of the family. He was raised and educated by an uncle in Decorah, and when not in school was busied in his uncle's store. When eighteen he went to work for himself, and later went to Sioux Falls, South Dakota. After this he was in the famous Black Hills, and three years later went thence to Miles City, Montana, and was there and in various adjacent camps and in Livingston until 1884, when he pulled a toboggan over the Evolution trail into Eagle. This was in February, and he and Doc Phelps, now deceased, started the Beef camp, where they sold meals and whisky and donated beds, the floor and pine boughs, to the weary prospector and did well. In the spring they split up and Doc Phelps took the Jackass trail out and our subject went to prospecting, but had poor success, then came to Canyon creek and took a claim adjoining the Frisco. He sold his interest later for a small sum and it is now very valuable. Since then he has devoted himself to prospecting and contract work in the mines and saw milling and is now continuing the same. He is interested with Doc Farrar in the Hornet and Wasp properties and has something valuable. Mr. Prichard has one brother, Henry.

In February, 1892, in Osburn, Mr. Prichard married Miss Lulu, daughter of Harrison and Elizabeth (Slayton) Sisk. Mrs. Prichard was born January 14, 1876, in Illinois. To this marriage there have been born two girls, Ethel B., aged nine, and Annie L., aged six. Mr. Prichard is a Republican and a strong supporter of the present administration.

AUGUST CARLSON is one of the good, substantial citizens of Wallace, whose labors have been rewarded as honest industry and sagacity should be, with prosperity in business, and he is now handling a fine patronage. He was born in Sweden on May 29, 1868, the son of Carl and Stena (Benson) Palson, natives of the same country, where they are now dwelling, prominent and well-to-do people. Our subject was well educated and worked on the father's farm and in his brother's grocery. In 1889 he came to the United States and settled in Sioux Falls, Dakota. Later we see him in Utah, then in Missoula, where he did saw mill work off and on for five years. In 1896 he came to Wallace and opened a saloon on Sixth street. Shortly he closed this and went to Rossland and operated a hotel. Returning to Wallace, he opened a boarding house in Mullan, and then the next year, with his brother-in-law, bought the Western House and business. Afterward he sold this property and bought the adjoining property and started a saloon in a building he erected. He leased the Western Hotel, and is now operating it. In July, 1901, Mr. Carlson leased the Albemarle lodging house, known as the White House, and is handling that with his hotel. He is doing a fine business and is also interested heavily in mines. He owns stock in the Nine Mile and other Stevens Peak properties and has interests in several other camps. Mr. Carlson has four brothers, John, Swan, Peter and Andover, and one sister, Hannah.

At Rossland, on December 27, 1898, Mr. Carlson married Miss Celia Johnson, whose parents are natives of Sweden, and live there now, being wealthy and prominent. Mrs. Carlson was born in Sweden and has two brothers and two sisters, Samuel, Emil, Augusta Anderson and one sister in Sweden. To this marriage three children have been born, Jennie, Delmer and Theodore. Mr. Carlson is a member of the I. O. O. F., of the Red Men and of the Scandinavian Brotherhood. He is independent in political matters and is a progressive and enterprising man.

PETER YOUNG is one of the intelligent and progressive citizens of the vicinity of Fraser, and has demonstrated himself to be a stanch and upright man, capable and possessed of a high sense of honor, and he has the esteem and confidence of all. It is with pleasure that we detail his career for the history of his county.

Peter Young was born in Jackson county, Illinois, on March 23, 1857, being the son of Joseph C. and Elizabeth (Pugh) Young, natives of Ohio, as were also the paternal grandsire and maternal grandmother of our subject. The other grandparents were born in Pennsylvania. Peter's father served in the Civil war, near the close. He was born in 1823 and died in Pleasant Grove, Utah, in 1880. He was a carpenter. The mother of our subject died in June, 1901, in Colville, Washington. Our subject was reared in Illinois until he was fourteen, attended school there and for four years afterward. The family came to Utah when he was fourteen and he mined and worked in saw mills. When twenty-two he went to Idaho, what is now Custer county, and mined and wrought in the saw mills for two years. Later he returned to Utah, and again came to Idaho, working in a quartz mill the last time. Then he went to Arkansas, his mother accompanying him, and there he farmed for eight years. Then he farmed in Missouri for one year, whence he came to his present place, about two and one-half miles northwest from Fraser. He owns forty acres, which he secured under homestead right, and he devotes himself to market gardening, doing a thriving business. Mr. Young has a fine piece of land and the location is a healthful one. His products are readily sold at a good price in Pierce. Mr. Young has three brothers and one sister, Leroy and Friend, both in Utah; Eugene, in California; Rachel, wife of John B. Fenn, in Colville, Washington. Politically, Mr. Young is allied with the Democrats and is a powerful expounder of his party principles and has a good reputation as a debater, being skillful in forensic oratory.

GEORGE C. BARROW. We are pleased to mention in the history of Shoshone county the genial and pleasant gentleman who is named at the head of this sketch, and who, with his faithful and good helpmeet, has journeyed on the course of life for many years, making many friends and doing a world of good in their pilgrimage.

George C. Barrow was born in Tazewell county, Illinois, on June 12, 1844, being the son of John and Sarah (Cullom) Barrow, natives of South Carolina and Ohio, respectively. The father's ancestors were of English extraction and he died on February 28, 1876, having served in the war of 1812. The mother died when our subject was fifteen months of age and he was raised by an older sister, who kept house for her father. In 1849 the family came to southern Iowa, Monroe county, where our subject was educated in the district school and grew to be nineteen years of age, when he started out for himself, taking up farm work. He remained there until 1882, and after his marriage he lived on the old homestead, and his father was with him. In 1882 Mr. Barrow came west to Nebraska, and five years later, having taken and sold a pre-emption, he came thence to Washington. He soon found land in Idaho that suited him and he filed on his present place, three miles northwest from Fraser, where the family home has been since. Mr. Barrow has devoted himself in these years to general farming and raising stock and has been an industrious and thrifty man. As the golden time of life is at hand, Mr. and Mrs. Barrow are entitled to the snug property that their united labors have secured, and it is pleasant to note the especial esteem and good will manifested to them by all. Mr. Barrow has one brother, Luther H., in Andrew county, Missouri; he also has one sister, Eliza Dorothy, in Holt county, Nebraska.

On February 7, 1864, Mr. Barrow married Miss Margaret H., daughter of Charles and Margaret (Way) Dorothy, natives of Illinois and Indiana, respectively. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Barrow were natives of Kentucky and her mother's parents were born in North Carolina. Mrs. Barrow has six brothers and three sisters, Elias, in Holt county, Nebraska; William, Enoch and Henry, in Ottumwa, Iowa; Robert, in Klickitat county, Washington; Gipson, in Fraser; Mary, wife of Luther H. Barrow, a brother of our subject; Semyra; wife of Martin Wintermote, in Holt county, Nebraska; Levina, wife of Jacob R. Dale, in Ottumwa, Iowa. William and Henry were in the Civil war, the former three years and the latter one hundred days. To our worthy couple there have been born ten children—Sarah F., wife of Fleming Smith; Mary A., Effie A., Dora E., wife of John Gaffney; Maria J., Arlie and Emmett, at home; Charles, born January 10, 1880, and died February 10, 1883; Eva A., born March 27, 1882, and died March 27, 1884; Marquist E., born August 19, 1869, and died October 26, 1894.

WILLIAM P. WILSON. An active and reliable citizen of southern Shoshone county, who has done a commendable work in upbuilding the country and securing for himself a first class holding in property—such is the subject of this article and it is with pleasure that we accord to him space in the history of his county.

William P. Wilson was born in Iowa, on March 9, 1846, being the son of John and Rhoda P. (Phinney) Wilson. William was reared in Iowa and attended district school and when twenty-one rented land near his father's. Two years later he married and continued the farming. Later he bought land in Butler county and farmed there for six years. Then Mr. Wilson was called to pass through the sad trial of the death of his wife and he returned to his father's home with his little ones. Then he took up the livery business in Cedar Falls, with three partners, continuing this for four years. He then went to LaPorte and started a livery alone. Two years later he went to Kansas and took land which he relinquished as the deal was unsuccessful. Then one winter was spent in Boise and he came thence to Fraser and filed on his present home place about September, 1899. This place is about one mile northwest from Fraser and is well improved and Mr. Wilson handles considerable stock. On August 16, 1900, Mr. Wilson opened a hotel in Greer and in July, 1901, he moved into a nice two-story building which he had erected and here he did business until October 7, 1902, when he sold the entire property and came back to his farm, where we find him now. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are devout and faithful members of the Christian church. Politically, he is a prohibitionist and has been justice of the peace and school trustee, where he rendered excellent service. Mr. Wilson married Sarah Hodges, a native of Indiana and she died leaving three children, Milton S., farming; Rhoda A. Perkins; Thomas G., farmer, all living near.

On July 8, 1882, in Cedar Falls, Iowa, Mr. Wilson married Miss Dell, daughter of Peter and Mary L. (Busick) Geren, natives of Indiana. The father went to Iowa from Indiana with ox teams when the country was sparsely settled and a few years later returned to Indiana, whence twenty years afterward he went again to Iowa, where he now lives, a retired farmer. The mother of Mrs. Wilson died in May, 1894, aged sixty-four. Mrs. Wilson has two brothers living, Joseph, a merchant in Des Moines, Iowa; Edward, a farmer in Milton, Kansas. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Ray, Ernest, Mabel, Edith, Rosie, and Lena. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are exemplary people and enjoy in generous measure the confidence and esteem of all who may have the pleasure of their acquaintance.

CHARLES H. WILLIAMS, who is well known all through the Coeur d'Alene country, is now deputy sheriff and resides at Mullan. He was born in Schuyler county, Missouri, on February 19, 1850, the son of Nathan and Lucy (Wheeler) Williams, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. The father came from Welsh ancestrage, was a farmer and mechanic and died on February 21, 1865. The mother died in Iowa on November 27, 1873. Our subject was raised in his birthplace and attended school until the bushwhackers burned all the school houses. When fourteen, he enlisted in Company G, Forty-second Missouri Infantry under captain T. S. Franklin and Colonel Forbes. His father was captain of the home guards company and resigned to accompany his son, but six months later he was taken sick and died in the hospital. Charles H. continued in the war until its close and participated in the battle of Nashville and many skirmishes, being under General Thomas in pursuit of bushwhackers much of the time. Being honorably discharged he returned home and the family then removed to Boone county, Iowa, where he remained until the Black Hills excitement, having attended school in the meantime. He was one year in the Black Hills, then returned to Iowa and remained until the spring of 1896, when he came to Coeur d'Alene country. He contracted with the Morning mine to furnish timbers for the Morning mine and continued in this industry until the Bunker Hill was blown up and then he went to Montana for a year with cattle. He returned to Mullan in 1900, and in December of that year he was appointed deputy sheriff under Angus Sutherland. This was at a time when anarchy ruled in the country and for many months he led a life of constant peril. His fearless conscientious work like that of his superior is now a matter of record. Mr. Williams has one brother and one sister, Lawson H., Mrs. Hattie Reese.

Mr. Williams is a member of the G. A. R., and the Good Templars.

In February, 1884, at Des Moines, Iowa, Mr. Williams married Miss Susan C., daughter of J. W. and Maria Alley, natives of Indiana and Iowa, in which latter place they now dwell. The father served in the Eighteenth Indiana during the entire Civil war and was wounded in the shoulder at the battle of Winchester, which wound never healed. Mrs. Williams' maternal grandfather, Mr. King, served through the war, came home sick and died soon after. Mrs. Williams was born in Iowa. Three children have been born to this marriage, Ralph E., aged seventeen; Katie C., aged thirteen; Mabel, aged ten. Mrs. Williams died March 18, 1903, and her remains were taken to her old home in Iowa for interment.

During the Tracy hunt, Mr. Williams was engaged in the same with deputy Dick Adams, who has since been killed by accident in the Bunker Hill mill. Mr. Williams is interested in the Copper King property, being director and he has also mining interests in addition to this.

WILLIAM T. HALES is known by everyone in the Coeur d'Alene country as one of the foremost men in developing the country and bringing to the front properties of value. He has been eminently successful in raising capital to develop many different properties and his energy, skill and keen discrimination both in business matters and in the art of mining and metallurgy are being rewarded by unbounded success, which is fully deserved by him.

William T. Hales was born in Ohio, on December 15, 1854, the son of Benjamin and Camillia (Chase) Hales, natives of Ohio. The father came from English ancestry who settled in the Muskingum valley in 1792, and he followed architectural work and bridge building till his death in 1893, being aged ninety. The mother died when William was small. He struck out into the world when nine, went down the river in a steamer and made his way to St. Joseph, Missouri. He fell in with good friends, went on to Omaha, Salt Lake City, Reno and finally to Virginia City and worked on the Comstock. He did a butcher business there with Mark Strouse, deceased, and in 1869 went to San Francisco, thence to Seattle, did sawmilling in old Tacoma and on February 16, 1870, shipped on the Shikely before the mast to San Francisco. Arriving in that port, he quit the sea. He was so active in the following years that we can but touch upon the salient points of his career. He did meat business in various places and finally went to Virginia City and bought the business of his old employer in 1876 and continued it till 1883. After this he operated a hotel in Modoc county. He had been interested in six placer claims which he sold for five thousand dollars, which are now worth two millions. Mr. Hales went to Big Hole basin in Montana, then to Reno, bonded and worked properties in Humboldt county, Nevada, then did a butcher business in Sprague, Washington, and finally in 1890, he came to Wardner. He took a bond on the Silver King and after two years when about ready to place it on the market the troubles of 1893 thwarted it. He leased the Sierra Nevada from 1894 to 1898, then leased a property from the Bunker Hill people and in 1899 went to Wallace. He located some claims and took a lease on the Panhandle, organized a company and sold the following spring. He organized another company and bought the Kill Buck, named from a buck being shot and uncovering ore in his fall. This was sold to the Clapps of Butte for thirty thousand. Then he bonded the Charles Dickens mine and sold it to John M. Patterson of Pittsburg. Then Mr. Hales bought a St. Joe placer property and went to Pittsburg and organized a company and sold for one hundred thousand, retaining five hundred thousand shares. This property will be operated in the spring. Next this enterprising promoter bought the Denver & Rock Island properties in February, 1902. Mr. Hales has recently been in Pittsburg financing the company and in the spring this property will also be put on the producing list. He is also interested in several other properties in the district and he is one of the leading mining men of the northwest. He has one brother, John, and two sisters, Sarah and Margaret.

At Colusa, on October 7, 1877, Mr. Hales married Miss Carrie C., daughter of Charles and Adelia (Howe) Corbiere, natives of Vermont and New York, respectively. The father lives now in Yuba, California, and his father fought in the war of 1812 and had been previously a soldier under Napoleon in France. The mother of Mrs. Hales died in California on September 6, 1896. Mrs. Hales was born in Colusa county on August 14, 1860, and she has two brothers, Charles C., William H., and two sisters, Hattie Braden and Mary Ingle. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hales, William E. and Mabel C., both students in Moscow university. Mr. Hales is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is a staunch Republican. Mrs. Hales is a member of the Methodist church and they are both very popular and capable people.

WELLINGTON LANDON. This venerable and well known gentleman is one of the typical pioneers whose skill, courage, and tenacity have piloted the way for civilization into the western parts of the country and to whom this section owes a debt of gratitude because of these worthy labors. A detailed account of his life will be a fitting part of the history of Shoshone county and we gladly append the same.

Wellington Landon was born in the vicinity of Ogdensburg, New York, being also near the border of Canada, October 26, 1830, the son of Solomon and Kate (Fields) Landon, natives of New York. The paternal grandfather of our subject was General Landon, who was killed in a battle on the banks of the St. Lawrence river in the Revolution and a fine monument was erected to his memory at the point of the battle. The maternal uncles of our subject were in the war of 1812. Mr. Landon's father died when this son was fifteen and the mother soon after. Wellington then started out for himself and was soon in Ohio and there went at the lightning rod business, which he followed successfully all over the east. His home was in Pennsylvania most of this time. He also learned locomotive engineering and followed his trade as he came west and soon we see him in Colorado mining and operating a butcher shop. Then he mined in Montana for about five years and also mined in Elk City and in the Pierce district. In 1875 he took a claim and built improvements but the Indians in the war of 1877 burned all and killed his stock. He and others were scouting and at one time were concealed while the redskins passed, then they joined General Howard's detachment in pursuit and our subject was field cook. Mr. Landon has since sold all of his claim but forty acres, much being platted for the town site. He has a hotel and feed barn now in operation and also handles a saloon business. Mr. Landon is very popular and stands well with all classes and is one of the real pioneers of the west. He has always been independent in political matters and also has never seen fit to launch a craft on the sea of matrimony. The courage and intrepidity of Mr. Landon is seen in an occurence in Colorado. Some Mexican bandits were murdering miners, and holding up the stages, while they stripped their victims and left their naked bodies lying on the ground. Nineteen were thus killed in four months and the United States had sent a guard of twenty-five armed men to attend each stage. Mr. Landon organized a squad and went after the bandits and killed one and the other escaped to Mexico where he was later shot. In this fray, Mr. Landon had a bullet put through his drinking cup and the fight was sharp and hot.

CHARLES M. JOHNSON, because of his energy, ability and skill in his endeavors, should be classed among the leading mining men in the Coeur d'Alene district and his incessant and wisely bestowed labors have done much for the development of the country and are bringing to the front some valuable properties. He is a man of substantial qualities and has won friends from every quarter and is now secure in the esteem and confidence of the people.

Charles M. Johnson was born in Ohio on May 29, 1846, the son of Alexander and Amelia (Patton) Johnson. The father was born in Ohio and lives there now, aged eighty-three. He served in the Civil war, Company I, One Hundred and Seventy-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, enlisting about the middle and serving on through till the end. He comes from a prominent Virginia family. The mother was born in Virginia and also came from a leading American family. She died in December, 1901, aged eighty-two. Our subject was reared in his native place, received his education there and remained on the farm until 1864, when he enlisted in the same company with his father and served until the conflict ended. He returned home and remained until 1868 and then went to Iowa and farmed until 1871, when he came to San Francisco and then on to Portland, where he remained until 1886. For nine of those years he followed dairying and in 1887 he came into the Coeur d'Alene country and here he has bestowed his labors since. He at once commenced to prospect and he has continued more or less at it since that time and now is associated with J. A. Kaufman, Hugh Ross, and George Champagne in several very valuable properties. They are especially active at this time in developing the Lucky Gem group which adjoins the Sixteen to One. Our subject is director of this property and is also heavily interested in the Treasure Vault group. Both of these are valuable properties and in addition to them Mr. Johnson owns interests in many others. He has two brothers, William and Sherman, and two sisters, Mary Cherrington, Emma Burnsides.

On October 14, 1896, at Wallace, Mr. Johnson married Mrs. Sarah Utely, a native of Rome, New York, and daughter of James and Angeline (Morrell) Buck, both natives of Rome also. The father was a prominent foundry man there and died September 27, 1876. The mother's ancestors were natives of that place for some generations preceding and she died October 15, 1896. Mrs. Johnson has one son by her former marriage, Herbert, now in Belgium but his home is in Wallace. She has one brother, Fred M., and three sisters, Fanny Lewis, Etta Jones, and Mary L. Mr. Johnson is independent in political matters and is a substantial man.

JOSEPH N. LARSON. The tireless energy, constant thrift and keen judgment of our subject have given him the meed of a goodly possession of property and he is considered one of the most substantial men in southern Shoshone county.

Joseph N. Larson was born in Sweden, on December 25, 1865, being the son of Lars and Mary G. (Johnson) Larson, natives of Sweden. The father died there on July 5, 1901, aged seventy-six, but the mother still lives there. Joseph was raised in his native place and educated in the public schools. When twenty, he came to the United States and for a number of years he was a very active traveler and was occupied in various labors. A short time was spent in New York, then he came to South Dakota and farmed and dug artesian wells for nine months. Then came a time in the logging camps in Wisconsin, then he visited the Sioux reservation in Dakota, then St. Paul and Minneapolis and later Butte, Montana, whence he came to Coulee City and the big bend country. He was in Spokane, off and on for three or four years, then in Moscow and surrounding towns and later mined in the Coeur d'Alenes. Mr. Larson also took a grading contract on the Northern Pacific at Sandpoint and finally in 1892, he came to his present place, four miles south from Weippe. Here he filed on a quarter and has added by purchase until he has nearly five hundred acres of valuable land. Mr. Larson devotes his energy to raising stock and doing a diversified farming. He has from fifty to one hundred cattle, a goodly number of hogs and plenty of horses. Mr. Larson is prospered in his labors because of his industry and wisdom and is developing the country in excellent manner. Mr. Larson has one sister, Mary, wife of Peter Peterson. Politically, our subject is allied with the Republicans but is no politician.

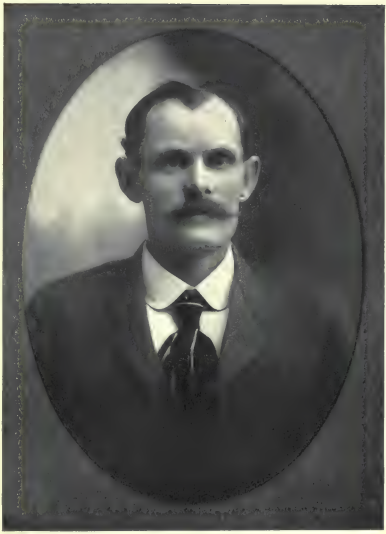
At Spokane, on May 31, 1897, Mr. Larson married Miss Hannah M., daughter of Joel Anderson, who is living in Sweden, where he has operated a stage line mail route for over thirty-three years. Mrs. Larson is a native of Sweden and was born in December, 1869. She has three brothers and three sisters, Charles and Louis in Spokane; Verner, in Sweden; Eles, married; Teckla and Christine, both single and both in Sweden. The latter is teaching school. To Mr. and Mrs. Larson there have been born three children, Eric H., Frank J., and Charles A.

THOMAS WILSON. Three miles southeast from Weippe dwells the subject of this review and he is a man whose labors have established him as one of the prosperous and substantial men of this section, while also his estimable wife has been a worthy helpmeet in the affairs of life.



Thomas Wilson was born in Iowa, on May 2, 1850, being the son of John and Rhoda A. (Phinney) Wilson, natives of Illinois. The father lives in Blackhawk county, Iowa, and will be eighty years old on December 25, 1903. He was one of the earliest pioneers in Iowa. The mother died in 1882. Our subject was reared in Blackhawk county and attended school until he was twenty and then labored with his father for three years, after which he rented land and then bought a forty. About 1885 he went to Nebraska and for eighteen month he tilled the soil there and in 1887 he made his way to Boise. After a short stay there he came to Shoshone county and bought the relinquishment of the place where he now lives and which has been the family home since that time. He does general farming, handles stock, having about twenty cattle and a good bunch of hogs. Mr. Wilson has three brothers and three sisters, Seth and John, farmers in Iowa; William P. near Fraser, Sarah, a widow in Iowa; Rhoda J., wife of Harrison Crawford; Maria, wife of Frank Carroll, all in Iowa. Politically, Mr. Wilson is a man who reserves for his own thought the questions to be decided and is not bound by the tenets of any party.

At Cedar Falls, Iowa, on September 15, 1872, Mr. Wilson married Miss Mary, daughter of Deloss and Harriet Jordan, natives of New York. The father died September, 1886, aged seventy-eight. The mother died at Cedar Falls, in 1898. They were among the very first settlers in Blackhawk county, coming in 1852. Mrs. Wilson was born in Ohio, January 10, 1851, and she has two brothers, Henry, in Cedar Falls, and Michael, in Waterloo, Iowa. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, named as follows: Joel, residing near his father; Leroy, also residing near by; Lawrence and Harvey S., both at home; Lillian, wife of William Teed also living near. Lawrence is only fifteen and has been operating on the violin for a number of years, having gained all his skill without receiving a lesson. In fact, he learned to tune the instrument with no assistance. He is deserving of especial opportunity to develop this talent. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have labored faithfully and are highly respected people. Mrs. Wilson is a great sufferer from rheumatism. They are good substantial people and are entirely worthy of the confidence and good will which is generously bestowed upon them.

HON. OLE A. ANDERSON. A more genial, gentlemanly and capable business man is not to be found in Shoshone county than the subject of this article. At present he is partner in the well known firm of I. M. Anderson & Company, general merchants of Orofino, and who handle one of the largest businesses in their line in this section. They have a fine store filled with a seven-thousand-dollar stock of well selected merchandise and their patrons are numbered from every quarter and are constantly increasing. A detailed account of the career of this gentleman will be acceptable to the readers of the county history.

Ole A. Anderson was born in Sweden, on January 31, 1862, being the son of Andrew Nelson and Christena (Person) Anderson, natives of Sweden. They died in 1874, aged fifty-eight, and 1882, aged fifty-nine, respectively. Our subject was educated in his native land and came to the broader fields of the United States in 1861, locating first at St. Peter, Minnesota, where he clerked and then rented land for three years, after which he bought land. In 1892 he went into partnership with Mr. A. E. Holmberg, one of the present firm, and did a general merchandise business in Minnesota. Three years later the firm sold out and went into the real estate business. Three years later, Mr. Anderson and Mr. Holmberg came west and in August, 1899, they started in their present business in Orofino. He is also interested in a saw mill, and in mining. Mr. Anderson has one brother and four sisters, Nels Holm, in Minnesota; Elna, wife of Andrew Nelson, in Sweden; Malena, wife of John N. Lindstrom, in Sweden; Annie, wife of Mr. Christianson, in St. Poul; Bettie, wife of Charles Smith, in Montana. Mr. Anderson is a member of the I. O. O. F., Orofino Lodge No. 64, and he is past noble grand, and a popular associate in the lodge. He is also a member of the M. W. A., Orofino Lodge No. 7810, and is past venerable consul.

On July 19, 1890, in Minnesota, Mr. Anderson married Miss Ingred M., daughter of Solomon Johnson and Christina Solomonson, natives of Sweden. The father is a business man in Minnesota and one of the heavy property owners in his section. The mother died in Minnesota in 1892. Mrs. Anderson was born in Sweden on October 10, 1866. She has four brothers, August Solomonson, proprietor and editor of a newspaper in Twin Valley, Minnesota; Carl, preacher in the Lutheran church in Longford, South Dakota; Herman, a commercial traveler in Hawley, Minnesota; Peter, a traveling man in Minnesota. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, Hulda J. C., and Arthur W. Our subject and his estimable wife are faithful members of the Methodist church.

HON. OLE A. ANDERSON.

Mr. Anderson is a true and tried Republican and a man of intelligence in the matters pertaining to the grave issues of the day in government and commercial relations. At the last election his name appeared on the Republican ticket for representative of his county in the state legislature and with an overwhelming majority, he was shown the feeling of the people regarding both himself personally and his ability. He went far ahead of his ticket and his majority was five hundred and seventy-two. This is a signal victory and even a conservative estimate of the matter would decide that Mr. Anderson is entirely worthy of it all, being a man of integrity, keenness, capability and executive force.

E. ALBERT MASSING, of the firm of Anderson & Massing, is well known in Mullan where he is in business, handling a saloon in connection with his partner, they being proprietors of the same. He was born in Sweden on October 8, 1869, the son of Errick and Hannah (Larson) Massing, natives of Sweden, where the father died when our subject was two years old and the mother still lives. Albert was educated and learned the art of mining in his native land and then came to the United States in 1894. He mined in Michigan until 1897 and then came to Mullan where he has been since. He was a miner in the Morning until the spring of 1900, when he entered partnership with Mr. Anderson and they have been in business here since. They are interested in several promising mining properties and our subject is secretary of the Iron Crown company. He also has stock in several others. He is a member of the Redmen, of the Scandinavian Brotherhood, and of the Miners Union. Mr. Massing has one brother in the United States, Bengt, and one in Sweden, Carl E. He has two sisters in this country, Mrs. Johanna Freedstrand, and Mrs. Matilda Oleson and one sister in Sweden, Maria.

In Mullan, in the fall of 1897, Mr. Massing married Miss Hilda Love, who came to the United States with her parents when she was an infant. She has one brother, John, and one sister, Mrs. Annie Larson. Two children have been born to this couple, Edith and Elmer, aged four and two respectively.

FRANCIS MARION ROSE is the efficient deputy sheriff and jailer of Shoshone county at the present time and for a number of years he has filled this position with general satisfaction and has manifested a reliability that has commended him to all. He was born in Carter county, Kentucky, on October 22, 1859, the son of Jesse and Sarah (Gibert) Rose, natives of Kentucky, also. The father died in 1864 and the mother now dwells in Oklahoma with her son, Henry. Our subject was reared in Kentucky until twelve and then went to Illinois with his mother and stepfather, John Price, a native of England. Frank M. was educated in the public schools and in the early eighties went to Rawlins, Wyoming, where he was hotel clerk for a time and in 1885 he went to the Black Hills. He was in the saloon business there until 1888, when he came to Burke and in 1890 to Wallace. In 1892 he was appointed deputy sheriff and one year later he went on the Wallace police force and was city marshal until 1898. Then came a year of prospecting and in the spring of 1899 he was appointed deputy sheriff, holding the position two terms under Sutherland and now under Manly. Mr. Rose has three brothers, Henry, William, James, living, and three, Thomas, Jesse, John and one sister Malasia, deceased.

On May 11, 1887, at Rapid City, South Dakota, Mr. Rose married Miss Josephine Anderson, a native of Sweden. The father dwells in Nebraska and the mother died when this daughter was young. Mrs. Rose has two sisters, Emily Buffman, Zelma Fruit, and one half sister, Hannah, and one half brother, Henry. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rose: Anna M. born October 16, 1895, and Carl E., born April 7, 1898. Mr. Rose is interested in several mining properties and has considerable real estate in Wallace. Mrs. Rose has a valuable farm near Lincoln, Nebraska. Mr. Rose is a member of the Elks and the I. O. O. F. Mrs. Rose is a member of the Lutheran church while Mr. Rose was brought up in the Baptist faith. He is a solid Republican and active in the campaigns. His brothers, Henry and Thomas, served three years in the Union army.

COL. STEWARD FULLER, one of the best known of the pioneers of the Coeur d'Alene country, is now a mining man of Wallace. He was a veritable leader in all forward enterprises in the days of Murray and did his share to develop the country.

Steward Fuller was born in Canadaigua, Ontario county, New York, on June 9, 1838, the son of Eliphalet and Louisa (Williams) Fuller, born on the Mohawk in 1800 and 1797, respectively. Three brothers came across in the Mayflower and from them descended the strong Fuller family, which has been prominent in commercial and professional lines since, having able representatives in the leading professions of the country. John K., a noted divine, was one of the brothers and the line from which Col. Steward comes. The family was foremost in all the American struggles and were noble patriots. The father died in Wisconsin in 1866 and the mother died in 1856. She came from Welsh ancestry direct for two hundred years. The family came to Wisconsin in 1848 and Steward was with them. There he received a liberal education and also assisted his father in the hotel business. In 1862 he enlisted in Company A, First Wisconsin Light Battery, and served much of the time in detached action, being in the force that repelled Early's attack on Washington. He was under steady fire for forty-eight hours. He was mustered out at Alexandria, Virginia, in 1865, and came to Detroit and entered commercial relations, then settled in Council Bluffs, handling a wholesale liquor business until 1871. Then he operated a hotel in Alta City, Utah, until 1878, when the property burned. Next we see Mr. Fuller in Idaho Falls in the wholesale liquor business, then in Missoula, and in the rush for Eagle City he was on the crest. He operated as a leader in many lines there until 1889 when he came to Wallace, opened a wholesale liquor house and also did mining. In 1890 his liquor house was sacrificed in the big fire and then he built the well known Fuller House in Wallace. This he continued to operate until 1900, when he leased it and gave his entire time to the operation of the Headlight, a promising mining property in which Col. Fuller is heavily interested and is managing. Mr. Fuller has the following named brothers and sisters: George D.; Albion; Charlotte; John J., sergeant in the Thirty-sixth Wisconsin Infantry, who was severely wounded in front of Petersburg, which resulted in his death; Elephalet; Guy W., captain of Company A, Sixteenth Michigan Infantry, who was killed by Mosby's guerrillas in October, 1864, and was buried by the Masons in Baraboo, Wisconsin, being a son-in-law to Judge McWait of that city; Elijah, captain in the Third Michigan Infantry.

On December 15, 1871, at Calhoun, Nebraska, Mr. Fuller married Miss Margaret A., daughter of Jesse and Sarah (Arnold) Murphy. Mr. Murphy was born in Connecticut and died in Omaha, in 1897, aged eighty. His father was a patriot in the Revolution. He lived near Bull Run at the time of that awful battle and later he was incarcerated in Libby prison as a sympathizer with the Union and for eighteen months he suffered the anguish of that horrible pen. The mother of Mrs. Fuller was born in Pennsylvania and now lives in Eugene, Oregon. Mrs. Fuller was born in New Jersey, January 11, 1840. The following children have been born to this union: Warrick G., Edith L., both deceased, Reuben J., Steward E., Jesse, Ethel, deceased. Mr. Fuller is a Republican and is always interested in the welfare of the country and has been a Republican since the days of Abraham Lincoln. He has been councilman in the town, but the colonel is never desirous of preferment in this line.

E. HOWARD DULMAGE. The fact that Mr. Dulmage conceived the idea and executed the project of connecting Pierce and Orofino and Greer by telephone demonstrates that he is a man of keen foresight, business discrimination and practical judgment. The enterprise has been a success in every pint of view and it is owing to the keeness of Mr. Dulmage and his executive force that it has been put in position for the accommodation of the mining districts.

Howard Dulmage was born in Clifford, Ontario, on June 9, 1878, being the son of Robert W. and Mary (Mulcaster) Dulmage. The father was born in Canada as was his father, and the grandfather of Robert W. went to Canada from Pennsylvania in 1812. Our subject's father is a leading merchant in Northwest Territory, Canada. The mother of Howard was a native of England and came to Canada with her parents who are dead. She married in Canada and lives with her husband in Northwest Territory. Our subject was educated in the excellent schools of Ontario, finishing in the high school. He then entered a pharmacy but not liking the business he came to Minneapolis when he was eighteen. Taking a course in a Minnesota school of business, he then entered the accounting department of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad at Minneapolis. Two years later he took the position of agent on that line at Luverne, Iowa, then was stationed at Badger and later was operator and relief agent for the Northern Pacific. In January, 1902, he was stationed at Greer as agent and in July of that year, he resigned to put in the telephone mentioned above and which connects with the Pacific States line at Greer. In addition to handling this business, Mr. Dulmage is conducting a fruit and confectionery store, in which he is doing a good business. Mr. Dulmage has one brother and one sister, the former in the college of pharmacy in Toronto, while the latter is Esther, wife of Robert B. Ferguson, in the office of the Delaware and Lackawana railroad in New York.

On November 14, 1900, Mr. Dulmage married Miss Florence, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Burgoyne) Hawke, natives of England. Mrs. Dulmage was born in Yorkshire, England, on November 15, 1878, and she has the following brothers and sisters: Thomas, a butcher; Louise H., wife of Harry Lockwood, a butcher; Mary, wife of Albion Aulker; Susan, wife of Harry Mattieson, a policeman; Katherine, wife of Thomas Lynes, a florist; all the above are in Minneapolis; Laura, single and residing in England.

FREDERICK P. PORTER, the efficient and substantial master mechanic in the Bunker Hill, is descended from the well known Porter family of New England, whose prominence in the affairs of the country is becoming and deserved. He was born in Strong, Maine, September 10, 1874, the son of Arthur J. and Nellie (Fiske) Porter, natives of Maine, where they still live. The father was a manufacturer of wooden articles. The great-grandfather of our subject was Colonel Porter in the Revolution. The mother comes from a well known family of New England, the Fiskes being among the first settlers of New England. Frederick P. was well educated, taking a high school course and when eighteen went to learn the machinist trade. This was in Lewiston, Maine, and when he had completed it, he worked in New York and then entered the navy. He served three years and was discharged in the fall of 1898, when he came to the Coeur d'Alene country. He was on the San Francisco in Cuba five months. Here he took a position in the Bunker Hill and later in the Poorman. Then he went back to the marine repair shops for ten years and in October, 1902, he came to this district and took his present position. Mr. Porter has two brothers, George G., Arthur, and one sister, Emma Gilmore.

In October, 1901, Mr. Porter married Miss Jane C., daughter of Amos and Julia (Hayden) Fiske, natives of Maine. Mrs. Porter comes from another branch of the Fiske family. The wedding occurred in Rockland, Maine, and Mrs. Porter was born in the same town, October 6, 1876. She has one brother, Fred, and one sister, Rena Leon. Mr. Porter is a member of the A. F. & A. M. He is a stanch Republican and is a well informed and capable man.

HON. ALFRED PAGE is one of the best known men of the Coeur d'Alene country and we are pleased to be privileged to recount the salient points in his interesting career. At present he is serving in the state legislature, having been chosen to represent his county, and in this capacity he is an able and faithful man.

Alfred Page was born in Worcestershire, England, on December 12, 1852, the son of Robert and Elizabeth (Greaves) Page, natives of England. The father was a builder and contractor and died in 1897. The mother now lives in Scotland. Our subject received a liberal education in his native land and came to the United States in 1870. He had learned the butcher trade and followed it in California, both at San Jose, and Oakland. In 1874 he opened a market in the latter place and in time sold out and started a restaurant, being in partnership with Harry Baylis. Finally he sold that and went to Arizona where we find him active in various lines. Thence he continued his journey to Nevada and in 1879, Mr. Page was in the city of Seattle and there he continued in business until 1883. He was next engaged in Granite creek mines in British Columbia and in 1884 came thence to Murray. Finally Mr. Page came on to Kentuck, now Wardner, and there he opened a restaurant and from that day to this he has been prominent in entertaining travelers and is now proprietor of the well known Page Hotel, one of the most comfortable and popular places in the entire Coeur d'Alene country. He has made the hotel the leading establishment in the town and his untiring care for the comfort of all and his skill in furnishing the best to be had in the markets, with careful attendants, have made his name and hotel leaders in every traveler's mind who has had the good fortune to be entertained in the hotel. Mr. Page is a member of the Elks, of the I. O. O. F. and of the Eagles.

HENRY C. IHRIG, the skillful and popular sign writer of Wallace, is one of the leading men in his line of business in the northern part of the state and is a good substantial citizen and a man of reliability. He was born in Scott county, Minnesota, on March 2, 1859, the son of Charles and Susannah (Steiner) Ihrig, natives of Germany, where they were married. They came to the United States in the early 'fifties, and the father followed the meat business most of his life. In 1892 he was called away by death. This occurred in Dayton, Washington, where he had been living since 1880. The mother still lives there, aged seventy-one. Our subject was educated in Minnesota and when thirteen entered the Minneapolis Business College, where he took first prize for penmanship and spelling. When sixteen he learned fresco painting and at the same time assisted his father in the butcher business. In 1880 he joined his brother in Dayton, Washington, whither the family came in a few months. After a few months Mr. Ihrig went to San Francisco and worked at butchering for three years, being also engaged in operating a fruit store. Then he took the foremanship of a large carriage factory in San Francisco, and in 1883 returned to Dayton. He wrote signs there for two years and came on to Murray, where he did a good business. In 1888 he came to Burke and built the "Nip & Tuck," but as business did not pan out good he came to Wallace and here has continued since, doing a good business in his line. He was here in the great fire and did noble work in rescuing people and saving property. Mr. Ihrig owns a fine two-story building and handles a thriving trade. Mr. Ihrig has one brother, George, and three sisters,—Maggie Erb, Laura Peterson and Bertha Nicholson; and one half-brother, William, and two half-sisters,—Eliza Wickmann and Sophie Bollinger. Mr. Ihrig is a member of the Eagles, and of the K. P.

Mr. Ihrig has always been a fine athlete and in early days got up and carried through one of the finest fourth of July celebrations that ever made the old Coeur d'Alene hills echo to patriotism. He has in his possession eight prizes won at different occasions, the first being taken when he was but eight years old. On account of having taken eight prizes in athletic contests in Minnesota, the state sent Mr. Ihrig to Duluth, where he organized the Turnverein. He recently made a winning of warm approval in giving an exhibition for the Elks. He had been some time out of practice, but was enthusiastically applauded. Mr. Ihrig is still in the happy days of bachelor life and is also a stanch Republican. He is owner of much mining stock and has a share in the Happy Day, which adjoins the Hercules, his stock being in the Amador and other properties.

JOHN S. OLIN. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to recount the salient points of the career of Mr. Olin, since he is one of the expert mining men of this famous Coeur d'Alene district, as will be seen from the following. He was born in Ashland, Ohio, on December 13, 1839, the son of Salathiel and Rachel (Seger) Olin, natives of New York. Our subject received his education in Ohio and remained there until he was nineteen, finishing the academic course that year. He went to Minnesota and embarked in the dry goods business for a time, after which, in 1864, he crossed the plains to Austin, Nevada. He mined there and in California, Arizona, Utah, Colorado, Alaska, Montana and Old Mexico. Mr. Olin was superintendent of the Segregated Belcher mine at Virginia City in 1886, then was superintendent of the following other properties: Cariboo, in Boulder, Colorado, the Menas Vegas, in Old Mexico, state of Neuvo, Leon, the Brownlow, in Colorado, the Emmons, on Horseshoe mountain, in Colorado, the Mayzeppa, also in Colorado. In the spring of 1893 Mr. Olin went to Alaska as superintendent of the Juno Mining and Manufacturing Company and then superintended the famous Bassick property, Quireda, in Custer county, then took charge of the Chicago and Cripple creek tunnel. Following this long and excellent record Mr. Olin was employed by some large eastern firms as an expert, and he traveled over various sections of leading mining districts until 1899, when he came to Mullan and accepted the superintendency of the Hunter properties, where he is at the present time. Mr. Olin has one brother and one sister,—Mark and Eliza.

In March, 1875, Mr. Olin married Miss Amanda, daughter of Blake and Emily Swaind. The father died in Iowa and the mother still lives in Appanoose county, where she was born and also where Mrs. Olin was born. The grandparents were from South Carolina and early pioneers in Iowa. Mrs. Olin has the following brothers and sisters, all living in Appanoose county: Blake, Junuius, Eli, Levi, Oscar, Jacob, Lewis and Mrs. Sarah Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Olin have one child,—Mrs. Eva Danher, residing in Mullan. Mr. Olin is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the A. O. U. W. Mrs. Olin is a devout member of the Methodist church.

GEORGE E. ERB is a thorough westerner in every sense of the word, being a man of intelligence and excellent business-ability, and withal a potent factor in the political world of Idaho, while among his fellows he is of exceptionally good standing.

George E. Erb was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, on April 26, 1866, being the son of Maxim and Mary A. (Ferguson) Erb. The father was born in Alsace-Lorraine, and came to the United States when he was sixteen years old. He located in Illinois and joined the state militia at the time of the Mormon trouble at Nauvoo. Then he enlisted in and served all through the Mexican war, and after its close he acted as scout and Indian fighter on the plains until 1856, when he met and married Miss Mary Ferguson, and settled down in Missouri about twenty miles south from Kansas City. When the Civil war broke out he joined the southern army, serving under General Joe Shelby. He was in the battles of Springfield, Iuka, Corinth, was taken prisoner at Vicksburg, exchanged three months later and then served the balance of the war in Texas. Then he returned to his farm and remained until his death, in 1878, aged sixty-two. The mother of our subject was born in Missouri, of Scotch and Irish extraction, and is now liying with this son's family in Lewiston. George was educated in the schools of his native place and when seventeen came with his mother, who took land near Weston, Oregon, where he farmed for three years. He then went to Wallowa county, Oregon, and in February, 1889, he came on foot, the snow being too deep for horses, to Lewiston, and in that city and at his present place he has been since. Soon after landing in Lewiston he passed the teachers' examination and taught school until 1892. In August of that year he was nominated and elected probate judge, also school superintendent on the Democratic ticket. After that term he accepted the position of deputy county clerk, where he discharged the duties to the satisfaction of all. During this time he was one term city assessor, and one term mayor of Lewiston. In 1896 Mr. Erb was appointed as a member of the board of trustees for the state Normal school and he still holds that position. In 1899 he was chairman of the Democratic county central committee, and in 1901 he was a member of the state central committee for Nez Perces county. In 1901 Mr. Erb dropped all activities in politics and took up the mercantile business with his brothers in Greer, where we find him now. They carry a stock of ten thousand dollars and do a good business. He owns a fine residence in Lewiston and also a number of residence properties leased, while also he has a good farm of one quarter near Lewiston.

Mr. Erb is a member of the W. of W. at Lewiston and is also past chancellor commander of Excelsior Lodge, No. 2, K. P., in Lewiston. Mr. Erb also is past grand chancellor commander of the state of Idaho. He has held office in the subordinate lodge for ten years consecutively, and has also attained the position of lieutenant colonel of the Uniform Rank, being the highest office in the state. He succeeds Colonel Ed. McConville, the latter being killed in the Philippines. Mr. Erb is also a member of the Rathbone Sisters and has been instrumental in organizing the grand temple of these in the state.

On June 14, 1892, at the Dowd residence near Lewiston, Mr. Erb married Miss Mary E., daughter of Michael and Elizabeth Dowd, natives of Ireland. Mrs. Erb was the first white girl born at Pierce. The father was a pioneer in Pierce and wrought at his trade—that of the blacksmith—and died in 1876. The mother died at the home of our subject in 1897. Mrs. Erb was born in Pierce on December 13, 1868, and was educated in the Catholic seminary in Walla Walla. She has three brothers,—Harry, Matthew and Charles, farmers and stockmen on the Dowd estate. Two children,—Charles F., aged nine, and Mary E., aged seven, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Erb. Mr. Erb and his wife are prominent in the society of Lewiston and are among the leading people of the town, while their friends are numbered as legion. Mr. Erb is chief deputy in charge of the court department in the county clerk's office.

THOMAS H. DONNELLY is a prominent and capable mining man of the Coeur d'Alene country, with his headquarters at Mullan. He is well and favorably known, is a man of practical knowledge, skill and energy, and has some of the most excellent property in this vicinity.

Thomas H. Donnelly was born in England on August 9, 1847, the son of Joseph and Mary (Costello) Donnelly, natives of Ireland and now dwelling in Lawrence, Massachusetts. The father came to the United States in 1854, and in February, 1862, enlisted in Company D, Sixteenth Massachusetts. He was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness, but continued to serve until the end of the war, and was in the principal battles. He now draws a disability pension, having lost the use of his wounded arm. The mother's brother, Miles, served in the navy during the Civil war. Our subject was reared and educated in Lowell, Massachusetts, and when seventeen enlisted in the navy. At the close of the war he came to Chicago and followed steamfitting until 1869, then returned to Lowell until 1872, when he went again to Chicago and wrought at his trade until 1877. Next we see Mr. Donnelly in Leadville, mining, and in this business he wrought in New Mixico, Arizona, southern California, Oregon, British Columbia, Montana, Washington, Idaho and other places. He passed through the Coeur d'Alene country in 1880 and stayed with Mr. Prichard at Evolution, where he was working on the Goldsmith claim. Mr. Donnelly came to Idaho to remain in 1887, and since that time has given his attention to mining. He is the principal owner of the famous Snowstorm group, which has a force of men at work and a showing of three tunnels, sixteen hundred feet, six hundred feet and two hundred and ninety feet, respectively; with forty feet of ore in the middle tunnel. It is a copper property and valuable. Mr. Donnelly is vice-president of this company, and also owns other property in this vicinity. He has one brother and two sisters,—Edward J., Elizabeth Houghton and Sarah Hart. Mr. Donnelly is still enjoying the quiet pleasures and comforts of the celibatarian. He is a member of the G. A. R. and the Redmen. Politically Mr. Donnelly is entirely independent and not bound by shackles in any line. In church relations he is affiliated with the Catholics.

CHARLES STENZEL. This public spirited business man of Greer is now operating a first class livery stable there, in which he does a good business, owing both to his enterprise and his geniality, being a man who has labored for the development of the country and who is well and favorably known.

Charles Stenzel was born in Waushara county, Wisconsin, on June 29, 1867, being the son of Andrew G. and Minnie (Koechel) Stenzel, natives of Germany. The father came to the United States in 1849 and farmed and did merchandising. He died in Platte county, Nebraska, January 6, 1895, aged sixty-two. He served in Company I, First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, and was disabled in the war. The mother of our subject came to the United States about 1851, was married in Wisconsin in June, 1861, and now lives in Nebraska. Charles was raised in Wisconsin until seven, then went with the family to Minnesota and Nebraska, in which latter place he attended school for thirteen years. He remained with his parents until he was twenty, and then rented land for three years with indifferent success. In 1891 Mr. Stenzel came to Shoshone county and did ranch work for four years, then he operated a stage line from Lewiston to Pierce and did freighting for six years. His brother-in-law, George Gamble, was a partner in these enterprises. In April, 1901, Mr. Stenzel opened a livery stable in Greer, and since that date he has done a good business. Mr. Stenzel has a ranch on the Weippe which will yield at least two million feet of fine yellow pine, this being an exceptionally fine piece of timber land.

In Platte county, Nebraska, on February 27, 1891, Mr. Stenzel married Miss Annie, daughter of Fred and Minnie Tessendorf, natives of Germany. Mrs. Stenzel has three brothers and one sister,—William, in Nez Perces county; Gustav and Albert, in Platte county, Nebraska; Teenie, wife of John Weisner, operating a steam laundry in Grand Forks, British Columbia. Mr. Stenzel stands among the leaders in progression and upbuilding of the country and has shown a generous and public spirit in his career, and the good will and esteem of all are his to enjoy.

ADAM AULBACH needs no introduction to the people of Idaho or the northwest, and it is with unfeigned pleasure that we are able to recount some of the salient points of his active and aggressive career. Owing to his extensive experience and activity in the vocations of life, it will be impossible to grant great detail, but an epitome of Mr. Aulbach's life can but stimulate others to noble action and emulation of real triumph and success.

Adam Aulbach was born near Belleville, Illinois, on December 24, 1846, the son of Adam and Eva Aulbach, natives of Aschaffenburg, Bavaria. The father was a captain in the army many years, came to the United States in 1842 and located six miles south of Belleville. Later he moved to Belleville and followed merchandising until his death, in 1889. He had been alderman for twenty-four years. The mother was married in the native land, and died in Belleville in 1887. Our subject received a liberal education, learned the printer's art and the skill of the editor and reporter, perfecting himself in many places. He commenced in Belleville, then worked on the Republican, in St. Louis, and on April 28, 1863, with four others, the eldest being twenty-five, he started from St. Joseph, Missouri, with ox teams, to the west. Fighting with the Indians occurred frequently and the authorities forbade them proceeding from Laramie until larger trains came up. He reached his destination, East Bannock, on July 28, the same year. He mined, did merchandising, went to Virginia City, Montana, mined in Bivens gulch and there was drafted into the vigilance committee, and it became his lot to witness several of the early hangings. On August 21, 1864, Mr. Aulbach enlisted in Company A, First Nevada Cavalry, and served until July 12, 1866, being then discharged at Camp Douglas, Utah. Next we see Mr. Aulbach in the newspaper business in Salt Lake City, handling the Vedette, which was a fearless organ, as is testified by the mobbings it received at the hands of the infuriated Mormons. Mr. Aulbach was the only one escaping bodily injury. Later he operated a daily at Corinne, Utah, then did compositor work on the San Francisco Chronicle. After one year he returned to Corinne, and was at the head of a plan to reclaim desert land, and went to Washington, D. C., with ex-Governor Stone, of Iowa, to further the business, but was finally compelled to abandon it. In 1872 Mr. Aulbach was again in San Francisco, and then wrote the constitution of the Typographical Union, which is still in use. Then we see him in San Jose, publishing the daily Herald in the interests of Samuel J. Tilden in the great campaign of 1876. In the fall of that year he went to Eureka, Nevada, and edited the Daily Republican. After one year he returned to San Francisco and worked on the Chronicle and Post. In 1880 he came again to Eureka, and for three years subsequent thereto was connected with the Daily Sentinel. On November 2, 1883, Mr. Aulbach arrived at Herring Siding, on the Northern Pacific, found the trail blocked with snow and so went east, where he remained during that winter. He was occupied on the Philadelphia Record, New York Herald and other papers. On April 9, 1884, Mr. Aulbach reached Belknap with a complete printing office, and on July 4 of the same year he came into Murray at the head of a pack train of forty-five mules, bringing in his newspaper outfit. On July 8 the first issue of the Tri-Weekly Sun came forth, and in 1886 it grew to a daily, and in 1888 it took its place as a weekly and has since continued as such. The Coeur d'Alene Sun is well known, and it breathes forth the acumen, uprightness and keen discrimination and foresight of its editor and owner and has always been a welcome visitor wherever it has made its way. In 1885 Mr. Aulbach started the Wardner News. In 1889 he purchased the Wallace Press and also started a paper at Mullan. All of these plants he subsequently sold. Mr. Aulbach has always been a prominent figure in the political arena, and while forging out the policy and placing men to execute it he has taken but little prominence for himself in public office. He is now a stanch Republican and hopes to continue so until his departure. He has one brother, John, and two sisters, Josephine Beck and Mary C. Stratz.

On February 5, 1888, at Murray, Mr. Aulbach married Miss Rose, daughter of John and Mary (Ruben) Zaugg, natives of Switzerland and now deceased. Two children have been born to this union,—Nate, a student in Bishop Scott's academy in Portland; Ruth, in St. Helen's Hall, Portland. Mr. Aulbach is a member of the A. F. & A. M., the I. O. O. F. the O. E. S., the G. A. R. and the Olympic Club. He owns the Murray water plant and has heavy interests in mining, and is one of the leaders of the county.

GEORGE E. GILPATRICK is one of the early pioneers of the Coeur d'Alene country and is now operating a neat and popular hotel in Murray, while also he does a general mining business. He was born in Maine on January 25, 1861, the son of Joseph F. and Esther (Meader) Gilpatrick, natives of Maine. The father descended from English parents, and his father is now living in Maine, aged ninety. The father died in eastern Washington in 1897. The mother comes from Scotch ancestrage and is now living at Tyler, Washington. Our subject was raised in Maine until nine, then went with the family to Butte county, California, where he was educated. In 1885 he came to Wardner and the next year to Murray. He devoted himself to mining and located several claims, but later abandoned them. One of them proved upon development to be very valuable. Mr. Gilpatrick continued at Murray until 1890 and then went to visit his people at Tyler, and spent four years there and one in Walla Walla, and in 1895 he returned to Murray again. Again he gave his attention to mining, and then he began to locate some excellent claims. He located the Carbonate group, in which he has a large interest now. He also discovered and located the Tiger group, and in this also he has a large share. He gave his attention to developing these properties, and also to further prospecting, until March 28, 1903, when he opened the hotel which he is now conducting, and it is one of the choice places for refreshment in the whole Coeur d'Alene country and happy is the weary traveller who is so fortunate as to secure entertainment under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Gilpatrick, for they have made their hotel all that home can afford for comfort and quietness. Mr. Gilpatrick has also done considerable contract work in different mines, and he is known as one of the leading mining men of the section. He has four brothers and one sister,—Fred, Herbert, Gardner, Henry and Aura Moreland.

In Seattle, on July 4, 1901, Mr. Gilpatrick married Mrs. Athelia Taylor, daughter of Zephaniah and Mary (Knight) Perry, natives of New York. The father died at Tyler on May 28, 1899, and the mother died in 1891. Mrs. Gilpatrick was born in New York state in 1867 and has the following brothers and sisters: Fremont, Sherman, John, Burt, Edwin, Mellissa Abbott, Hattie Signor and Alta Watt.

WILLIAM P. NORTHRUP is one of the leading citizens of the Coeur d'Alene country and is well and favorably known in this county. He is at present handling a good hardware business in Murray and is doing a good business, to which his energy, skill and uprightness entitle him.

William P. Northrup was born in Wyoming county, New York, on February 3rd, 1852, the son of Gilbert S. and Clarinda G. (Gates) Northrup, natives of New York and Massachusetts, respectively. The father was a well known Congregational preacher and was chaplain of the Ninth Kansas Cavalry, which fought Price. He contracted pneumonia in the service, and died in 1864. He came from a prominent and old New England family. The mother descended from the Gates family, which came to the colonies in the early part of the seventeenth century. She died in Iola, Kansas, in 1891. Our subject was educated by his mother, who was accomplished as an educator, and in 1872 he went to railroading in Minnesota. Later he went to Poughkeepsie, New York, and took a business course. Following this Mr. Northrup was salesman in a mercantile house in Chicago, then entered the employ of his uncle, the leading business man of Iola, Kansas. Next he came to The Dalles, Oregon, and in 1890 to Wallace, and it was his fortune, with others, to spread the first alarm of the great fire of that year, and in 1892 he was a deputy sheriff. Mr. Northrup was then receiver for the Small & Colby Lumber Company at Cataldo, and later he took charge of the Coeur d'Alene Hardware Company's interests in Murray, and in February, 1902, he bought the business. Mr. Northrup was county treasurer for two years and the commissioners commanded him not to pay the interest on the county bonds, but he did it, as should have been done, and then was ordered to get greater bonds, and a personal canvass of the towns of the district gave him such an overwhelming addition to his bonds that no further complaint could be lodged.

At Iola, Kansas, on May 27, 1880, Mr. Northrup married Miss Luella E., daughter of Josiah and Iola C. Colborn, early settlers in Kansas. The town was named from Mrs. Colborn. The father was a California miner and did well, and was a leading man in his section. Mrs. Northrup is a native of Iola, being the first child born there. She has one brother and four sisters,—George M., Jennie Moffitt, Madeline J. McKissick, Alice Scott and Nellie F. Colburn. Mr. Northrup is a member of the K. P. and of the A. O. U. W. He is a man of intelligence and business ability that has made a success, and he stands today one of the prominent men of Shoshone county and deservedly holds that position.

CLARENCE C. LANDES is the present postmaster of Murray, and it is truly said of him that he handles one of the best and neatest postoffices in the state of Idaho. He also operates in connection with his postoffice a cigar and confection store and is handling a fine business.

Clarence C. Landes was born in Eugene, Oregon, on November 21, 1872, the son of Winfield S. and Mary J. (Goodman) Landes. The father was born in Iowa, crossed the plains in 1853, farmed near Eugene and in 1882 came to eastern Oregon and in 1886 to Murray. In 1900 he retired from active mining interests and now dwells in Spokane. The mother was born in Missouri, was married in Eugene, and died at Eugene in June, 1873. Our subject was educated in the public schools and the Monmouth Normal. His mother's parents now live in Eugene and the father rides a bicycle, and both are strong and rugged and if they both live until August 29, 1903, they will celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding. After leaving the normal Clarence C. came to Murray and joined his father in mining. In 1896 he went into politics and was an influential factor in that realm. He was four months at Boise, in the heat of the campaign, and then came to Murray and was appointed postmaster. Eighteen months later he resigned and went to Central America, seeking a business location, but returned to Spokane, then went to Thunder mountain before the boom and located some fine property, which was sold by him later to a good advantage. In 1901 Mr. Landes returned to Murray and upon the resignation of Mr. Irvin as postmaster he was appointed, and holds that incumbency until the present.

On July 18, 1901, at Wallace, Mr. Landes married Miss Lillian, daughter of William and Ella (Hitchings) Worstell, natives of Indiana. The father is a pioneer to this district, and is now a retired merchant in Wallace. The mother died in Denver, Colorado, on March 10, 1888. Mrs. Landes was born in Indiana on July 23, 1873, and has three brothers and two sisters,—Bruce G., Lawrence, Harold, Luneti and Hannah. To Mr. and Mrs. Landes there has been born one child,—Virginia. Mr. Landes is a member of the Elks, and his wife belongs to the Episcopalian church. Mr. Landes is greatly interested in mining propositions in the district and is a promoter of properties on Bear Gulch.

PATRICK KEANE has won many friends by his affability and modest bearing, coupled with integrity and sincerity, which are patent to all who come in contact with him. He is at present the popular incumbent of the postoffice at Greer, where he displays an ability and spirit of accommodation that gives the utmost satisfaction.

Patrick Keane was born in Ireland on March 16, 1844, being the son of Cornelius and Mary (Monahan) Keane, both natives of Ireland and now deceased. Patrick came to the United States in 1867, and after one year in Boston he made his way to Idaho, Pierce being the objective point. He is thus one of the oldest pioneers of this section. He gave his attention to mining and later took a homestead on the Weippe, which was the scene of his labors for sixteen years. This property was sold in February, 1902. For six years Mr. Keane was postmaster in Fraser, and since July, 1899, he has been postmaster of Greer. Mr. Keane has two brothers,—Cornelius, on the old homestead in Ireland; Dermis, a farmer in the vicinity of Fraser.

On December 31, 1885, at Greer, Mr. Keane married Miss Mary, daughter of James and Mary Greer, natives of Ireland. Mrs. Keane was born in Ohio, and died in Greer on February 7, 1891, aged fifty-two. Mr. Keane has no children. In political matters he is a stanch Republican and has been committeeman for this district. He is a man of excellent information, and in the issues of the day he is intelligent. Mr. Keane has two buildings in the town, which are rented. One is that in which the postoffice is located.

AMOS WATKINS is a leading man of Murray, being now engaged in blacksmithing. He was born in Ohio on November 9, 1847, the son of Edward and Jane (Williams) Watkins, natives of Wales. They came direct to Ohio from the native country, the father landing in the Buckeye state when seven. They were married there, and there the father died in 1897.

The mother died when our subject was twelve. Amos was educated and reared in Ohio, and in 1875 went to Missouri, the next year to California and thence by steamer to Portland, and was soon in Salem. Inside of a year he located in Colfax, Washington, and in 1879 went to the Leadville excitement, and in May, 1883, he was on the crest of the wave which brought him to Murray. He packed in over the old Evolution trail and rested first at Eagle City. He mined until 1887 and then opened his present shop, and since that time the shop has been his headquarters. Mr. Watkins is interested in the development of the district, has various properties and is a heavy owner in the Emmett & Blaine group. Mr. Watkins has one brother, Benjamin; four half-brothers, John, Evan, David and Charles; two sisters, Mary Evans and Catherine Jones; and one half-sister, Emma Davis.

On January 12, 1887, at Murray, Mr. Watkins married Mrs. Sara E. Haver, who was born in Goshen, Indiana, on February 29, 1852, the daughter of Jacob and Susan (Norten) Kinney. The father was born in Dublin, Ireland, came to the United States when thirty and was a merchant. The mother was born in Germany, was married in Goshen, Indiana, and died on November 26, 1871. Mr. Kinney was a leading merchant in Goshen for years. Mr. Watkins is a member of the A. O. U. W. and is an active Republican.

Mrs. Watkins came to Murray over the trail from Thompson Falls, landing here on March 17, 1885. She started a boarding house in Dream gulch and did well for two years. Her first husband, Fred Haver, was killed in a powder explosion in 1882. He was a veteran of the Civil war, enlisting in the First Wisconsin Battery August 19, 1862, and receiving his discharge on July 18, 1865. He was born in Zanesville, Ohio, on June 20, 1847, was married in Chicago on July 18, 1873, and for years was captain in the Chicago fire department. He did mining in the Black Hills in 1877, then went to Montana and contracted on the N. P. and there he met his death, as stated. Mr. and Mrs. Watkins are highly respected people and have considerable property in Murray and are among the substantial taxpayers. Mrs. Watkins was junior vice-president in the Woman's Relief Corps, department of Idaho, and has been three times treasurer of the local lodge.

DAMIAN CARDONER. This gentleman is one of the leading business men of the Coeur d'Alene country and at the present time is operating a first class general merchandise store in Burke. He carries a large stock, aggregating from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars worth of all kinds of goods needed in this market. In addition to this, Mr. Cardoner is heavily interested in mining property and is one of the wealthy men of the country. He was born in San Clemente, Spain, on September 15, 1844, the son of Joseph and Maria (Vinas) Cardoner, natives of the same place. The father died on February 9, 1903, aged seventy-nine and the mother died in 1897, aged seventy-four. Our subject grew to manhood in his native place and was engaged in business in Basle, Switzerland, from 1868 to 1872. After this venture he spent five months in his native place and then his stirring spirit led him to the United States in 1883. Landing in New York, he came thence to San Francisco. In 1884 Mr. Cardoner came over the mountains by Mission to the Eagle district, carrying his pack. This was in April and he had the honor of taking the first citizenship papers there. Mr. Cardoner commenced with hard labor and he has displayed the most untiring energy and determination to win in the race in which he has now made such a brilliant success. He worked in the mines and after working hours were past, he would sell fruits and vegetables. Even during the winter he was active in this line. Later he would pack heavy loads of supplies to the miners in various sections and sometimes he would quit at night with less than two dollars earned. In 1885 he started a saloon in Mullan but soon gave up the business on account of the excitement dying out. Then Mr. Cardoner prospected but met with no success. In the fall of 1885 he went back to Murray with a fifteen dollar stock and opened a cigar, fruit, and confectionery store. He met with success and soon had a fine stock. He ventured in mining and lost fourteen hundred dollars. In 1887 he sent a cousin to start a store in Burke, having only a six hundred dollar stock. He would make pilgrimages over the pass in the dead of winter to make his collections each month and experienced terribly hard usage in the deep snows and slides and many times came near losing his life. But there was no such thing as fail with Mr. Cardoner and he pushed steadily along. Later he brought his stock from Murray and has continued here in business since. He has a fine patronage now. In the early nineties, Mr. Cardoner invested in mines again and lost heavily. But he would not be defeated and finally Dame Fortune smiled on him in this line also and he became a sixteenth owner of the famous Hercules, which amply rewarded his former toils and losses. He is interested in other mining properties and they are all considered of good worth. Mr. Cardoner has one brother, Joseph, who is in business in Berne, Switzerland.

The marriage of Mr. Cardoner and Miss Matilda Bouvard occurred on July 11, 1872 in Strasburg, Alsace-Lorraine, and four children have been born to them, one boy and three girls. Bertha is living at home and the others are deceased. During the last administration of Cleveland, Mr. Cardoner was postmaster for four years. Mr. Cardoner is now enjoying the competence that his labors have provided and it may truthfully be said that few men have wrought with more arduous effort, skill, determination, with invincible will never to bow to adversity, than has this wealthy and respected merchant and mine owner.

AMOS M. STRODE, one of the heavy operators in mining property in the Coeur d'Alene district, is also constructor, owner and manager of the water works, and was builder and owner of the electric light plant, in Mullan. He was born in Edmonson county, Kentucky, on March 17, 1849, the son of McClung and Sabrina (Shackelford) Strode, natives of Kentucky and now deceased. The Mayflower bore to the new world two brothers, James and John Strode, who later settled in the James river valley in Virginia, and their descendants were prominent Americans and patriots in the Revolution and it is asserted that one of the family fired the first shot at the British at Lexington. Amos Strode, grandfather of our subject, settled in Kentucky and this branch of the family was prominent and influential. The father of our subject died in Warren county, Kentucky, on September 7, 1892. The mother of our subject came from German parentage and a prominent family, the Shackelfords being leading members of the bar and prominent judges in many decades. Our subject was educated and reared in Kentucky. When twenty-one he went to Kansas and farmed and bought and sold land, being also prominent politically. He traveled for a few years and settled to operating a coal mine in Missouri. Later he took a claim adjoining Grand Junction, Colorado, and sold out for eight thousand dollars. Then he took up mining near Ouray, operated a sawmill, handled a real estate business, and operated the largest placer mine in that section. He was at Aspen, Glenwood and other places. In 1888 Mr. Strode entered the Coeur d'Alene country and had sixty cents capital. He worked in a mill for a time, then launched into mining, and in 1890 he came to Mullan and erected a seventeen thousand dollar water plant and electric works costing nine thousand dollars. In addition to these enterprises Mr. Strode has done much real estate and mining business and is now promoting and operating several properties. He located and incorporated the Reindeer group and is president of the company. He is also president of the Stevens Peak Copper Mining Company and president and manager of the Stewart Mining Company. He owns the claims covering the mineral zone between the Morning and the Hunter mines. He also has some valuable claims west of Mullan, known as the mineral farm. Mr. Strode has two brothers and four sisters, —Milburn J., William H., Nancy B. Philips, Mag, Mrs. Jennie Schroeder and Mrs. Clara Vernon.

DAMIAN CARDONER.

On January 6, 1903, at Denver, Colorado, Mr. Strode married Miss Alicia F. Jeffrey, whose parents are deceased. The father was an officer in the British army and was a native of England. The mother was from a prominent family, named Harvey. Mrs. Strode was born in Hauts, Nova Scotia. She graduated from Mt. Allison college at Sackville, New Brunswick, then graduated from the medical department of the Northwestern University at Chicago, and then was appointed medical director of the St. Marks hospital in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Two years later she resigned to accept the superintendency of the St. Lukes in Denver, Colorado, and after three years of successful work there took charge of the Mt. Tabor Sanitarium in Portland, Oregon. After this long service Mrs. Strode returned to private life. She is a member of the Colorado State Medical Society. She has one brother, Charles N. F. Jeffrey, an Episcopal clergyman in Winnipeg. Mr. Strode is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and is also a Scottish Rite Mason. He is a Democrat, but not partisan. Mrs. Strode is a member of the Episcopal church.

CHARLES MELROY, who is now operating a quiet saloon in Murray, was born in Des Moines, Iowa, on February 13, 1863, the son of Thomas and Margaret (Gallagher) Melroy, natives of Ireland. The father came to the United States before he was twenty-one, and settled first in Pennsylvania and later went to Des Moines and there worked in the fort, hauling wood. After that he bought a farm in Warren county, which he sold to his brother, John, and then bought the old homestead in Madison county, where he farmed until his death. The mother still lives on that place. Our subject was reared in Iowa, attending public schools until he was fifteen, when he began to travel, and he visited South Dakota, Nebraska, Arkansas, Texas, Arizona, Old Mexico and many other states and territories. He continued thus in various employments until the fall of 1887, when he came into Murray, and here he has continued since, with the exception of several visits. He gave his attention to mining and prospecting until 1895, and then opened his present business. Mr. Melroy took part in the chloride excitement on the Pend Oreille, in 1888. He has ten brothers and sisters living, named as follows: Mark, John, Thomas, James, Peter, Michael, Frank, Dominic, Nora and Joseph.

On February 6, 1891, at Wallace, Mr. Melroy married Mrs. May Summner, daughter of Greenberry and Hattie Williams. The father was born in Illinois, and died in 1894. Mrs. Melroy has one brother, John R. One child has been born to this marriage, an unnamed infant. Mrs. Melroy has two children by her former marriage,—Minnie and Mable. Mr. Melroy is a member of the Redmen, and in political matters he is untrammelled by any party or tenet, but reserves to himself the decision of the important questions of the day.

HORACE R. NOBLE. A leading and well known business man and agriculturist of southern Shoshone county who has always maintained a reputation for integrity and enterprise and who promotes the welfare of the country by his aggressive business methods, it is eminently fitting that a representation of him be granted in this volume of his county's history.

Horace R. Noble was born in Jo Daviess county, Illinois, on August 1, 1856, being the son of John and Sarah (Sumpter) Noble, natives of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively. The father died in Anderson county, Kansas, in 1890, aged seventy-six. His father was a native of Scotland and his mother of Germany. John Noble served for a time in the Civil war, near its close. The mother of our subject was married in Indiana, and died in Fraser, Idaho. Her ancestors were natives of Tennessee. Horace was raised in Illinois until he was thirteen, and then the family went to Iowa, thence in one year to Missouri, and eight years later they went again to Iowa, but returned shortly to Missouri. Our subject remained with his parents until the death of the father, and then his mother resided with him until her death. He farmed and operated a general store in Kansas, and in 1891 he came to Shoshone county. Mr. Noble soon secured a homestead near Fraser, which he sold after he had proved up on it. This was in 1899, and then he came to Orofino and erected a fine stable and hotel, which property was successful and he sold it in September 24, 1902. Mr. Noble recently bought a general merchandise establishment in Greer, and his sons are operating it under the style of Noble Brothers. They carry a stock of five thousand dollars worth of well assorted goods and conduct a prosperous and rapidly increasing business. Our subject has practically retired from business and is part of the time at his home in Orofino and part of the time in the store at Greer. He also has stock in the French Creek Mining & Development Company, which is valuable. Mr. Noble and his wife are members of the Methodist church.

On January 21, 1879, Mr. Noble married Miss Charlotte, daughter of John and Sophia (Hilderbrand) Stump, who are mentioned in this volume. Mrs. Noble was born in Indiana on November 29, 1859, and is an exceedingly youthful appearing lady, being the centre of a large circle of admiring friends. To Mr. and Mrs. Noble five children have been born, as follows: John W. and William H., merchants at Greer; Dora, a school teacher, but living at home; Charles and Vallie, both at home.

FRANK J. EDWARDS. This gentleman is one of the pioneers of the Coeur d'Alene country and has wrought in various capacities here since the year 1887. At present he is in partnership with Mr. Glowe, mentioned in this volume, and they conduct a saloon in their own building, which is also described elsewhere in the book

Frank J. Edwards was born in Washington, Washington county, Iowa, on October 18, 1861, the son of William A. and Sarah M. (Boyer) Edwards, natives of Pennsylvania, where the father now dwells, the mother having died when Frank J. was fifteen. The father comes from Welsh ancestry and a prominent old Quaker family. The mother was from Holland Dutch extraction. Our subject went with his parents to Pennsylvania when he was six, and in that state he was educated, completing a course in the Quaker academy in Pennsville. When twenty-one he went to Michigan and wrought in the lumber woods. The next year he was in Indian Territory, and labored for the government in the Indian school until 1887. In that spring he came overland to Pueblo, Colorado, and thence by rail to Wardner, where he went to work on the railroad. Later he took up logging, and had to take horses, cattle and a logging outfit for his pay with Louis Disher. He bought the latter's interest and freighted from Old Mission to the railroad camps, and in the fall of 1888 he sold and came to Mullan. He worked in R. J. Rutter's sawmill, and in 1891 worked in the Morning mine mill, where later he was night watchman. In 1892 he bought a cigar store and operated the same until 1897, except during the panic of 1893. Then he visited in the east, and in 1897 bought an interest in the Mulland hotel, from D. F. Clark, and sold the same back to him in 1900. In that year Mr. Edwards bought lots and in partnership with Mr. Glowe opened their present business. He owns important mining property with Mr. Glowe. Mr. Edwards has two brothers, Mandes J. and Roy D.; and one sister, Mrs. Myrtie K. Raup; and one half-sister, Elizabeth.

On June 1, 1899, at Missoula, Montana, Mr. Edwards married Miss Selma Peterson, a native of Sweden, whose parents are deceased. She has no relatives in this country. They are the parents of one child,—Victor E. Mr. Edwards is a member of the I. O. O. F., being past noble grand. Mrs. Edwards belongs to the Lutheran church, and Mr. Edwards was brought up in the Quaker faith.

MARION A. ELLIS. A more enterprising, stirring, and, to use the western phrase, "rustling" man than the subject of this article would be hard to find, even in the pushing western camps. Mr. Ellis is a man of energy and executive force, quick to perceive a good thing and as prompt to go after it, and to crown it all he is possessed of the metal that takes a man clear through and attains the object of action.

Marion A. Ellis was born in Coles county, Illinois, on February 20, 1869, being the son of John G. and Elizabeth J. (Checkley) Ellis, natives of Illinois. At present the father is a newspaper man in Quenemo, Kansas, owning and editing the Republican of that city. Ht formerly bought grain and did a general merchandise business, but of late has devoted himself exclusively to the newspaper realm and is now mayor of his home town and a man of prominence and influence. Our subject's mother is still living also. Marion A. was educated in the graded schools of Kansas and at the age of sixteen went out in life for himself. He came west to Washington and followed railroading for some years, and then went to buying grain. He bought all over the western country, and in the awful panic of 1893 he lost everything and left Pullman for Pierce, where he has been since. His stirring nature led him at once to the front, and the result is that he is one of the largest, if not the largest, property owner in the entire district. He has a share in the Wild Rose, owns and operates the five-stamp mill on the Santiago group of quartz mines, which mill has constantly been in operation for three years, turning out a handsome dividend and employing a dozen or more men. Mr. Ellis is interested in nearly every working mine in the district, and his energy and skill have done an immeasurable amount for the advancement of the district and bringing it to the eyes of capitalists. Mr. Ellis has three brothers and two sisters, —Thomas, clerk of the district court in Osage, Kansas; Charles, in Kansas; Roy, U. S. mail messenger; Jessie, wife of John E. O'Brien; Kate, wife of James Irwin, both in Kansas. Mr. Ellis is a Republican always and a man with intelligence and courage to demonstrate the principles of his party. He is always in the conventions, both county and state, but never accepts office.

On February 13, 1897, Mr. Ellis married Miss Adelle M., a native of Danville, New York, and daughter of Mary M. Newton. Mrs. Ellis has one brother and one sister,—Charles, residing in Chicago and traveling attorney for Murdoch & Company, wholesale grocers of that city; Ada, wife of John Roberts, a retired capitalist of Denver, Colorado. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ellis,—Mildred, Frank and John. There is doubtless great credit due Mr. Ellis for the excellent work he has done in this camp and the record that he has made as a miner and a promoter of properties, and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant to him this slight recognition both of his ability and his worthy labors.

LAURENCE O'NEIL is a prominent mining man of Murray, and is now attending to this business constantly. He was born in the Isle of Man on June 22, 1844, the son of Bryen and Catherine (McGuire) O'Neil, natives of Ireland. The father died in 1898, and the mother in 1891, both in New York city. Our subject was educated in his native place and in New York, and when fourteen shipped on the schooner Eliza for Capetown, Africa. On their return trip the vessel was wrecked in the seas off the east coast of Ireland, and all hands were lost except our subject and the captain. After this he shipped to Darien on another bark, Eliza, and then went to work on the Nicaragua river, steamboating. Six months later he took the yellow fever, and after four months came thence to San Francisco, California. He did ranch work, then went to mining in the Mokel river, after three years going to White Pine, Nevada. He was in Pioche, Lake City, Black Hills, and in 1884 came into Murray. He arrived on the sixth of May and soon opened a saloon. In 1885 he sold out and prospected and mined, and in these related industries he has been engaged since. Mr. O'Neil located the Bay State group on September 27, 1885. He located the Apex, Croen Point, Blackhawk, Alice and others. He is now interested in several gold and silver propositions and some silver and lead propositions also. Mr. O'Neill is a director in the Spokane Mining Company, and also in assisting to manage others. Mr. O'Neil has one brother, Michael.

At Spearfish, South Dakota, in 1882, Mr. O'Neill married Miss Mary Flowton, native of Sweden. She has two sisters in Montana. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. O'Neal,—Alice, born August 22, 1884, in Murray, being the first child born in the town; Leo, born in 1886; and Pearl, born in 1887. Mr. O'Neil is a member of the Roman Catholic church and his wife belongs to the Lutheran denomination. Mr. O'Neil remarks that when he came to the summit he was astonished that the men would climb the trees and cut them so high in the air, some being cut off eighteen feet from the ground. He discovered in the winter that one could cut the trees standing on the snow eighteen feet deep.

JOHN A. GLOWE is the senior member of the firm of Glowe & Edwards, who operate a fine saloon in Mullan, which will compare favorably with any place in the entire county. They own a three-story building, forty-eight by sixty-five, and well located. One-half of the first story is utilized for their business and the other is rented, while the upper stories are fitted up for public halls and lodge rooms.

John A. Glowe was born in Germany on August 16, 1859, the son of Martin and Anna (Wiese) Glowe, natives also of the Fatherland, but now deceased. The mother passed away in 1898. Our subject was educated and grew to manhood in his native place and in 1876 came to the United States. He worked at various employments in Chicago, St. Paul, New Orleans and other central points, and in 1886 came to the Coeur d'Alene country. He at once gave his attention to mining and prospecting, and is thoroughly familiar with the various sections of this district. In 1889 Mr. Glowe started a shingle mill near Mullan and operated the same successfully until 1892, when he sold and took up the saloon business. His partner was Peter Cahnbley, now deceased. In 1900 Mr. Glowe took as partner Frank J. Edwards, and they erected the building mentioned. Mr. Glowe is treasurer of the American Commander Mining Company, which owns two patented claims and a fraction adjoining the Hunter mines. The company is pushing development work rapidly, already having over six hundred feet of tunneling. The property is considered one of the most valuable here, and is to be one of the heavy producers.

Mr. Glowe has one brothers and two sisters,—Adolph, Caroline Greening and Tillie Faust. Mr. Glowe has never been induced to retire from the substantial pleasures of the bachelor. He is past noble grand of the I. O. O. F., and in political matters is a Republican, but is a very liberal and independent thinker, not bound by any party shackles, but only holding to those tenets which can be established by good logic.

LOUIS A. NOYES. This well and favorably known gentleman is one of the substantial and capable residents of southern Shoshone county whose labors have done much toward the upbuilding and development of the country, while in all lines of progress and enterprise he is counted one of the foremost and strong men.

Louis A. Noyes was born in Ionia county, Michigan, on January 14, 1852, being the son of Hiram K. and Susan (Bourn) Noyes, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Louis was educated in the district schools of his native place, and his energy led him to learn the trade of painting while he was still young.

Having mastered the intricacies of the art, he wrought at it in various places. All through the eastern and southwestern states he did good business, and in 1884 he made his way to Colfax, Washington. In that city he wrought by the day, and also did much contracting work. He was well known there and considered one of the substantial business men of the place. In 1895 he came thence to his present place, seven miles southwest from Weippe. He has a quarter section of unsurveyed land, or rather unplatted land, which he is making a good home place. He is frequently found at the home of his mother, Mrs. Noyes, who dwells near by.

Mr. Noyes is an enthusiastic member of the I. O. O. F., in Colfax, and stands well there, as also he does in his present place. He is a man of energy and enterprise and good qualities of integrity and worth, while his life of faithful labor and thrift have placed him as one of the prosperous ones of the community.

As yet Mr. Noyes has not taken his leave of the ranks of the celibatarians of the county to venture on the uncertain seas of matrimony. But the bliss of the more excellent relation is yet for him to enjoy, having sounded to its depth the life of the bachelor.

CHARLES H. TALBOT was born in Springfield, Illinois, on May 13, 1845, being the son of William H. and Matilda (Enyart) Talbot, natives, respectively, of Kentucky and Illinois. The father came to Illinois with his parents, who were natives of Virginia, and he learned the blacksmith trade and operated a large blacksmith and wagon shop. He is now dead. The paternal grandfather of our subject was recorder of Sangamon county, Illinois, for thirty years. The mother of Charles died when he was fourteen. He was educated in the Springfield schools and at the age of sixteen enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Illinois Infantry, captained by Stephen W. Saunders, and whose colonel was John H. Howe. Mr. Talbot participated in the battles of Ft. Gibson, Raymond, Jackson, Black River Bridge, Vicksburg, Benton, and was in the siege of Mobile. He saw three years of hard, active service and conducted himself with display of valor and courage. Following the war he went to work for his uncle and in 1879 he was in the vicinity of Joplin, in mining and other enterprises. In 1893 Mr. Talbot came to Leland and thence to his present place, where he resides on the farm of his wife's mother, Mrs. Noyes.

On April 11, 1889, Mr. Talbot married Mrs. Ruby Baily, widow of Daniel Baily, and daughter of Hiram K. and Susan (Bourn) Noyes. Mr. Noyes was born in Vermont, as also were his ancestors, who were a prominent New England family of Scotch extraction. Mrs. Noyes was born in Canada on March 28, 1820. Her parents had crossed the border from Vermont in 1812, the father being a native of Vermont and her mother of Connecticut. Mrs. Noyes was married in Potton, Canada, five miles from the boundary of the United States. She is now living with her daughter and son-in-law, seven miles southwest from Weippe, on a homestead which has not yet been platted. Mrs. Noyes has the following children: William G., in Missouri; Sansford W., in Illinois; Louis A., with her; Charles E., in Oklahoma; Frank W., in Missouri; Lucy A., widow of Mr. Young, in Clarke county, Illinois; Rosepha H., wife of Asam Baron, in Indianapolis; Etta M., wife of John Shriner. Mrs. Talbot was born in Ionia county, Michigan, on November 16, 1858.

RICHARD P. BACON is one of the old-time prospectors of the Coeur d'Alene country, and is now devoting his attention to mining and prospecting. He was born in Arkansas on August 16, 1849, the son of John D. and Sarah A. (Brewer) Bacon. The father was born in Arkansas and comes from an old Virginia family. He assisted to erect the first house at Hot Springs, Arkansas. The mother was born in Tennessee, and was married in Arkansas. The parents crossed the plains in 1853 in a train of three hundred wagons. Our subject received his education and was reared in the Golden State. He mined with his father and in July, 1871, he went to Nevada with cattle and later returned to California. He followed handling stock and butchering for five years, and in 1886 came to the Snake river. He did placer work and was successful, and on February 3, 1887, he landed in Murray with his brother, John. They cleaned up a mile and a half of ditch and ran a pipe for twenty days and cleaned up with nine dollars and fifty cents. Then they went to Libby creek excitement, and later we see our subject in Thompson Falls. He worked in a sawmill there until 1889, and then went to Murray and took part with Dustin and Cunningham in placer mining. He also leased the Louisville hotel, and here his family operated while he was with the placer company, and for a number of years the mine did well. All told, the mine turned out about fifty thousand dollars and then it was sold to the Coeur d'Alene Mining Company. Since then Mr. Bacon has devoted himself to placer mining and prospecting and has been favored with varying success. He has four brothers,—John H., William, Jesse, Frank and one sister,—Mary M., deceased.

In Tuscarora, Nevada, Mr. Bacon married Miss Nellie L., daughter of William and Elizabeth Combs, natives of Missouri. The father is deceased, and the mother lives in Eugene, Oregon. Mrs. Bacon has two sisters,—Alice, wife of John H. Bacon; Elfreda, wife of George Watkins. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bacon,—Effa, born January 23, 1882; Grace, born February 28, 1884. The latter is attending school in Eugene, Oregon.

CHARLES F. DICKINSON. This substantial and thrifty agriculturist dwells on his estate seven miles southeast from Fraser, which he took as a homestead on March 28, 1892, it being then one mass of wild woods. He has cleared a portion and made a comfortable and tasty home, while he is also one of the influential and leading men of this section.

Charles F. Dickinson was born in Cattaraugus county, New York, on August 22, 1850, being the son of James W. and Lydia (Jones) Dickinson, natives of New York. The father served in the Civil war as one of the Iowa regulars, and was on the memorable march to the sea. He died in February, 1885. Charles was reared in New York until ten, when the family came to Iowa, where he finished his education and toiled on the farm until 1884. In that year he went to Nebraska, where he dwelt eight years, and from that place Mr. Dickinson came to his Idaho home. In addition to his general farming he raises some stock, and does dairying. Mr. Dickinson has one brother, Sylvester P., and one sister, Levina, both married and living in Iowa. Mr. Dickinson is a Democrat, and always shows a good intelligence and interest in the affairs of the land.

On June 17, 1875, at Van Meter, Iowa, Mr. Dickinson married Miss Velma N., daughter of Loren L. and Maria (Sylvus) Thomas, natives of Ohio. The father was in Company A, of the Iowa Volunteers, and served for two years, being finally discharged on account of failing eyes. He died in Iowa in July, 1901. The mother was married in Ohio, and died when Mrs. Dickinson was fourteen years old. Mrs. Dickinson was born on March 27, 1856, and has three brothers and two sisters,—Leroy D., Isaac W., Franklin D., Mary J. Lang, Harriet A. McBride, all in Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Dickinson there have been born three children,—Albert D., born March 16, 1876, now dwelling on some unsurveyed land close by, and a young man of excellent principles; Hattie M., born November 29, 1879, now attending business college in Spokane and giving promise of a successful future; Gertie E., the youngest of the family, born August 16, 1882, and now at home, although she has successfully passed the examination for teacher's certificate and intends to take up that worthy labor soon.

BURD P. POTT was born in Pottsville, Pennsylvania, on March 2, 1831, the son of Abraham and Elizabeth (Christian) Pott, natives of Berks county, and Reading, Pennsylvania, respectively. The father was one of the first to mine and handle anthracite coal. He built the first railroad in the United States, it being in 1827, and located at the head of navigation on the Schuylkill river and went up Black valley three-fourths of a mile. It was utilized in hauling supplies to the mines and the coal down, and horses were the power used. He discovered coal when digging for a foundation to a grist mill and later discovered many fine mines and owned fourteen thousand acres of coal land. The value of the mineral was not then known and our subject's father, the son of the gentleman of whom we are speaking, mined it after his father's death. The family lived at Valley Forge and General Washington made his headquarters at the house of our subject's grandfather. He owned a furnace and foundry and made cannon balls for the patriots. He was a wealthy man in those days and Pottsville, Pennsylvania, was named after him. He was one of the first iron manufacturers in the United States and some of his work is on exhibition in the Pennsylvania museum, and his name, John Pott, 1755, with a German quotation, is cast thereon. Our subject's father was born in Oley, Pennsylvania, in 1790, and died in 1882. The mother of our subject was descended from a prominent old Dutch family and she died in 1885, aged eighty-four. Our subject lived in Pennsylvania until twenty-one, gaining a good education and learning the blacksmith trade. He crossed the plains in 1852 to Sacramento and wrought at his trade in Carson, a placer camp. Nine months later he was on Poverty bar, on the south fork of the American river, mining, then went to the redwoods and wrought in a sawmill, then came to southern Oregon in 1855. In 1857 he was lieutenant of the militia under Captain O. T. Root and served seven months in the Second Rogue river war. Following this he worked at his trade in Kirbyville, Oregon, then returned home and married and came to Oregon in 1858, settling in the Rogue river valley until 1863. Then he came to Umatilla county and in 1864 went to Boise, engaging in the merchandise business. Thence he went east with his family and visited and incidentally bored thirteen oil wells and sunk twenty-five thousand dollars in an unsuccessful search. He struck one of the best gas wells but did not profit from that. He worked at his trade again and in 1868 prospected for coal on the Union Pacific route. He found lignite but no coal. He worked at his trade in each town as the road progressed until they hung three men on a beam of his cabin without his consent, then he returned to Fremont, Nebraska, and wrought at his trade. Next we see him in Pennsylvania, then in the Black Hills in 1876, in the Big Horn excitement and in 1878 in Bozeman. Here he wrought for the government for three years and a half in the shop and in 1884 he went to Thompson Falls, Montana. He grubstaked a prospector who located the Morning and Evening mines in the Mullan district. In August of that year Mr. Pott came on to look after his property. They put in a tunnel eighty feet, took out five hundred pounds of chloride and shipped it to Butte. This went one hundred and fifty-eight ounces to the ton. After paying expenses they had two cents left and stopped work. Mr. Pott went to Butte, came back in the spring and prospected and discovered the first galena on Chloride hill. He sent for his partners and they went in one hundred feet but discovered nothing. They bonded for fifty thousand dollars with Walker brothers in Salt Lake City but the death of one of the brothers put off the deal. Owing to disagreements of different partners, there being eight, the property was never sold although bonded many times. Finally Warren Hussey bought the Evening claim outright, securing each man's share separately. Our subject realized eight thousand dollars. Hussey bonded the Morning claim for twelve thousand dollars and took up the bond when due. He sold to a Milwaukee company and they sold to the present owners. Our subject located the Independence which he sold for twenty thousand dollars in 1899. In January, 1903, he sold a fourth of the Lucky Friday for seven hundred and fifty dollars, which disposes of all of Mr. Pott's interest in mines. He has two residences and business property in Wallace, business property and his residence in Mullan besides other property. He has three brothers, John, Zaccur, William and one sister, Mrs. Sarah Deyo.

On March 15, 1858, Mr. Pott married Miss Lydia, daughter of John and Esther Jones, natives of Breckenshire, south Wales. The father was a noted mechanic and superintendent of large works in Pottsville. This wedding occurred in Pottsville and Mrs. Pott was a native of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Pott has one sister, Mrs. Mary McGinnis. Mr. Pott is a member of the K. P. and his wife belongs to the Episcopalian church. Mr. Pott is a Republican and is always active in the campaigns. He was coroner in southern Oregon, postmaster at Mullan, also justice of the peace and notary here and has several times been to the conventions. Mr. Pott has retired from the more arduous activities of life and is enjoying the competence that his industry and sagacity have gotten in the business world.

HOWARD T. TUPPER is a man who has won the esteem and confidence of all who know him, while he has also commanded the respect of every one who has the pleasure of his acquaintance, being a man of sterling integrity and uprightness, which he has manifested in an industrious career among the residents of southern Shoshone county.

Howard T. Tupper was born in Kalamazoo county, Michigan, on September 28, 1863, being the son of Nelson and Lorena (Lockwood) Tupper, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. He was raised in Michigan until school days began and then the family migrated to Kansas, where he completed his education and then went to work with his brother in renting land which they farmed. This continued for about nine years, when he came to his present place, about three and one-half miles southeast from Fraser. He took his land by homestead, 1888 being the year of his settling here. He has fifty acres cleared and the balance is good timber. Mr. Tupper also owns half of another quarter section with his brother. He does a general farming business and handles some stock. Mr. Tupper has the following brothers and sisters: Chauncy and Byron, on the Potlatch; Adell, wife of John W. Clark, near Weippe; Adelia, wife of Samuel C. Feed; Alice, wife of Milo L. George; Ellen, wife of John S. Harrison, a farmer in Michigan; Edwin, at Ypsilanti, Michigan.

On December 20, 1893, Mr. Tupper married Miss Minnie E., daughter of James T. and Sarah (Burrows) Ferree, natives of Illinois and England, respectively, and now living on the Lolo, near by. Mrs. Tupper was born in Nebraska, in December, 1873, and she has two brothers and one sister, Edgar, Ernest, Dora, all at home. Mr. Tupper and his wife have been blessed by the advent of three children, named as follows: Warren, Otto and James. Mr. Tupper is a man of intelligence and reliability and is prospered in his labors, because of his thrift, industry and wisdom.

MOSES S. SIMMONS deserves much credit for the enterprise and energy manifested in his labors for the development and upbuilding of the Murray country and he stands today one of the prosperous mine owners and operators of the section. Moses S. Simmons was born in Georgia, on April 18, 1844, the son of Charles and Hulda (Williamson) Simmons. The father came from a prominent North Carolina family which did noble work in the Revolution. He died in Georgia, in 1890. The mother was a native of Georgia and died in 1861. Our subject was educated in his native place and in 1872 went to Utah and did mining and also handled a mercantile business. He prospered for ten years there and then went to Montana, but in a couple of years was back in Salt Lake City. He took up the sheep business there for a year and in 1887 came to Murray. Since that time Mr. Simmons has devoted himself to mining with an interest and skill that have wrought a gratifying success and placed him among the leaders of the camp. He is associated with his brother Adam T. and they have bought and sold much ground in the placer line as well as handling considerable property in quartz. They, with David Avery, own the Bear Gulch group, the Bald Mountain group and much other promising property. In 1896 Mr. Simmons was elected county commissioner and for three successive terms he served in that office upon the invitation of the people at the polls. Mr. Simmons did excellent service and won for himself the confidence and approval of all substantial people of the county. He has always been an active Democrat but in one of the campaigns he also received the Populist vote. Mr. Simmons has one brother besides the one with him, Vestal L. His brother, Adam T., is a single man and resides with our subject in Murray. They are both keen, substantial mining men of worth and good standing. Mr. Simmons has two sisters, Ophelia Duncan, Ella Woodliff.

In North Carolina, on May 22, 1899, Mr. Simmons married Miss Frazier Thorne, a native of North Carolina. She died in Murray in 1901, aged thirty-nine. She was a woman of noble qualities and was beloved by all. She left one child, Ray, who is a bright boy.

ETHELBERT W. SWAILS, who is doing a good business as millwright and builder, is one of the leading business men of Murray and is of excellent standing among all. He was born in Keokuk county, Iowa, on August 25, 1865. His parents were natives of Ohio and pioneers of Iowa. The father enlisted in the second year of the Rebellion and served in the railroad repair shops in Marshall, Tennessee. He had three brothers in active service, one, Darius, carries a bullet in his head yet. The father died in Iowa, in 1901.

The mother lives in Iowa now. Our subject was reared in Sigourney, Iowa, and received a good education from the graded schools. When eighteen he entered his father's planing mill, and also learned the trade that he is now following. In 1887, he went to Kansas and then on to Denver, where he followed his trade for seven years. October, 1893, marks the date when he landed in Murray and since that time he has continued here with good success in his endeavors. He owns a fine cottage home and also a good shop and other out buildings. He is interested in the Daisy claims and in the Granite creek lead and silver proposition. Mr. Swails also has stock in the Granite Alley Company and other interests. He does millwright work all over the Coeur d'Alene country and is known as a skillful and substantial tradesman. Mr. Swails has four brothers: Loyd A., David, James, Joseph and two sisters: Laura Rishel, Antoinette Mants.

On December 25, 1894, in Spokane, Washington, Mr. Swails married Miss Mamie Kane, whose parents were natives of Ireland. The father now lives in Brookville, but the mother died in 1892. Mrs. Swails was born in Pennsylvania and has one brother and three sisters, William, Delia Moody, Katie Widen, Nellie. Two children are the fruit of this marriage, Lloyd E., born July 26, 1896; Mary L., born June 2, 1899. Mr. Swails has been school director for two terms and is a popular officer.

CHARLES W. HARTMAN. A prosperous farmer and well known business man, whose place, familiar alike to prospectors and tourists, lies twelve miles east from Weippe, on the Musselshell, and is both a commodious farm place and a stopping place for the people mentioned. Mr. Hartman also does a good business in the grocery line and in outfitting prospectors. He handles much stock and does dairying, while his cattle are of the thoroughbred Durham breed, and the entire premises and various businesses transacted manifest thoroughly the ability and enterprise of the proprietor.

Charles W. Hartman was born in Baden, Germany, on March 31, 1865, being the son of Leopold and Sophie (Grichman) Hartman, natives of Baden, Germany. The father came with his family to the United States in 1867 and now lives at Falls City, Nebraska. The mother died in Falls City, Nebraska, about 1892. Our subject was raised in Wisconsin, where the family lived the first six years in the United States and then they all moved to Nebraska. Charles gained his education in both these places and in March, 1887, he started out for himself. His first trip was to Spokane, whence he went to Montana for one year and, then returned to Spokane for six years. In April, 1894, he was found in Bonners Ferry, Idaho, and thence in 1896 he came to his present place, which he took as a homestead. One hundred acres are meadow and the balance timber. Mr. Hartman is near the famous Lolo trail and the regions adjacent to his premises are noted for excellent game as is the Musselshell for its abundance of trout.

Mr. Hartman has two brothers and four sisters, Fred, in Falls City, Nebraska; Henry, in Spokane; Mary, wife of Frank Garwick, in Falls City; Louisa, wife of August Zimmerman, in Spokane; Sophie, wife of Albert Kuhlman, in Falls City; Annie, wife of Wilhelm Zimmerman, also in Falls City. Mr. Hartman and his wife are members of the German Lutheran church and in politics, he is a Republican.

At Spokane, on April 17, 1894, Mr. Hartman married Miss Lena, daughter of Gustav and Frederika (Zander) Hertel. The father was a native of Saxony, served in the Austrian war of 1866 and the Franco-Prussian war, came to the United States in 1880, and now lives in Lincoln county, Washington, and owns twelve hundred acres of wheat land. The mother was born in Prussia, was married in Saxony and is still living in Lincoln county. Mrs. Hartman has two brothers and five sisters, Gustav, in Princeton, Idaho; Alfred, at Edwall, Washington; Ida, wife of Charles Shy, in Kansas; Annie, wife of Andrew C. Johnson, in Edwall; Freda, Lizzie and Ella. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hartman; Clara, Albert, William and John.

JOHN H. FOSS, one of the leading mining men of the Coeur d'Alene country, is located at Mullan and is eminently deserving of representation in the history of this county since he is a man of personal worth and ability, has wrought with sagacity and energy to build up and bring to the front this section, and is now one of the leading promoters of mining interests in the state and is operating throughout the northwest.

John H. Foss was born in Norway, January 7, 1863, the son of Hans C. and Ingar (Hansen) Foss, natives of Norway where they now reside. The father is a mining man and a dealer in lumber. Our subject was possessed of the native courage and energy of his race and early finished a good educational training and then devoted himself to mining. In 1881 he came to the United States and after six months in Wisconsin he came to Montana and went to mining. In that state and here he has spent his time since. Mr. Foss is a practical man and goes personally to the mountains and searches for the hidden veins, and in this he has been successful, and then also he has the ability to take the prospect and make of it a mine, ready for the investor. He came to Mullan in 1885 with his partner, George Hammond, now deceased, and formerly one of the substantial mining men of this section. Mr. Foss has prospected these regions, located properties and developed the same and has made some excellent sales of these properties. He is at present interested in some copper properties in the Monte Cristo district in the Cascades, the Alice, Mayflower and the White Pine group, with H. J. Rice, treasurer of Shoshone county. Mr. Foss has three brothers, Peter H., Christian C., Michael.

On December 5, 1890, at Buffalo, New York, Mr. Foss married Miss Alice C., daughter of Abraham and Katherine Hammond, both deceased. She has three brothers, Abraham, Henry, Edward, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Kelly. To Mr. and Mrs. Foss two children have been born, George and Henry, aged eleven and six respectively. Mr. Foss is prominently allied in fraternal associations, being past workman of the A. O. U. W., a member of the W. W. and of the Elks. He is a stanch Republican and always takes an active part in the campaigns and is a familiar and influential figure in the conventions. He and his wife are members of the Catholic church.

PETER E. PETERSON is one of the finest specimens of physical perfection that one is able to find, being a man of strong constitution and having developed himself in a first class manner. He is at the present time owner of a good estate, four and one-half miles southwest from Weippe, where he does diversified farming and raises stock.

Peter E. Peterson was born in Sweden, on April 21, 1861, being the son of Peter and Johanna (Pierson) Peterson, natives also of Sweden. The father came to Quebec, Canada, in 1880, with his family, and thence to Minnesota. He died on April 10, 1803, aged seventy-two. His widow died October 15, 1893, aged seventy-two. These deaths occurred at Weippe. Our subject was educated in Sweden and after coming to Minnesota attended school for a short time to learn the English language. In 1888 he came to Spokane, his parents joining him later. He worked in the C. & C. mill for four years, and during this time came to Weippe. At once he was struck with the country, it being so much like his native land. Returning to Spokane for a few weeks, he then came and filed on his present place, to which he soon removed his parents. Mr. Peterson has three sisters: Carrie, wife of Charles Dahl, a gardener in Spokane county; Signa, wife of Ole Berg, in Minnesota; Annie, wife of Andrew Hendrickson, near Weippe.

On October 31, 1900, Mr. Peterson married Miss Maria, daughter of Johann and Gustava (Johnson) Johanson, natives of Sweden. The father died in December, 1868, aged thirty-two. The mother still lives there. Mrs. Peterson was born in Sweden on June 10, 1868, and has one brother, Larson, residing on the Weippe. Five children have been born to this union: May, Signa, Lillian, Ellen, Flossie.

Peter Hanson, first cousin of Mr. Peterson, is a banker and capitalist in Minnesota, and having served as secretary of state with such acceptability, he was nominated this year for the office again, it being done by acclamation. He is a man of rare ability in financial matters and business generally, and has gained his commanding position by virtue of his own efforts and worth, being a self made man.

GEORGE S. LESHER, M. D., who is now handling the drug store in Murray, is one of the capable physicians of the county of Shoshone and although he has not been here as long as some of the pioneers, still his uprightness, his energy, and his native ability dominated by sound judgment and integrity have won for him an excellent standing among the people and a fine practice in his profession. He was born in Richland, Pennsylvania, on September 11, 1862, the son of William and Rebecca (Seibert) Lesher, natives of Pennsylvania and from old and prominent families. The father died on January 2, 1897, and had been for years engaged in wholesale lumber and grain trade. The mother died in 1877. Her ancestors, as her husband's, came to this country from Germany before the Revolution. Our subject received a good education in the city schools of Lancaster and then came to Minneapolis, Minnesota. He worked in the Harvester works, then was salesman in Sterling, Kansas, then in the foundry in Pueblo, and later we find him in the Risdon iron works in California, San Francisco. At the time of the Coeur d'Alene excitement he started thither but stopped in Spokane. He did saw milling, cut wood, went to Montana and cut five thousand posts and five thousand poles with his partner for a large cattle ranch. Then poisoned Coyotes and in the spring he helped drive about four hundred horses to Minnesota. He returned home rich in experience and with nearly a thousand dollars in his pockets. Mr. Lesher then settled to the study of medicine, which had been his life's dream. He soon matriculated in the medical department of the Pennsylvania University, the oldest medical college in the United States. This was in the fall of 1887 and in 1890 he received his degree of doctor of medicine. He practiced in his native state a time and then was appointed by the government as physician on the Ute agency, later was transferred to Arizona for the Apache reservation, then to the Red Lake Chippewas in Minnesota, then to the northern Cheyennes in Wyoming, and finally to the Flatheads in Montana. On January 3, 1902, Dr. Lesher landed in Murray and at once bought the drug store and turned his attention to the practice of medicine and since then he has done well. He is a public minded man and always in the lead in matters of improvement.

On March 26, 1888, at Richland, Pennsylvania, Dr. Lesher married Miss Catherine, daughter of William and Jemima (Strickler) Moore natives of Pennsylvania. They are from old Pennsylvania Dutch families and now dwell on the old homestead. Mrs. Lesher was born in Richland on May 8, 1870, and has one sister, Clara Brubaker. Dr. Lesher has one brother, William. They have one child, Rebecca, born October 15, 1889. Dr. Lesher is a member of the A. F. & A. M., of the R. A. M., of the K. T. and of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

WILLIAM COUMERILH is at present a member of the firm of Buchanan & Company, hardware and furniture merchants of Mullan. He is also a mining man and a mining engineer. He was born in Detroit, Michigan, on December 14, 1874, the son of John Coumerilh. The father was a native of France, being born and raised in the Pyrennes. When eighteen he came to Cuba and there learned the English language. He had been educated for the priesthood in his native country. He was an accomplished linguist and was interpreter for Commodore Vanderbilt when he toured Mexico and the West Indies. He paid especial attention to mining and was a thorougly versed man in all the intricacies of that vast industry. He was on the coast in early days and participated in the various stampedes of mining excitements, was in the Pioche run and pulled his toboggan into Eagle City at the outset of the rush. He located in Murray and worked the Golden Chest successfully for nine years. Mr. Coumerilh was one of the most prominent mining men and operators in the entire Coeur d'Alene country and was well known, while his standing was the very best, being a man of integrity. He died on January 15, 1896, aged fifty-four years. He was treasurer of Shoshone county for six years and in fraternal relations was past master of the Masons and past noble grand of the I. O. O. F., and past workman of the A. O. U. W. Our subject has one sister, Cora, in San Francisco. He was reared in the Black Hills and in the Coeur d'Alene country and was liberally educated in the public schools and in the state mining school of Rapid City, South Dakota. In addition to this, Mr. Coumerilh was constantly associated with his father and received an invaluable training in practical working, which has placed him in a leading position in mining problems. He has followed mining in various sections and in 1901 he entered partnership with V. A. Buchanan and since then has given his personal attention to the operation of this business. Mr. Coumerilh is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, joining in 1895. In 1900 he was superintendent of the Cumberland mine, resigning the same for his present business.

On May 31, 1896, Mr. Coumerilh married Miss Laura Mitchell at Billings, Montana. Her parents are deceased. She has two brothers and two sisters: Burt, Robert, Mrs. Charles Buell,, Mrs. Walter Smith. Two children have been born to bless this household: John W., five years old; Genevive, aged eighteen months.

LOUIS A. SCHLESINGER is one of the leading young mining men of the Murray country, and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant an epitome of his career in this connection. He was born in Oakland, California, on September 15, 1879. The son of Louis and Julia A. (Stevens) Schlesinger. The father was born in Liverpool, England, ran away from home when thirteen and came as a stowaway to New York, landing there penniless. He married when eighteen and soon had made a fortune of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. He operated with Jay Gould and Fiske, and gave Fiske his first start as a peddler. Later he came to California (this was in the sixties) and did a printing business. He has returned to the East since then and still lives. The mother was born in Iowa and is still living. Our subject was reared in Oakland and San Francisco and educated in those cities. He did printing for some time and then wrought in a hotel, and when he was eighteen he married and spent one year on the bridal tour. He then came to Murray, landing here in March, 1901. He took the secretaryship of the Prager Mining Company, Limited, and since that time he has continued in this department. He is one of the stirring men of the camp and is possessed of good ability and uprightness. Mr. Schlesinger has one brother, Wallace.

At San Francisco, California, on May 16, 1900, Mr. Schlesinger married Miss Ruby H., daughter of Lewis Prager, mentioned in this work. She was born near Portland on January 11, 1880. Mr. and Mrs. Schlesinger are popular residents of Murray and enjoy the best of standing among all. He is a member of the K. P.

JOHN H. NEWBURY is a well and favorably known mining man of Mullan and he is entitled to be represented among the early pioneers of this country and is one of the real builders of the county. He was born in Ohio on May 5, 1861, the son of Joseph B. and Mary A. (Thornbury) Newbury, natives of New York state and Richmond, Indiana, respectively. On both sides of the house the ancestors have been patriotic Americans, who have shown their love of country by arduous and faithful service in all the struggles through which the young nation was called to go. The paternal ancestors came in the persons of two brothers to the new world in 1659, and they allied themselves with the interests of the colonists, and the family has been stanch Americans since. Our subject's great-grandfather fought in the Revolution, his grandfather took part in the struggle of 1812 and the father and one son participated in the Civil war, enlisting in April, 1862, in Company I, Seventy-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered out at the close of the war in Washington, D. C. His son, Abel T., was in the war also. The mother of our subject comes from an old Quaker family and her grandfather was a patriot in the Revolution and her father in the war of 1812. He also was a noted frontiersman and associated with Daniel Boone, Kenton and other Kentucky pioneers. Mr. and Mrs. Newbury are now living in White Sulphur Springs, Montana, and if they live until September 15, 1903, they will celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding day.

Our subject was reared in Ohio and educated in the district schools and when fifteen went to the Black Hills, and then spent four years in traveling about, visiting different states and territories. In 1880 he was in Montana, mining and freighting, and January 1, 1884, he came to Eagle City. In April, 1885, he went to Helena, remaining until 1886, when he came to Mullan, and here he has made his home since that time. He has two brothers, Abel T., Charles B., and three sisters, Mrs. W. H. Sutherland, Mrs. F. C. Jones, Mrs. F. E. Lee.

On August 27, 1884, Mr. Newbury married Miss

Frances J., daughter of Frederick C. and Hester (Vertreese) Gremm. Mr. Gremm is an architect in Helena, Montana. Mrs. Gremm is deceased. Three children have been born to this union, William G., Ray E., Joseph B. Mrs. Newbury has four sisters, Mrs. James J. Gibbons, Mrs. Charles G. Stubbs, Mrs. M. Christen, Mrs. F. Wilcox. Mrs. Newbury is a member of the Baptist church. Mr. Newbury is a Republican and has been delegate to several county and state conventions. He is at present president of the Gremm Mining Company, which property was located on August 25, 1886.

BRIDGET GAFFNEY is the widow of Patrick Gaffney and the daughter of Bernard and Mary (Martin) Gaffney. She was born in September, 1833, in Ireland, and came to Boston in 1851 with her parents, who shortly returned to Ireland. She followed the art of the seamstress in Boston until 1859, when she came to San Francisco, via the Isthmus, where she remained until 1867, when she came to Pierce with her husband and one son, Frank. Mr. Gaffney did placer mining in the Pierce district and also followed the butcher business. About 1880 Mr. Gaffney took a pre-emption on the Weippe and later a homestead, and then he bought a quarter. Mrs. Gaffney has deeded one-quarter of this to her son William, mentioned in this volume. Mr. Gaffney raised stock, as high as two hundred head at one time, and was a very prosperous and a prominent citizen. He was a native of Sligo, Ireland, and was interested with Mrs. Gaffney's father in a brewery there. He came to California in 1858 and mined until 1861, and then went to Pierce in the first excitement, which was the fall of 1861, and then he was also in the Florence stampede. In the summer of 1862 he went to Montana and mined two years in Virginia City. He was one of twenty who first explored Yellowstone Park. Then he returned to California, and thence went to Honduras, and in 1866 he was again in California, and January of that year Mrs. Gaffney was married to him. Then they came to Pierce, as stated, and also Mr. Gaffney was in the foremost part of the Cœur d'Alene rush. He died on July 21, 1896, beloved by all and a highly respected and esteemed man, in whom all recognized a person of sterling worth and one whose labors more than any one other individual gave the early schools to the Pierce district and stimulated development and progress. Mrs. Gaffney has no near relatives besides her children. Mr. Gaffney was on Camas prairie at the time of the Indian outbreak in 1878. His son Frank was with him, and they were expecting to fetch stock. A friendly Indian assisted him to get started home and took him to the top of the hill above Kamiah and then returned. While they were at Kamiah they saw Indians sporting themselves in war gyrations on the hill and the friendly ones hurried Mr. Gaffney on. He got to his home at 4 p. m. and soon all Pierce was deserted and every one was in the hills. General Howard is said to have preached to the Indians at Kamiah when these bands were on the Weippe, killing all the whites they could find and stealing stock and burning property. Later the troops pursued and captured them. As soon as the scare was over the people came back from the hills and built fortifications, having been in the hills for two weeks. Friendly Indian women and one man warned the citizens of Pierce, and thus they escaped. The outbreak commenced at Whitebird, on the Salmon river, and previous to this straggling Indians, under pretense of friendliness, came to Pierce to get whisky and steal stock, and after the raid had begun the large band came and camped on the prairie at Weippe. General Howard's actions of dilatoriness while the Indians were committing their depredations caused great bitterness among the people.

Mrs. Gaffney has borne her part in all these hardships of life on the frontier in a noble and courageous manner and has been instrumental in doing much to assist the advancement of the country and build it up. She is now enjoying the golden years of her life in the possession of the competence which her labor provided, and is beloved by all.

THOMAS B. REED, of the firm of Reed & Company, is the manager and head of the large general merchandise establishment which the company owns in Pierce. Mr. Reed is handling the largest business in the town, is a popular and capable man and understands the art of conducting a successful business, wherein his own talents have wrought the gratifying progress that has been and is his to enjoy.

Thomas B. Reed was born in Alexander, Missouri, on October 14, 1876, being the son of James W. and Kate (Foley) Reed. The father was a native of Kentucky, a prominent attorney and died March 12, 1887, aged forty. His ancestors were of Scotch and English extraction. The mother of our subject came from Ireland, her native country, to the United States when she was nine years of age. She was married in Missouri and now lives in Boulder, Colorado. Thomas was reared in Missouri and Keokuk, Iowa, gaining his education from the common schools and the St. Marks College at Keokuk. At the age of nineteen he took associated press work in St. Louis and followed it perseveringly for four years. Then nine months were spent as receiver of the Enoch Book & Stationery Company. After that, he came to Idaho and soon entered the employ of J. P. Vollmer at Uniontown, Washington, as a general merchandise salesman. One year in that capacity and he came to Pierce. He associated himself with a silent partner and opened a general merchandise establishment in Pierce and to the management and development of the business he has devoted himself with manifest wisdom and energy. He carries a stock of about ten thousand dollars and does a fine business especially in mining supplies. Mr. Reed is interested in some valuable quartz mines and also some promising placer properties. He has the Queen placer, the Dandy and Star quartz claims, also a number of claims on Deer creek, in Nez Perces county, and some property near Leadville, Colorado. Mr. Reed has one brother and three sisters: Charles H., a druggist in Denver; Margaret E., Julia E., Mary K. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the United Artisans, while in politics he is a Democrat.

THOMAS B. REED.

On June 25, 1902, at Lewiston, Mr. Reed married Miss Gracie E., daughter of August and Eliza S. (Mitchell) Pierstorff, natives of Germany and New Jersey, respectively. The father came to the United States when twelve and died October 26, 1895, aged fifty. He served in Company B, Eleventh Wisconsin, in the last year of the Civil war and there was so broken in health that he never recovered. The mother of Mrs. Reed lives in Lewiston with her children. Mrs. Reed was born on November 26, 1879, and his three brothers and four sisters, John E., Marion A., Willard A., Laura A., Vinnie I., Nola I., Mary, wife of Frank Eastman, in Westlake, Idaho. Mr. and Mrs. Reed are popular and leading members of society and are held in high esteem by all while they enjoy the fellowship of hosts of friends.

ALBERT OTTO, a mining man of Murray, was born in West Virginia on March 1, 1844, the son of Levi and Fernandes (Wolf) Otto, natives of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and descended from old and prominent Dutch families of the former state. The father died September 15, 1872, aged forty. Our subject was born and reared in West Virginia and Maryland until thirteen, and in 1857 went to Missouri with his parents. He lived there until seventeen, and then enlisted in Company I, Twenty-first Missouri Infantry, and served until February 6, 1865, when the regiment was all mustered out. In 1879 Mr. Otto came to Montana and worked at the carpenter trade. In February, 1884, he came to Eagle City, then went to Missoula, later was in Myrtle camp and since then he has given his attention to mining and prospecting. Mr. Otto was one of the owners of the famous Mother Lode claim and after they had taken out three hundred thousand dollars of ore they sold it for twenty thousand dollars. Mr. Otto is interested in many mining ventures and also in the town-site. He has a cozy cottage home and other property. In 1892 he bought the Louisville Hotel and three years later sold it to William Wylie. Mr. Otto was deputy sheriff in 1892, under Sims, and in 1899, under Sutherland. He is now road supervisor. Mr. Otto has four brothers, Edmund, Israel, Franklin, William, and two sisters, Mary Harned and Fanny Fordner.

On October 9, 1895, Mr. Otto married Mrs. Minnie Thompson, born in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, on October 13, 1852, the daughter of Henry and Mary (Odell) Reynolds, natives of St. Rock, Canada, and Paris, France, respectively. The father died on March 28, 1893, and the mother died when she was aged eighty-three. Mrs. Otto has one brother, Henry. Mrs. Otto is a member of the Rebekahs and has been president of the State Assembly. At that time she was presented with a valuable jewel by admiring friends, who appreciated her excellent work in putting new life in the order and in organizing new lodges. She is a public speaker of power and eloquence, and is one of the leading ladies of the state. Mr. Otto is a member of the A. O. U. W., the I. O. O. F. and the G. A. R. Mrs. Otto has one daughter by her former marriage, Mable, wife of Paul F. Smith, of Wallace. Mrs. Otto is a graduate of the Baptist University at Madison, Wisconsin, and received her degree with especial honors, which she had won.

ROBERT T. HORN is surely to be classed with the earliest pioneers in the Murray country, and since the first days he has been one of the leading men and one of the promoters of the various properties, while his skill, energy and wisdom have resulted in much good to the district, and have made him one of the prominent men of the Cœur d'Alene country. He was born in Gardner, Maine, on September 14, 1850, the son of James and Sarah (Noyes) Horn. The father was born at sea, but his ancestors came to this continent on the Mayflower and were seafaring people. Our subject's great-grandfather on his father's side was in the Revolution and died August 3, 1861, in Maine. The mother was a native of Vermont and her grandfather was a patriot in the War of Independence. Her father was in the war of 1812 and also in the Blackhawk under Lincoln. She died July 4, 1872, in Maine. Our subject was reared in his native place and received a good education from the public schools and higher institutions. When nineteen he was riding the range in Texas, then operated three years as assistant superintendent for the St. Louis Beef Company. Then he visited the home place, and in 1879 came west to Washington and was timber inspector for the Northern Pacific from Wallula to Helena. In 1883 Mr. Horn came up the river to the site of Eagle, which was not there then. He prospected in all this region and found much of the ground located by Prichard, Boblett, Fisher and Ives. In September of the year 1883 our subject assisted to lay out Hayes City, named from the packer, Samuel Hayes, and about twenty prospectors engaged in the work. Another crowd came in from the Black Hills and they insisted on changing the name to Eagle City. To avoid bloodshed, Mr. Horn consented, and the name was Eagle City. He also assisted in taking Mr. Prichard away so the others would not hang him for taking up so much ground. Mr. Horn and his partner, Alf Brile, of Spokane, sold the first claim in the district, it being the Golden Chest. It was sold for ten thousand dollars, and the Louisville Company bought it. They also sold the Euphemia and the Idaho, they being in the Golden Chest now. Our subject, Bill Keeler, Dick Wilson, now of the Mammoth, and Jack Fitzgerald, now in southern Africa, laid out the town of Murray and named it after George Murray, who located the land of the site. The land had been in litigation until the fall of 1902, when all was settled. In 1885 Mr. Horn located the town of Kellogg with Charles Sinclair and John M. Burke and he still owns an interest there. Mr. Horn is now manager of the Daddy mine, and with his partner, Mr. Copeland has various other valuable properties. Mr. Horn is one of the large tax-payers of the county and is a man of heavy property holdings all over the districts. He is a stanch Republican and has been prominent in the campaigns. He has three brothers, William, Bernard E., James C.

On October 22, 1897, Mr. Horn married Mrs. Kate Robinson, nee Williams, the wedding occurring in Davenport, Washington. She was born in Owego, New York, and her father was a native of the same place. He served during the entire Civil war and died in 1901. Mrs. Horn has three brothers, Robert F., John H., Fred. Mr. and Mrs. Horn are pleasant and affable people, have the confidence and good will of all and are of the best standing and prominent in social circles, as well as otherwise.

SAMUEL ELBEN. At the present time Mr. Elben is the owner and operator of the daily stage line between Greer and Pierce, which goes via Weippe and Fraser. This is a fine line and is handled in a skillful and wise manner by Mr. Elben. He has plenty of good stock, excellent rigs and does a thriving business. In addition to this Mr. Elben owns a farm, two miles southeast from Weippe, which is a valuable and well tilled estate. A detailed account of the interesting career of Mr. Elben will be quite in place in the history of Shoshone county.

Samuel Elben was born in the vicinity of Newark, Ohio, on November 30, 1865, being the son of Rufus and Isabel (Shaffer) Elben, natives of Ohio. The mother married a second time, her husband being Morgan Moates, a veteran of the Civil war. They live near Newark. Our subject was raised by his grandparents until ten and then worked out for the farmers until about 1890, receiving his education from the district schools during this time. In the year last mentioned he came to Spokane, where he remained one year variously employed. Then he went to the Big Bend country and later to Kittitas county, near Roslun, and mined for gold some. Two years were afterward spent in the Palouse country in the vicinity of Pullman, and then he came to the Weippe country and filed on a claim, but as it proved worthless for agricultural purposes, he relinquished to the government and then bought his present place, which is a valuable piece of land. Mr. Elben does a general farming business and handles some stock. He handled a sub-contract on the mail from Weippe to Pierce for four years, and then took the contract from the government to handle the mail as stated above, and he has done a fine business in the express and passenger traffic since. Mr. Elben has no full brothers and sisters.

On February 20, 1901, Mr. Eben married Miss Bertha, daughter of Harrison K. and Jennie (McLean) Vanartsdalen, natives of Philadelphia. They now live two miles west from Mr. Elben's place. Mrs. Elben was born near Columbus, Nebraska, on April 1, 1884, and she has one sister and two brothers, Eliza, Thompson, Isaac G. Mr. and Mrs. Elben were married at Pomeroy, Washington. They have one child.

JOHN W. CLARK. On the battlefield, fighting for his country, as well as in the battles of life, where he has always shown integrity and kindness, with generosity, the subject of this article has done worthily and is deserving of mention in the volume that would chronicle the leading citizens of the county of Shoshone.

John W. Clark was born in Wood county, Ohio, on November 2, 1844, being the son of Adam and Catherine (Wickard) Clark. The father was born in Pennsylvania, of Irish parents, served thirteen months in Company I., Second Missouri Cavalry, Captain A. E. Preston and Colonel Lewis Merrie. On April 24, 1901, this good man went to his final rest, aged eighty-two. The mother of our subject was a native of Ohio, and her parents of Pennsylvania. Her father was in the war of 1812 and died when he was seventy-seven. Our subject was reared in Michigan, whither his parents had removed when he was three years old. He studied in the winters in the district schools and labored in the summers. When seventeen he enlisted in Merrill's Horse Volunteers, which regiment was made up of recruits from Michigan, Ohio and Missouri, and was called the Second Missouri. This was the same regiment in which his father served, and he went in as his father came out. Nineteen months of this arduous service was given by Mr. Clark, and then he was honorably discharged. Following the war we have no record of his whereabouts. At the present time Mr. Clark is residing on his own place, two miles south from Weippe, and does a general farming and stock business.

On September 16, 1874, Mr. Clark married Miss Adell Tupper, daughter of Nelson and Lorena (Lockwood) Tupper, who are mentioned in this volume. This wedding occurred in Pottawattamie county, Iowa. Mrs. Clark has three brothers and sisters. To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born four children: Elizabeth C., wife of Samson Snyder; Howard T., residing near by; Minnie B., wife of Franklin Harrison, residing near by; Etta M., single and living at home. Mr. Clark is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Climax Lodge, No. 59, in Kalamazoo, Michigan. He also belongs to the G. A. R., Atlanta Post, at Platte Center, Nebraska.

JOHN C. FEEHAN, the manager of the Murray Mercantile Company, Limited, is one of the leading business men of Murray, and a man of good ability and standing. He was born in Iowa, June 24, 1866, the son of John H. and Julia P. (Brown) Feehan. The father was born in Zanesville, Ohio, as were his parents also. The ancestors came from Ireland. The father died April 21, 1898. The mother was born in Iowa, and lives there now. Her father was a prominent and influential man in Iowa. Her mother came from an old Virginia family named Gee. Four brothers were preachers. Our subject was raised in Iowa and educated there until 1890. In June of that year he arrived in Wardner and worked for George F. Crane & Company, and then was appointed postmaster, holding the same for three years. Then he came to Murray and did mining in the placers and later opened in the mercantile business. He started his present business in 1899 with the firm style of J. S. Feehan & Company. In 1900 it was merged as the Murray Mercantile Company, with our subject as manager, and since then he has continued in that capacity. Mr. Feehan is interested in mining ventures in various places and is a man of substantial qualities. He has one brother, Robert W., and four sisters, Alice, Mrs. Lizzie Abbie, Florence Rinehart, and Margaret Jackson. All are in Iowa.

On April 27, 1890, at Ann Arbor, Michigan, Mr. Feehan married Miss Hattie I. Ferguson. The father was a grain dealer and died in Iowa in 1883. The mother died when this daughter was young. Mrs. Feehan was born in Iowa August 1, 1866, and has one sister, Clara. One child has been born to this union, Muriel, born October 21, 1899, in Murray. Mr. Feehan is a member of the A. F. & A. M., of the K. P., and in political relations is associated with the Republicans. He has served as a delegate to the county and state conventions. Mr. Feehan is a pleasant and affable man, well liked by all and the recipient of a fine business patronage, because of his popularity and skill in his lines.

CHARLES HUCKELBERRY. Although the subject of this article has not been so long in this section as some, still he has demonstrated such real integrity and worth of character that he has a warm place in the esteem and good will of the entire community. He is a member of the Methodist church, and is a devoted supporter of the faith and is always found foremost in church work. He is an apt scholar in the word and is often found as a teacher in the class and Sunday school. His farm lies about two miles south from Weippe, and is a beautiful and valuable place. It consists of one-quarter section, one hundred and thirty acres of which is under cultivation. The balance is covered with timber. Mr. Huckelberry is a diversified farmer, and handles some stock also. He is industrious and skillful in his business and is one of the prosperous and substantial men of the community.

Charles Huckelberry was born in Clark county, Indiana, on September 30, 1852, being the son of Peter and Jerusha (Gibson) Huckelberry, natives of Clark county, Indiana. The father was born on January 25, 1825, and he died on May 15, 1899. His father was a native of Clark county, and his mother came from Pennsylvania. The mother of our subject was of Scotch extraction, and she died on September 15, 1880. Charles was reared in Indiana and educated in the district schools. After leaving school Mr. Huckelberry rented his father's farm for a time, and in 1876 he went west to Missouri and Kansas, where he did ranch work until 1881. Then he returned to Jeffersonville, Indiana, and worked in the car shops. In 1883 he went to Illinois, and on November 10, 1884, he came to Idaho. He settled near Troy, and during the time of his stay in Latah county, he filed on a homestead near Kendrick, which he traded for his present farm. This was on March 3, 1897, and since that time Mr. Huckelberry has been a resident here. He has one brother, George W., in Indiana. Mr. Huckelberry is a Democrat and as active as is consistent with his business affairs.

THAD C. RIDDLE, the well known and popular young attorney, who is now filling the office of probate judge with efficiency and acceptability, is one of the leading professional men of northern Idaho, and has manifested marked ability and erudition in the deep questions and intricacies of the law, while his integrity and uprightness are patent to all.

Thad C. Riddle was born in Kentucky on October 26, 1869, the son of George W. and Louise (Wiseman) Riddle, natives of Maryland and Kentucky, respectively. The father's ancestors were a prominent family that came with Calvert to Maryland. He died in Indiana in 1895, whither he had come when our subject was aged six. He enlisted at the first call in Company A, Forty-ninth Indiana Infantry, and was soon appointed adjutant and was made military superintendent of all railroads running out of Louisville, then was with General Grant in all of his battles from Ft. Donelson to Chattanooga, and in 1864 was appointed colonel of the One Hundred and Forty-fourth Indiana. He took part in the Shenandoah campaign, and was mustered out in August, 1865, having served throughout the entire war. The mother of our subject lives in Kentucky, and she is descended from an old and prominent Kentucky family, the grandfather coming there with Daniel Boone. Both grandfathers of our subject served in the war of 1812. Thad C. was raised principally in Indiana, and in 1887 he took his degree from Hartsville College, and then took up teaching and reading law. In the spring of 1890 he was admitted to the bar of Indiana, and in 1891 we see Mr. Riddle in Colfax, Washington, engaged in the legal profession. There and at Oakesdale he continued until 1898, when he came to Wardner, which was his headquarters until January, 1903, when he came to Wallace, having been elected as probate judge of the county, polling a majority of six hundren and ninety-six, being two hundred ahead of his ticket, the Republican. Judge Riddle has been active in politics and has made his influence known in the state and county conventions. He has one brother and three sisters: J. Morton, Mrs. Katherine Hughes, Mrs. Celestine Rainforth, Mrs. Nancy Tadlock.

On June 13, 1894, Judge Riddle married Miss Wenona, daughter of Harrison H. and Irene Selfridge, both well known Oregon pioneers. They crossed the plains in 1865 and now dwell in Spokane, where the wedding occurred. Mrs. Riddle was born in Eugene, Oregon. Admiral Thomas O. Selfridge, deceased, was a cousin of Mr. Selfridge. Mrs. Riddle was liberally educated in the classics and then received a special course in music under the tuition of Madam Capiana in New York. She is a popular teacher of vocal music in the Coeur d'Alene country, being skillful and of marked talent in this art. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Riddle: Katherine, aged six, and an infant unnamed. Judge Riddle is a member of the Eagles in Wardner, and he and his wife are communicants at the Episcopal church.

ANDREW T. SMITH is the efficient stage operator from Murray to Wallace, and he also owns the line. He is a man of pleasant ways, good spirit, and is well liked and esteemed by all. He was born in Iowa November 15, 1859, the son of William and Louisa (Miles) Smith. The father was born in Pennsylvania, served four years for his country in the Rebellion, languished in Andersonville's horrors until his health was broken, and in 1870 he died. The mother was born in Illinois, came to Iowa when two years old, after her husband's death married Aaron Webster, an old Califonria pioneer, and now lives near Olympia, Washington. Our subject was reared in Iowa until after the war, and then they went to Missouri until the father's death, when they returned to Iowa, and when he was seventeen he accompanied his mother, her mother, his two sisters and brother to Portland, and soon they went thence to Puget Sound. When twenty-one he left the parental roof and went to Dayton, Washington, and in the spring of 1885 he came to Delta, and thence soon to Murray. He mined and prospected and drove stage, and in 1892 bought an interest in the line. He operated it with Fred Barton, deceased, for three years, then sold out. Mr. Smith then did butchering for a time, mined in Republic, returned to Murray and commenced driving stage, and later he operated a stamp-mill with Mr. Burton. Then Mr. Smith secured the mail contract, and since has continued to operate the stage line as stated above. He has one brother, Elmer E., and two sisters, Emina Ruttidge, a widow, and Dora James.

At Wallace, on July 2, 1893, Mr. Smith married Miss Alice R., daughter of William J. and Susan (Tinker) Burton. The father was born in Delaware, and the mother was born at sea, as her parents were en route to Australia. Her parents were natives of England, and she remained in Australia until fifteen, then married. They came to the United States with considerable money from Australia, and in 1884 they landed in Murray, having come in over the Belknap trail, the family consisting of father and mother and four children. Mrs. Smith was born in Wisconsin on February 22, 1877, and she has two sisters, Mary Scrivens, Emma Beaty. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith: Mrytle, born November 11, 1896; Horace, born March 3, 1899. Mrs. Smith has three brothers: William, George E., Theodore. Mr. Smith is a member of the K. P.

DAVID F. GOODMAN is one of the well known miners and prospectors of Murray, and at the present time he is with the Coeur d'Alene Mining Company, and is also interested in some property with them. He owns one-third of the Nellie Potter group and one-third in the Bellamy and Arabia. David F. Goodman was born in Morgan county, Missouri, on June 12, 1853, the son of John F. and Elizabeth (Hunt) Goodman, natives of Missouri. The father is an elder in the German Baptist church in Morgan county, Missouri. He was one of the early pioneers in Cooper county, and his father was a companion of Daniel Boone. The ancestors were prominent in the Revolution and in Indian wars. The mother's ancestors were descended from the old Virginia Hunt family and were prominent. Our subject was reared in Missouri until fifteen. His mother died when he was one year old. When fifteen he enlisted in Company E, Nineteenth Kansas Cavalry, and for six months they were active in chasing a band of Cheyennes who had stolen two white women. They captured sixteen hundred of the savages and secured the women. The soldiers were about to take summary vengeance on the Indians when General Custer made a speech telling them that he would be held personally responsible for the Indians by the government, and this deterred the soldiers. The Indians were held in a stockade and in a quarrel they killed their chief. After this the regiment in which Mr. Goodman was disbanded, and he went to Colorado and mined and prospected from 1874 to 1894. Then he came to the Coeur d'Alene country. He has been in British Columbia, in various sections adjacent to this district, and of late he has continued here uninterruptedly. Mr. Goodman has the following brothers and sisters: William, James, Charles, Mary Lehman, Margaret, Clavrissa E., and one unnamed.

MILO L. GEORGE. The subject of this review is a man of energy and stability and has wrought with a skillful hand and wisdom in the development of the country, and is now one of the prosperous citizens and highly esteemed men of the community.

Milo L. George was born in Crawford county, Wisconsin, on June 24, 1857, being the son of Hiram S. and Amelia (Gooding) George, natives of Ohio. The father was a mining man, and went to Mexico to follow his occupation and has never been heard from. The mother lives with our subject. Milo L. was reared in Michigan and there received his education and labored in the woods until he was twenty-two.

Then he came to Kansas with his wife, and they took a claim, which proved worthless for agricultural purposes, and so it was sold to a cattle firm for grazing. Two years after that Mr. George worked on public works and then rented a farm for a time, and in 1888 he sold out and came to Idaho. Here he settled on his present place, three miles east from Fraser, which he secured as a homestead. He has improved it in good shape, and does a general farming business and raises stock. Mr. George has also bought other land and besides that which he works he has one million feet of the finest marketable timber. He has a forty some distance from his present home, which he intends to improve for the family residence, it being especially fitted for a home place. Mr. George has one brother, Frank F., living two miles south. Our subject is a member of the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 64, at Orofino. He is a Republican, and has been committeeman and is active in the realm of politics.

On September 28, 1878, Mr. George married Miss Mary A., daughter of Nelson Tupper, a native of Vermont, who died October 1, 1880, with cholera, being en route to Kansas from his eastern home. Mrs. George was born in Kalamazoo county, Michigan, on July 28, 1853, and she has four brothers and three sisters: Chauncey, residing near Leland; Howard, residing on the Lolo; Byron, on the Potlatch; Edwin, in Michigan; Adelia, wife of Samuel Teed, near our subject; Ellen, wife of John Harrison, in Michigan; Adelle, wife of John Clark, on the Weippe. Mr. George is one of the progressive and intelligent men of the community, and he and his wife are respected and highly esteemed.

BENJAMIN F. MORGAN is the amalgamator at the Golden Chest mine, near Murray, and is one of the substantial and esteemed mining men of the district. He was born in Marion county, Oregon, on May 11, 1857, the son of William W. and Lodema (Steen) Morgan. The father was born in New Jersey, crossed the plains in 1849, when forty years old, and settled near Salem, where he raised stock and did carpenter work. The mother was born in Indiana, crossed the plains with her parents in 1852, was married in 1854, and died in 1883. Our subject remained in Oregon until 1862, when the family came to Walla Walla, and the father was post carpenter for some time. Later they sold the farm owned on the state line and returned to the Willamette valley. In 1873 our subject came to Weston, and worked on the ranch two years, and then went to Columbia county, Washington, then Walla Walla county for five years in the sheep business. He and his brother were in this business also on the Snake. After that he settled near Colfax, and for five years tilled the soil, then sold out and operated a bakery and confectionery store in Olympia. Next we see Mr. Morgan in San Francisco on the street cars, then he returned to Weston in 1893, and in 1895 he came to Murray, and here he has devoted himself to mining and prospecting since that time. He has been in his present positon and others with this company for three years, and is one of the capable men in the company. Mr. Morgan has one brother, George W.

In 1883 Mr. Morgan married and he has one child, Ralph S. Mr. Morgan is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and of the Miners' Union. He is a Republican, and votes for the interests of the country. Mr. Morgan is interested in the Laura Bonanza and the Dick groups, and in the various properties on Summit Peak and Beaver districts and also in Bear Gulch.

JOHN T. MOLLOY. The home of Mr. Molloy is one of the finest spots to be found in Shoshone county. The view is commanding, the scenery is inspiring, and the beauty and grandeur of the entire setting is little short of perfection. The residence is a tasty and commodious structure of modern architecture, with spreading verandas, and is situated on a beautiful sloping bench, and one may stand and drink in the beauties of towering mountains, dense wild forests, harvest fields, fruit laden orchards, and the dotting residences of the farmers in the valley until the completeness and beauty of the scene leads one to forget the tranistoriness of time and sense. A detailed account of Mr. Molloy's life will be interesting.

John T. Molloy was born in Walla Walla on October 27, 1868, being the son of John and Ellen (Kehlker) Molloy. The father was a native of Ireland, and came to the United States when he was five years old. He followed the sea for years, then came to San Francisco in early days, and thence to Walla Walla in the sixties. He operated a restaurant in Walla Walla for three years, and when our subject was six months of age, he came to Pierce with his family. He carried mail to Pierce, was postmaster there, and was sheriff of Shoshone county for two years. He was interested in mining and a prominent man in the affairs of the county. At present he is living with our subject. The mother of Mr. Molloy was born in Ireland, came to the United States when young, was married in Walla Walla when young, and died October 27, 1876, in Pierce. Our subject was raised in Pierce until he was eight years old, and then at his present place he took up his abode until this date. He was educated in the district schools and under the tuterage of a private instructor. He lived with Peter Hourcade, who then owned the place where Mr. Molloy now lives. Mr. Hourcade and Mr. Molloy and William Gaffney went to hunt stock and in crossing the Lolo, which was raging in a flood, Mr. Hourcade's horse stumbled and he was lost in the torrent. Mr. Molloy being appointed administrator, he bought the property. In addition Mr. Molloy owns enough fine land to make a section and does a thorough farming business, besides handling from one to one hundred and fifty cattle and hogs, and horses in proportion. He is one of the substantial men of the section, has spent nearly all of his life here, and is well and favorably known over the entire district. Mr. Molloy is a member of the M. W. A. in Fraser, and he and his wife affiliate with the Catholic church. Politically he is a Democrat and active in the affairs of the county and state, being frequently called to the conventions of both.

On May 6, 1896, Mr. Molloy married Miss Viola Foster, whose parents are mentioned in this volume. One child has come to gladden the union. Her name is Gladys. Mr. and Mrs. Molloy are leading people in this section and have the hearty good will and esteem of all.

BERNT O. SKONNORD has manifested his deep interest in the various mining camps of the Coeur d'Alene and adjacent counties by development work to the amount of many thousands of dollars and he is now one of the clever and leading mining men of the section. He was born in Norway, on June 14, 1860, the son of Ole E. and Beatha (Hoff) Skonnord, natives of the same country. The father died there in 1900 and the mother passed away in 1895. Our subject was reared and educated in his native land and spent two years as salesman before coming to the United States in 1881. He followed clerking in Lacrosse, Wisconsin, then came to Missoula in the same line, where he worked for the Missoula Mercantile Company and Murphy-Warden Company, clerked in the hotel three years for Captain Rodgers and operated a restaurant some time. In 1884 he came to Eagle City over the Trout creek trail, started a hotel in Murray and placered in Lost creek. Next we see him mining in Phillipsburg, Montana. Then he traveled some and later settled in Elkhorn, engaging in the liquor business and also handling mining and wood. He also secured while there a large interest in the Mountain View group, which is believed to be one of the best, having all indications of making a first class producer. He lost two thousand and more cords of wood in a large fire, after which he went to Helena. In the fall of 1894 he came to Burke and opened the exchange Hotel. On April 29, 1899, Mr. Skonnord came to Wallace and this has been his headquarters since, although he has operated in various mines and prospects all over the country. He has numerous property and commercial interests, but while these occupy some of his attention he devotes most of his energies to mining and has some fine properties. He is sole owner of the Mountain View properties, a group of fine claims in Jefferson county, Montana, and has spent over fifteen thousand dollars on this property alone, in development work. In addition to this he has stock in the Humming Bird, is a director of the Trade Dollar, interested in the Echo, the Blue Grouse and the Oreana and many others. Mr. Skonnord is a member of the Redmen. He has the following brothers and sisters: Edward, Christian, Peter, Martin, Olaf, John, Hans, deceased, Maria Oleson, Mathia Quisgart, Olena Landaasen, Anna Skundburg. Mr. Skonnord is an independent thinker in political lines as in all others and he is always on the side of those measures which are for the general welfare and advancement. He is a man of ability and has done much for the development of the country.

CARL AMONSON certainly deserves to be ranked in the foremost rank of men who have done and are doing a grand work in bringing the famous Coeur d'Alene country to the front as the greatest camp of its kind in the world. He has brought to bear in this work a wealth of natural ability which has been reinforced with careful study not only of this country, but of all principles and knowledge yet brought out in mineralogy, geology and general mining science.

Carl Amonson was born in Seneca, Crawford county, Wisconsin, on April 19, 1865, the son of Ammon and Petrena (Knudson) Amonson, natives of Norway. The father came to the United States in 1857, kept hotel in Lacrosse, Wisconsin, until 1865, then farmed in Crawford county until 1883, then moved to Bridgewater, South Dakota, where he is a heavy real estate owner now. The mother came to the United States when nine years of age and now lives in Bridgewater. Our subject was educated in Wisconsin until seventeen, then took a course in a business college in St. Paul. On May 6, 1889, we find him employed in the Poorman in Burke and later he located land seven miles northeast from Spangle. After gaining title he went to Burke again, having sold his land, and worked for the electric company there. Next we see him in the real estate business in Butte, Montana, and after that he prospected in the Okanogan country. He clerked in the Tiger store, went to South Dakota, came back and entered the employ of Dan Cardoner, continuing there until the fall of 1898. He located the famous Hummingbird during this time and incorporated it in 1898, being president. Mr. Amonson also located and incorporated the Echo and is president. In the fall of 1899 he located the Pearl group and he is also interested heavily in many undeveloped properties. Mr. Amonson is one of the most practical and successful mine operators in the district and is recognized as such. He has three brothers, Oscar, Henry, Theodore, and two sisters, Julia and Anna. Mr. Amonson is a member of the K. P., the Redmen, the Foresters, the Miners Union, and the Scandinavian Brotherhood. He is a socialist and active in the interests of the country. Mr. Amonson is not satisfied with his attainments but is constantly devoting himself to hard study of the basic sciences treating of the earth, its formation, of mining and mineralogy and he is especially studying the Coeur d'Alene district and intends to devote himself to a continued operation here.

CHARLES SCHILL. The hardy life of the miner has but few attractions about it except the general freedom and also the consciousness that when one gathers the wealth from the wilds of the mountains it is not stained by the hardship of some down trodden creature whose forced toil has produced it. It comes fresh from the mint of nature placed there for the use of the intrepid and doughty ones who will face the hardships of the wilds to gain it. One of these worthy characters is named in the subject of this sketch, and it is with pleasure that we accord to him a representation in the annals of Shoshone county.

Mr. Schill was born in Baden, Freiberg Province, Germany, on February 1, 1868, being the son of Anton and Christine Schill. He was educated in his native land and at the early age of thirteen came with relatives to America. Three years were spent in Saint Paul, Minnesota, and then he came west to Spokane. He had mastered the intricacies of the carpenter trade and labored at that in Spokane, in the Palouse country and in Lewiston and vicinity, and then, in 1895, he came to Kendrick. He at once set about prospecting and two years later he discovered the Jericho mines, well known through this section. He has devoted considerable attention to placer mining, and at the present time he is sluicing about thirty miles east frm Kendrick and six miles east from the west line of Shoshone county. He is in what is known as the Burnt Creek mining district. We are pleased to grant mention to one of the sturdy toilers in this section of the county and it is due that we say that the class of men, whom our subject nobly represents, are they who opened this country and pushed back the gates for the less adventurous ones to follow. And all honor to those who take the pick and shovel and delve in the depths of the unexplored regions for the development of the same.

GEORGE A. MAITLAND. For more than a decade the subject of this article has been connected prominently in the business realm in the Coeur d'Alene country and at the present time he is owner and operator of a first class feed, hay, and grain store in Wallace where he does a thrifty trade and his standing among his fellows is first class.

George A. Maitland was born in Kilmarnock, Ontario, on August 28, 1862, being the son of James and Jane (McRitchey) Maitland. The father was a native of Canada and born of Scotch ancestry and his father served in the French and Indian war. The mother of our subject was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, and her father also served in the French and Indian war. Our subject graduated from the excellent high schools in Ontario and when nineteen came to Winnipeg, where he spent three years in the employ of a large contracting firm. Then he took a farm in Assiniboia Territory and after seven years' residence on it, he rented, but still owns it. He rode the range in Montana for three years then came to the Coeur d'Alene country in 1891. He wrought on the Northern Pacific for four years and then in the mines and in 1897 he opened his present business and since that time he has devoted his attention to building up the fine patronage that he now enjoys as the result of his careful business methods and kind treatment of all.

Mr. Maitland has the following named brothers and sisters: Fred H., Peter, John, James P., Rebecca McCaw, Sarah A. Fraternally Mr. Maitland is prominently associated, being a member of the A. F. & A. M., Shoshone Lodge No. 25; of the R. A. M., Chapter No. 9; of the Coeur d'Alene Commandery of the K. T.; of the El Katif temple of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. The first three are in Wallace but the latter is in Spokane. Mr. Maitland is an active and progressive member of the board of trade and interested in any measure that is for advancement of the general welfare.

CHARLES MANLEY. A continuous residence in the Coeur d'Alene country since the palmy days of Murray placers entitles the subject of this article to be classed as one of the early pioneers, while his progressive spirit, his energy, and his activity manifest him as one of the real builders of the section, and without doubt he is recognized one of the regular war horses of the Republican ranks, a leader and an enthusiastic supporter of these sound principles. Mr. Manley is personally a man of affability, a fine conversationalist, and possessed of a high sense of honor, while his stirring career from the gold dust days of California to the present time in all the prominent camps from Mexico to British Columbia has supplied him with a fund of experience and a store of reminiscences highly interesting and of great value.

Charles Manley was born in Maine on June 18, 1842, the son of Albert G. and Sarah H. (Hill) Manley, natives of Maine. The paternal grandfather of our subject was in the war of 1812, and the ancestors were famous in the American cause in the early days. The father died in 1879, aged sixty-five, at Elko, Nevada, having come to California, Tuolumne county, in 1852. The mother of our subject came from a family prominent in New England for many generations back, and hearty supporters of the colonists in the Revolution, and later in the war of 1812. Our subject was reared and educated in Skowhegan, Maine, and when through with the academy course he joined his father in California. This was in 1858, and he followed placer mining with him until 1864, then came to Boise, whither the father had preceded him. In 1865, our subject went to Montana and washed the golden sands and also held the position of deputy sheriff under Ed Lovelock, first sheriff of Meagher county. In 1869 Mr. Manley went to White Pine, Nevada, thence to Arizona, in government employ, both in carrying messages and furnishing game meat for the forces. Again we see him in White Pine, prospecting and mining. In 1884 he was with the first wave that rolled into Murray, and he sought the nuggets for a year there, then went to Elk creek with Joseph Sweeney, and located the Nellie Wood mine, which he sold later to James Wardner. Mr. Manley then became interested in a lead proposition, which he and his partner, P. Hyde, still own. It is on Elk creek, near Wardner. In 1895 Mr. Manley returned to Murray and bought the Louisville house, which was built in 1884, and after one year in operating the same, he leased it and came to Wallace. Mr. Manley has two brothers and one sister: Horace A., Mark, Mrs. B. W. Hapgood, a widow.

On December 6, 1888, Mr. Manley married Miss Minnie F. Grant in Spokane. Her father is deceased, and her mother lives near Boston. Mr. Manley is a member of the Elks, and is a popular and influential citizen. He is a stanch Republican, as stated, and is now sheriff of the county of Shoshone, and in discharge of his duties there is that same faithfulness, efficiency and honor manifested that characterize him in all his business career. He has been and is an influential figure in the county conventions, and is a man always laboring for the advancement and welfare of the community.

COLUMBUS B. FERGUSON, who at present is proprietor of the "Capital," is one of the well known business men of Murray, and is one of the old timers, being one whose labors assisted materially in constructing the trail into this country in the early days of 1884. Since that time Mr. Ferguson has always continued in the mining industry in this district more or less, and he is at the present time joint owner of a number of valuable and promising claims, as the group on Bear Top, those on Summit, a copper proposition on the north fork and a good mill site, while also he has dwellings and business property in Murray.

Columbus B. Ferguson was born in Wilkes county, North Carolina, on June 25, 1861, the son of Samuel S. and Lucy (Roberts) Ferguson. The father was born in North Carolina, and comes from the old and prominent Ferguson family of the south. He served all through the war in the Confederate army, and died in 1900 at Truckee, California. The mother was born in Indiana and now lives in Truckee. Our subject was educated in Kansas and Missouri, where the family lived. They went to California from Kansas, then returned to Missouri, went again to California and back to Salt Lake City, and then settled permanently in the Golden State. Our subject remained with his parents until he was past twenty-one, then went to sawmilling in California, and in 1884 started for the Coeur d'Alene country, and as said before he assisted to build the trail until May 10th, and then turned his attention to prospecting. In 1894 Mr. Ferguson opened his present business, and since then he has conducted this in addition to handling mines. His place is the headquarters for all old timers, and he is one of the well known men of the county. Mr. Ferguson has three brothers: Thomas, James, Ira, and one sister, Lillian.

On January 15, 1900, Mr. Ferguson married Mrs. Cassie O'Donald, a native of Illinois, and daughter of Joseph and Annie E. (Jacobs) Nuss, natives of Pennsylvania. The father died in 1877, and the mother still lives in Illinois. Mrs. Ferguson has the following brothers and sisters: Henry, Daniel, Calvin, Cora Hughes, Emma Davis. Mr. Ferguson is a member of the Redmen, and was a charter member of the K. P. He is a leading Democrat of the county, and is active in the county and state conventions.

MILTON P. FOSTER. It was in 1890 that Mr. Foster came to his present place, two miles east from Fraser, where he took a piece of wild land, which his labors since have transformed into a first class farm. This is now rented to his son, who owns a farm adjoining, and the father lives on his own place, and devotes his time to the prosecution of his trade, that of a carpenter and builder. In this line he is especially skillful, having learned the trade when he was young and then completely mastered it. For a long period of years Mr. Foster has devoted himself to this craft, and is well known all over this section, as in many other places, where his excellent handiwork testifies to his ability and industry.

Milton P. Foster was born in Green county, Wisconsin, on February 4, 1847, being the son of William and Delia A. (Wright) Foster, natives of Ohio and New York, respectively. The ancestors of the father were of the old Puritan stock, and his father was wounded at the battle of Lake Erie in the war of 1812. The father of our subject was one of the pioneer farmers and carpenters in southern Wisconsin. The mother of Milton P. was descended from a very old family of New York, and many of her relatives were in the Civil war. Her brother, Major Squire A. Wright, was wounded at the battle of Shiloh, and soon died from the effects. Another brother served through the entire war. Our subject was reared in Wisconsin and attended the district schools, and at an early age began to learn the carpenter trade from a skillful father. In the spring of 1870 he went to Iowa, and thence to Minnesota, owning farms in both states. In 1890 he came to Spokane, and soon thereafter he came to his present place.

In 1873 Mr. Foster married Miss Laura, daughter of Peter and Jane (McCaughtry) McFarland, natives of Pennsylvania. The father died at the age of seventy-four, and the mother when she was seventy-two. The wedding of Mr. Foster occurred in Waucoma, Iowa. Four children were born to the union: Inez W., wife of Stephen A. Frans, express messenger on the O. R. & N., at Spokane; Claire M., lives adjoining the father's farm; Viola A., wife of John T. Malloy, in Fraser; Susie, wife of Howard T. Clark; at Weippe. Mrs. Foster was born on December 16, 1848, and died on October 16, 1890. She was a native of Pennsylvania, and her death occurred in Spokane. Mr. Foster is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in politics is a Republican.

FRANK M. TIBBALS is one of the old timers of the Coeur d'Alene country, and has been interested in the mines of that section from the first discoveries until the present. He was born in Michigan on June 20, 1856, the son of Benoni O. and Harriet A. (Godfrey) Tibbals, natives of New York. The parents came to Michigan in 1833, traveling in ox carts. The grandfather served in the war of 1812, and the Tibbals family were among the first settlers on the continent in colonial days. They were always prominent in the American cause, and many noted members are now in the leading professions, and in commercial pursuits in the New England states. The father died in 1872, but the mother lives in Detroit. Our subject remained in Michigan until nineteen, having received a good education. He expected to enter Ann Arbor, but owing to his father's death he was obliged to remain at home. He was on the farm, in a dry goods store, and in 1876 went to Cheyenne and clerked, until he joined a party of one hundred men to go to Deadwood. He was variously employed in the Black Hills for four years. Then he went to Gunnison, Colorado, mining. He was in various excitements there and in New Mexico, and in March, 1884, he came over the Trout trail to Eagle City. He did a saloon business for a time and later he went to Wardner and located the Keystone and King group. Although they shipped eighty thousand dollars' worth of ore the vein broke, and the sheriff finally sold the property for fifteen hundred dollars. In 1888 Mr. Tibbals was elected auditor and recorder of Shoshone county on the Democratic ticket, and in 1893 declined to run again. He was offered the nomination of secretary of state, but declined. However, they put up his name. In 1897 Mr. Tibbals sold his saloon interests in Wallace and prospected in Revelstoke, British Columbia. He had some claims located there then. In the fall of 1897 he opened his present place of business at 117 Howard street, Spokane, and his resort is the headquarters for all Coeur d'Alene miners. In 1900 Mr. Tibbals sent a man to southwestern Oregon, who located the extension of the famous Dixie Meadows claims near Prairie City. He also has a man in Alaska. Mr. Tibbals has three brothers: Edward, Robert W., Charles E., and two sisters, Ida M. Anderson, Alice G. Dusenberry.

On November 3, 1887, at Murray, Mr. Tibbals married Miss Mary E. Wallace, and to them one son has been born, Harry A., aged fourteen. Mrs. Tibbals has one brother, William A., and one sister, Laura Eastman.

EUGENE S. FRIEND. By virtue of his ability and industry, the subject of this sketch has arisen from the position of working for others to that of being proprietor of a fine general merchandise establishment in Fraser, which he now conducts in company with Mr. Roberts. Mr. Friend was the one who established the business and made it a prosperous concern.

Eugene S. Friend was born in Ft. Smith, Arkansas, on January 16, 1874, being the son of Efert B. and Lou (Decherd) Friend, natives of Tennessee. The father died when Eugene was six years of age and the mother died two months and ten days after her husband's death. Our subject then went to live with a sister, wife of Prof. Thomas B. Hicks, principal of the graded schools at Gravely Hill, Arkansas. Eugene studied in the common schools until he was twelve, and then spent four years in the Gravely Hill Academy. Succeeding that two years were occupied in riding the range in Indian Territory, after which he came to Dayton, Washington, where he worked on a ranch for three years. Then Mr. Friend took up the well boring business, and for some time did exceedingly well, but the panic of 1893 came along, and as much of his property was held in the form of notes from the farmers, he lost heavily. The next move was mining in the Cracker Jack property in Baker City district for one year, and then Mr. Friend came to his present place at Fraser and took eighty acres of government land. He began to improve the land and also opened a little store. As time went by he was enabled to enlarge his stock and also built and prospered continuously. Mr. Friend is a fine salesman, manifesting the excellent qualities of finding what is wanted and then furnishing it at the right prices. He has a nice piece of land, part timber and part cultivated. In September, 1902, Mr. Friend took as partner Mr. Roberts, who is mentioned elsewhere, and they have erected a fine new structure, which is occupied. Above the store is a fine hall used for the society meetings of the place. Mr. Friend belongs to the M. W. A., which meets here. Mr. Friend has one brother and one sister, Herbert, residing in Texas; Maria, wife of S. D. Story, in Georgia.

On February 19, 1896, Mr. Friend married Miss Emma Roberts, a native of Kentucky, and born on February 3, 1874. Her parents are mentioned elsewhere in this work. Two children have been born to this happy union, Earl Bentley and Ralph. Mr. Friend is a Democrat and influential in the campaigns. He is a man of excellent standing in the community and has hosts of friends, being possessed of the true qualities of worth and integrity.

STANLEY P. FAIRWEATHER is a representative of the Coeur d'Alene country, who does honor to his country, and in whom the people have reposed utmost confidence, induced by an upright life, manifestation of integrity, sound principles, and capabilities. At the present time Mr. Fairweather is enjoying at the hands of the intelligent voters of the county that honor which comes from proper recognition of real merit and reposing of confidence. At the last election his name appeared on the Republican ticket for recorder and auditor of Shoshone county and ex officio clerk of the district court, and although he was conceded to have the hardest fight of any man on the ticket, he won the day by the overwhelming majority of five hundred and ninety votes. This demonstated his standing among the people and a popularity which has been brought about by a career of uprightness and good business endeavor.

Stanley P. Fairweather was born in Norton, Kings county, New Brunswick, on August 7, 1860, the son of Thomas and Adeline (Belyea) Fairweather, natives of New Brunswick, and descended from loyalists who went to Canada in 1777. The mother died in 1868, but the father lives in Lowell, Massachusetts, retired. Mr. Fairweather has two brothers, George W., Franklin O., and three half brothers, Thomas L., Lorne, Arthur. Our subject was educated in Petitcodiac, where also he learned telegraphy and at the early age of fifteen secured a position as assistant agent in the depot of this town. Two years later he was installed at Campbeltown, at the end of a division, and then became relief agent and visited various stations. At Metapediac, Quebec, he was agent and also dealt in general merchandise. Then came a trip to his native province, and he was given the important duties of paymaster and manager for M. J. Hogan, contractor on the New Brunswick railroad. Mr. Fairweather followed railroading in the east in various places until 1890, when he came to Tekoa, and in June of the same year he was stationed at Osborne. About two years later he retired from this line of work and sold hay and grain on commission. In 1896 he came to Wardner and opened a hardware and crockery store, and here he has devoted his energies in building up a good trade, which his ability and deferential treatment of all have consummated in a gratifying manner.

On February 3, 1898, Mr. Fairweather married Miss Lila Johnson, one of the popular school teachers of Wardner. Mr. Fairweather is a member of the K. P. In his present election he was sought after rather than seeking the office, and the result is that the people of Wardner are proud to send to the county seat a representative man, a patriotic citizen, an advocate of good government, and a master of sound business principles; and the county is to be congratulated to secure such a man to stand at the head of the offices entrusted to his care. Mr. Fairweather has hosts of warm friends on every hand, who are gratified at his success, and who are well aware that the interests of all will be carefully conserved, by display of equity, thoroughness, and well balanced justice.

EDWIN SMITH, who dwells in the town of Kingston, where he has a fine plat of five acres and a comfortable and commodious cottage, has also a farm of one hundred and twenty acres adjoining the town. He handles his farm and does a genral contracting business in timbers and timber work. He was born in Shirley, Maine, on April 2, 1849, the son of David and Margaret (Littlefield) Smith, mentioned elsewhere in this work. Our subject received his education from the district schools, and he walked three and one-half miles to attend, continuing this for ten weeks each year. In 1884 he came with his brother, Frank, mentioned elsewhere, from Cheboygan, to the Coeur d'Alene country. Since then he has devoted himself as stated above, and is one of the prosperous men of the section.

On January 10, 1873, Mr. Smith married Miss Mary, daughter of Daniel S. and Jane Wheelock, and to this union three children were born: Clarence, manager of the American Labor Journal, at Butte, Montana; Raymond, bookkeeper and stenographer; Fannie, wife of Arthur W. Burleigh, a merchant at Harrison. On January 10, 1899, Mrs. Smith was called hence by death.

On September 15, 1900, Mr. Smith married Miss Laura L., daughter of William and Mary (Fuqua) Canada, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively, and now living in Clinton, Missouri. The father has been messenger for the bank there for eighteen years. Mrs. Smith was born in Cooper county, Missouri, on October 2, 1869, and she has three brothers: George, William, John, and two sisters, Lydia Kidd, Anna Buchanan. Mr. and Mrs. Smith were married at Wallace. She had conducted a millinery store in Missouri and in Boise for some years previous to her marriage. Mrs. Smith was well educated in Clinton, Missouri.

MICHAEL WHITE. When the frosts of four score years have silvered the locks of the worthy pioneer, and his life stretches as a vista in the dim distance of the past, when his labors and trials and successes and achievements have become history, and the sweet memories bring the heydey times of youth, while calmer judgment now holds the helm, it is not infrequent that the eye casts a longing and inquiring look into the boundless future, and the wisdom born from experience begins to ask, "what next?" If there is a man in the state of Idaho who has run the entire gamut of pioneer and frontier experience in all of its phases of the true western type, which is largely an experience to this country, and has outlived the wear and tear of the hardship, the arduous labors, the strain of great finds and then of darker days, that man is the worthy gentleman whose name is at the head of this paragraph. With pleasure we are given the privilege of jotting down the salient points in a career both interesting and instructive.

Michael White was born in Tipperary, Ireland, on May 28, 1818, being the son of Thomas and Mary (Hogan) White. The father came from a long lived family, and he died in 1851, while the mother also departed this scene some years since. Our subject has eight brothers and one sister, with whom he has had no fellowship for some years, as he has lost track of the whereabouts of their barks on the sea of life. He was educated in his native land, and when he was twenty-two came to the United States. He commenced his mining career in the Galena district of Illinois, where he wrought for five years. Then he steamboated on the Mississippi for three years, and in 1853 he made the weary trip across the plains to California, landing in the Feather river district. He delved on the middle fork and was rewarded with plenty of "dust," which he ever spent with a generous and free hand. At the time of the Fraser river excitement in British Columbia, he started thither, but stopped in Portland and took life easy for three years. On April 15, 1861, he landed in the Pierce district, and since that time he has stayed with this part of the country. He has mined and sold mines most of the time since. He sold his last property some time since, it being a one-third interest in a one-hundred and forty acre placer. Mr. White has now a good hay farm, where he is spending his time. This was taken up in 1890. Mr. White is well known all over the entire district, and there is not a man, woman or child who would not speak kindly of him or do him a favor, which shows his popularity. He is spending the golden years of the days of his pilgrimage in quietness and in the seclusion of the celibatarian, secure in the esteem and good will of all. He has made a first class record in his work of developing and has done much for the Pierce district, as many properties have been brought to the front by his labor and skill.

ABRAHAM L. SMITH is one of the well known residents of the vicinity of Kingston, and he is now occupied in handling his father's estate, which lies across the river from the town. He was born in Shirley, Maine, on April 15, 1865, the son of David and Margaret (Littlefield) Smith, mentioned in this work. Abraham was raised in Cheboygan, Michigan, whither the family removed when he was two years old. In 1882 our subject, with three cousins and his father, came to Lewiston, Idaho, and worked with his brother, Walter A., who had settled there ten years previously. Then they went to British Columbia, where the father had a saw mill and was cutting for the C. P. In May, 1883, Mr. Smith went to Portland, then returned to Lewiston and assisted his brother in blasting on government works in the rapids in the Clearwater river. In the fall of 1884 Mr. Smith came to Kingston and has remained here most of the time since. He has been twice in the east and spent two years as marine reporter for the United News Association at Mackinaw City, Michigan. One summer was spent in British Columbia prospecting. Mr. Smith is now operating his father's farm and is getting good returns from the fertile place.

On October 29, 1889, at Mackinaw City, Michigan, Mr. Smith married Miss Margaret Kelsey, daughter of Charles M. and Mary E. (O'Reilly) Kelsey. Mrs. Smith was born in Jackson, Michigan, and has two brothers, Roy and Fred, and one sister, Josephine. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Guy F., Clayton, Claire. Mr. Smith is a Republican and takes a keen interest in the campaigns and conventions.

ANNA SCHMIDT is well known in Kingston, and is at the present time conducting the hotel with her daughter. They are the recipients of a good patronage and have displayed excellent qualifications in the art of caring for the traveling public. Anna Schmidt was born in Germany on December 14, 1851, the daughter of Christopher and Anna (Rudolph) Boehme, natives of Germany. She came to the United States with her parents when she was fifteen and in addition to the excellent educational training received in her native country she took a course in the high schools here. Following that she taught for some time and also became very proficient in music. She was married in Dubuque, Iowa, in 1869, but later she became separated from her husband, and in 1892 came to Utah, with three of her children. She did nursing there and then moved to Montana and later arrived in Kingston. Off and on she has been in this town for nine years, and the times when away from here was in Montana. Mrs. Schmidt has purchased her home here and is now handling a good trade in the hotel, which is conducted by herself and daughter, Sophia. This daughter received a good education and spent some time in teaching in Colorado, where she was married to Joseph A. Cramlet, on March 25, 1894. Mr. Cramlet has property interests in Wilbur, Washington, which demand his attention there. Two children were born to this marriage, Clyde and Theodore. Mrs. Schmidt has three children besides Mrs. Cramlet, Theodore, Benjamin and Mrs. Wilkinson. Theodore and Benjamin have property in and about Kingston and are highly respected young men of good standing.

CHARLES O. BRAHAM is a young man well known in Kellogg and the Coeur d'Alene district, whose standing is first class and who has manifested good ability and industry here. He is at present engaged in the Bunker Hill mill and has been for considerable time.

Charles O. Braham was born in Iowa, Howard county, on July 5, 1876, the son of Nels and Gine (Oleson) Braham. The father was born in Norway, and now lives in Aurora, South Dakota, engaged in the stock business and handling farm implements. The mother was born in Norway and still lives in South Dakota. Our subject remained in Iowa until six and then the family went to South Dakota. He graduated from the high school in Sioux Falls, then taught school for two years. Next we see him in the mercantile business in Minnesota, and one year later he sold out and engaged as traveling salesman for the Kimball Piano & Organ Company. Five years were spent in this labor, and in 1897 he came to Idaho. Settlement was made in Wardner and then after a year or so in the grocery business there, Mr. Braham sold out, and after the strike he entered the Bunker Hill mill, where we find him engaged at this time. One year since then was spent in Nevada and California, where he visited and also held the foremanship of the mill at DeLamar for four months. Mr. Braham has five brothers and two sisters: Henry, Nels, George, Benjamin, Joseph, Bertha, Anna.

At Spokane, on January 22, 1903, Mr. Braham married Miss Estella, daughter of Peter M. and Emmaline Johnson, natives of Sweden and Wisconsin, respectively. They now reside at Kellogg. Mr. Braham owns property in Kellogg, and is one of the substantial men and progressive citizens. He is a stanch and true blue Republican, but has never sought preferment from his party.

EDWARD R. MATTHEW. This energetic and skillful mining man whose labors have extended over the entire northwest and who has been instrumental in locating some of the finest claims in these various sections, is now a citizen of the Pierce district, and it is with pleasure that we incorporate a review of the salient points in his career, especially since he has been very active and instrumental in building up and developing this district.

Edward R. Matthew was born in Plymouth, England, on August 9, 1863. His parents were natives of Devonshire, England. The father died in 1882, aged forty-eight, and the mother died in 1889, aged fifty-eight. Our subject came to the United States about 1886 and followed blacksmithing and steamfitting, which trade he had learned thoroughly in the old country. He also has served as artificer in the British navy for two years. From Boston, the place of landing, he came direct to Tacoma, and for three years or so he wrought at his trade. Then he prospected in the Cascades and soon had the noted Little Fill located, whose stock sold at three dollars per share later. He located claims all through the prominent Washington mining districts, and among these were many valuable ones. One a large ledge of antimonal silver, or dyscrasite, which was very valuable. About this time it was the winter of 1892-93, Mr. Matthew met with a serious accident that caused the loss of a portion of his right hand, it being shot away by the accidental discharge of a shot gun. The following spring he came to Pierce and bought an interest in a placer claim, which he worked for three years. During the excitement of the opening of the Colville reservation he went thither and located thirty-one claims, several among them being valuable. Then he returned to Pierce again and in the fall of 1900 he located the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack, quartz claims, which he sold to Montana parties. The following May, in company with W. S. Wilkinson, he discovered the Wild Rose, a valuable claim. He was grub staked by M. A. Ellis, and he held one-fourth of the claim, which he sold later to John S. Dunn for six thousand dollars. During the present season Mr. Matthew and his partner, R. J. Kelly, located the Red Cloud group. This group contains a ledge from fourteen to twenty-eight feet in width of porphyraceous quartz, which is free milling and runs from four to six dollars per ton. They have run a thousand feet of open cut work, and have bonded the claim to Spokane parties for fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. Matthew has one brother, Richard, a prominent mining engineer at Johannesburg, Africa. He also had one brother, Thomas, who was a well known mining man at Johannesburg, but he died in 1899, aged forty-three. Mr. Matthew also has one sister, Eliza, widow of R. J. Richards, formerly foreman on the dock at Plymouth. Mr. Matthew is in single blessedness and is also a reliable and well informed Democrat. Mr. Matthew has the esteem and respect of all and has shown himself a man of worth and integrity.

WILLIAM P. WILKINSON is one of the young men of Kingston, whose labors have met with good success and who has so conducted himself that he is held in high esteem by all. He was born in Lancashire, England, on October 21, 1870, the son of George and Mary (Postlethwaite) Wilkinson, natives of the same place and their deaths occurred in 1892 and 1903, respectively. Our subject was reared in his native land and received his education in a private school. In 1889, in company with a brother, he came to the United States, and after a short stay in New York he went to Providence, Rhode Island, and wrought in the shoe business. Later a few weeks were spent in Nebraska, Texas, Colorado, and settlement was made in Butte, Montana, where he wrought for five years as fireman and four years as engineer on the Great Northern. In 1900 he came to Kingston and settled on school land and since then has devoted himself to developing and improving his farm and to handling timbers. His brother is running a foundry in Salt Lake City, at present.

On September 22, 1895, in Helena, Montana, Mr. Wilkinson married Miss Emma S., daughter of Theodore L. and Anna (Boehme) Schmidt, natives of Germany. Mrs. Wilkinson was born in Dubuque, Iowa, on February 24, 1872, and has two brothers and one sister: Theodore, Benjamin, Sophia, who reside with their mother in Kingston. She crossed the country from Iowa to Colorado during the mining excitement in Colorado, with her parents in prairie schooners and settled in Lake City, where she graduated from the high school in 1889, after which she taught school in various parts of Colorado and Montana. Mr. Wilkinson is a member of the M. W. A. Our subject and his good wife are well respected and have many friends in all sections where they are known.

ELBERT C. ROBY is associated with the French Creek Mining and Development Company, nine miles east from Pierce, and they own one of the promising properties of this section. Mr. Roby also owns a quarter section of fine land on the reservation and is interested further in mining properties in different parts of the Pierce district.

Elbert C. Roby was born in Landsgrove, Vermont, on December 10, 1856, being the son of Daniel W. and Jane (Lampson) Roby, natives of Vermont and Hartford county, Connecticut, respectively. The father was a merchant in Vermont and his father, Moody Roby, served in the war of 1812. The father and mother live in Gilroy, California. Elbert was raised in Vermont and New Hampshire, and there educated, and when he was eighteen he came to Illinois, where he wrought on a farm for two years, after which he went to Yamhill county, Oregon. Puget Sound was the place where we see him next and in 1880 he came to Idaho and took up mining. His placer property consists of one hundred and sixty acres. His farm lies six miles from Orofino and is rented. He has no brothers or sisters living. Mr. Roby is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., Kendrick Lodge No. 26, and also with the I. O. O. F., in the same place. Mr. Roby is a stanch Republican and intelligent in the principles of his party.

On January 23, 1883, Mr. Roby married Miss Emily, daughter of Henry L. and Susan (Campbell) Patterson, natives of Maine, and also their ancestors were natives of the same state for many generations. They now live on Cedar creek, Latah county. The wedding occurred in Nez Perces county. Mrs. Roby was born in Maine and has the following brothers and sisters: James and Edward, in Nez Perces county; Bert F. and Harry, in Boise; Carrie, wife of Edwin Robinson; Mabel, wife of Elmer Jackson; Lillian, wife of Roy Whitinger. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Roby. Pearl, Maud, and Dean being the only ones living.

Mr. Roby lost heavily in the panic of 1893-4, and during that time he was also farming extensively in Nez Perces county.

CHARLES A. LAFAVRE is the engineer in the rockhouse of the Bunker Hill mill in Kellogg. He is a man of good qualities and a substantial and patriotic citizen, always allied with the enterprises that are for general good and improvement.

Charles A. Lafavre was born in Shelbyville, Indiana, on November 8, 1866, the son of Elias and Ellen (Adams) Lafavre, natives of Indiana and Illinois, respectively. The father was a farmer, descended from the French Hugenots and died in 1892, aged forty-nine. His father and grandfather were born in Maryland. The mother of our subject comes from the noted Adams family of New England, and one of the most prominent families in the American cause in days of the formation of this great republic. She died on December 27, 1875, aged thirty-two, the demise occurring in Illinois. Our subject was reared in Indiana, graduated from the schools of his native town and when seventeen went with his father to Wisconsin, where he labored on a farm. Later he came with his father, stepmother and the balance of the family to Montana, and when they went to Spokane he went to Rathdrum, where he worked in sawmills for some time. In 1897 he came to Kellogg and since then he has been engaged in various capacities in the mines and mills. Mr. Lafavre has two brothers and one half sister: Richard E., Frank B., Mamie.

At Coeur d'Alene, on June 6, 1893, Mr. Lafavre married Miss Sadie E., daughter of John and Fanny Shafer. The father is engaged in farming near Rathdrum and the mother is deceased. Mr. Lafavre is a member of the Panhandle Lodge of the K. of P. in Rathdrum. He is a Republican in political persuasion and takes an interest in the questions of the day. Mr. Lafavre owns three dwellings in Kellogg and rents two. He is one of the industrious and substantial men of the town and stands well.

WINFIELD S. WILKINSON, a prominent mining man near Pierce, and half owner of the Wildrose, one of the best, if not the best paying mine in the Pierce district, was born in Meadville, Pennsylvania, on January 10, 1864, being the son of William H. and Lucinda (Carmichael) Wilkinson, natives of Scotland, where also they were married. They came to the United States in the early sixties. The father mined in Helena and all over the west until 1885, and then went to Queensland, Australia, where he is engaged in Placer mining. The mother died on November 4, 1897, at Titusville, Pennsylvania. Her people were ship builders. Winfield was reared in Meadville and educated there until thirteen, and then he came to Fort Benton and commenced his mining career, which has extended to every camp of prominence between Mexico and Brittsh Columbia. In May, 1901, he came to the Pierce district and discovered the Wildrose on the twenty-fifth. It has a true fissure vein and there is a streak of six inches to two feet that is extremely rich. The output up to January 1, 1903, was $25,000. Mathew, a partner, was grub staked by M. A. Ellis and so held one fourth of the property. He sold that for six thousand dollars, John L. Dunn buying. They have a three stamp mill and are doing well. They have a shaft one hundred and seven feet deep and two drifts of one hundred feet each and now are driving a draining tunnel. Mr. Wilkinson is a stanch Republican and has been deputy sheriff both in Deer Lodge county, Montana, and in Shoshone county.

On February 8, 1896, Mr. Wilkinson married Miss Lillian, daughter of Alexander and Emma (Bird) McIntosh, natives of Fort Wayne, Indiana, and Pennsylvania, respectively. The father was of Scotch extraction and came to San Francisco in 1852 and straightway went to Plumas county mining districts, where he remained until his death on December 8, 1894. He was a prominent man and held many public offices at the hands of an appreciative people, being elected county supervisor the last time just before his death. He was a member of the A. F. & A. M., and master several times of the lodge. The mother of Mrs. Wilkinson was taken to Fort Wayne with her parents when she was eight, and her brother was a drummer boy in the Civil war. Her granduncle, James Bird, was the hero of the famous ballad sung by every school boy. Bird had fought with great valor on the frontier and supposing the war all over he was going home and was arrested for desertion. It was fully established that he was innocent of that crime, but a jealous captain, who feared displacement because of the promotion of Bird, which was sure to follow, pushed the matter hurridly to an issue and shot Bird while the bearers of the reprieve were in sight. Mrs. Wilkinson has the following brothers and sisters: William, Edward, Melville, Douglas, John, all in California; Hattie Wilsey, Mary Dorser, Rosa, Emma, Kate Brown. Mr. and Mrs. Wilkinson have two children: Annie R. and Emma W.

PHILIP BAUMAN, who is one of the substantiaf agriculturists near Kingston, was born in Germany, September 29, 1851, the son of Christoph and Christina Bauman, natives of Germany. The father died when Philip was small. The mother came to the United States in 1870, and died in Illinois on February 18, 1900, aged eighty-one. Our subject came to the United States in 1866, and followed the confectionery business in St. Louis until 1873, then went to San Francisco; two years later we find him in Virginia City, as pastry cook in the International Hotel; later he started a restaurant there and afterward went to Montana, where he did busines for some time. In 1887 Mr. Bauman came to Wardner and opened a bakery and restaurant, and one year later sold out and came to Kingston; soon thereafter he bought a squatter's right on his present place, and he has a fine farm well improved and productive of good dividends annually. Mr. Bauman has one brother, Jacob, and the three sisters, Helen Pagan, Margaret Betz, and Christina Smith.

On May 9, 1878, at Virginia City, Nevada, Mr. Bauman married Miss Bertha, daughter of Henry and Katherina Nickel, natives of Germany, where the father died when Mrs. Bauman was a child. The mother came to the United States in 1874, and died in New York City on January 11, 1875. Mrs. Bauman was born in Germany on January 15, 1856, and came to the United States in 1873. She has five brothers: Carl, Adolph, Robert, Hermann, Gustave, and one sister, Pauline Fortried. Fifteen children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bauman, of whom the following are living: Ella Brown, Bertha, Otto, Philip, Pauline, Robert, Frederick, Thelma, Helen. Mr. Bauman is independent in politics and a man of good stanch policy. He and his estimable wife are very highly respected people and have the confidence and good will of all.

GEORGE F. BITNER is a heavy property owner in Wardner and other portions of the Coeur d'Alene country, while at the present time he is conducting a wholesale business in Kellogg, handling the goods of the Sunset brewery of Wallace, and being local agent for Gall & Burke of Spokane.

George F. Bitner was born in Pensylvania on March 17, 1857, the son of Henry and Nancy (Glass) Bitner, natives of Pennsylvania and of German extraction. The father served in the Civil war with a Pennsylvania regiment for nine months. At the second battle of Antietam we was wounded by a shell. He fought in many engagements and skirmishes. He was a prominent business man and for years conducted a large nursery. He died in Pennsylvania in 1894, aged sixty-eight. The mother of our subject died in 1882, aged fifty-six. Her mother lived to be ninety-eight years of age. Our subject was educated and remained in his native state until 1877, then came to Ohio and engaged in various businesses until 1880, in which year he came west to Colorado. He worked for the Denver & Rio Grande, on the first line into Leadville and in 1881 opened a saloon in Antonito. This he sold in 1883 and came to Montana in the same business. In 1884 Mr. Bitner came to Murray and prospected and mined until the fall of 1889, when he opened a saloon in Wardner, which he conducted until 1900, when he sold the business and opened in his present line. Mr. Bitner took a trip east between selling and opening in this line and now is devoting his attention to handling the goods of these breweries, with mineral waters and so forth. Mr. Bitner owns three business buildings and six dwellings in Wardner, owns business and residence property in Kellogg and other property. He has one brother and one sister: William H., a retired capitalist; Mrs. Lizzie Collaton.

On October 16, 1901, Mr. Bitner married Miss Lizzie Krebs, of Wardner. She has three brothers. Two children, Ella M. and William H., have been born to this union. Mr. Bitner is a member of the K. of P. and Eagles, and in political alliance is with the Republicans.

LOUIE W. STEDMAN, who is well known in mining circles in the Coeur d'Alene country, is descended from some leading families and is a man of excellent native ability and is always dominated by skill and a keen sense of honor. He was born in Dixon, Illinois, on August 27, 1861, the son of Asa W. and Nellie (Wood) Stedman. The father was born in New York and was one of the best known traveling salesmen in Chicago for forty years. His father was a well-to-do farmer near Owego, Tioga county, New York, and came from the old Stedman family. His mother was a Wolverton and came from England, her father being a son of Lord Wolverton of England. The mother of our subject lives in Los Angeles, California. Her father came from Fayetteville, New York, to old Fort Dearborn with ox teams in 1830 and located at Oregon, Illinois, one hundred miles west from where Chicago is now. He was a prominent politician and stumped the state with Lincoln, driving by team. He was president of the Old Settlers' Association at the time of his death. His father was a prominent man in the Revolution and the surrender of Burgoyne was on his farm. The mother of our subject is a leading member of the Daughters of the Revolution. Her mother, Sophie Bennett is a first cousin of ex-Governor David B. Hill, of New York, and is descended from Joel Barlow, the poet friend of George Washington and our first minister to France. Mrs. Stedman, the mother of Louie, possesses the will of this gentleman. She was delegate to the last convention of the Daughters of the Revolution and is a prominent member of the Colonial Dames.

Our subject was reared and educated in Chicago until ten, then went to live with his paternal grandparents in Owego and later attended the Cornell Military College in Mt. Vernon, Iowa. In 1878, Mr. Stedman went to Leadville for his health and mined. Three years later he went east and for six years was with the American Rubber Company. After this he took charge of their store in St. Paul for four years. Subsequent to this he came west and prospected all over the British Columbia country and adjacent districts. In September, 1898, Mr. Stedman came to Murray and later organized the Paragon Mining Company of which he is manager at the present time. Their property is in the Summit mining district six miles east from Murray and in addition to this Mr. Stedman has much other property. Mr. Stedman has one brother, Homer A.

On February 20, 1897, at Hudson, Wisconsin, Mr. Stedman married Miss Ida, daughter of August Wille, who died when she was young. The mother is still living in St. Paul. Mrs. Stedman was born in St. Paul on March 29, 1878. She has one brother, Edward, and two sisters, Ella, Carrie. She also has one half-brother, Herbert Schmidt. Mrs. Stedman is an accomplished musician and artist and is a leading and cultured lady in this section where she has hosts of warm friends. Mr. Steadman is a member of the Elks, the K. of P. and the A. O. U. W. He is also a member of the Republican state central comittee. It is of note that Enoch Wood, the maternal grandfather of our subject, brought John Farwell and C. B. Farwell, ex-United States Senator, to Chicago on a load of wheat.

Mr. Stedman is at the present time managing one of the best properties of the district, the Paragon, and is deeply interested in the development and advancement of the surrounding country and is an enterprising man in this line.

WILLIAM B. WADSWORTH, a successful and leading business man of Kellogg, and junior member of the firm of Gilbert & Wadsworth, general merchants of that town, is a young man of fine capabilities, marked integrity and worth and comes from one of the most prominent American families. He was born in Marshall, Missouri, on August 15, 1874, the son of Burton and Abigail (Crockett) Wadsworth. The father was born in Maine and came from a very prominent New England family, the progenitors, William and Christopher Wadsworth, coming to the wild shores of New England in the good ship Lion, in 1624. They were of the stanch old Puritan stock and their descendants were prominent in the various wars, especially so in the Revolution and the war of 1812. The father died in Missouri in 1882, aged forty-nine. The grandmother of our subject on his father's side was a lineal descendant of William Bradford, second governor of the old Plymouth colony. The Wadsworth family are leading people in New England and in numerous cases have shown themselves great public benefactors. The mother of our subject, a native of Maine, now living in Missouri, is also a descendant of a prominent New England family. William B. was raised in Missouri until 1897, having graduated from the high school in his native place and also served as salesman in the Bullen department store in Kansas City. In 1897 Mr. Wadsworth came to Kellogg and for two years was principal of the town schools. Then he entered partnership with Henry T. Gilbert, husband of his sister, and they are now operating a thriving establishment. Mr. Gilbert and his wife and her sister are mentioned elsewhere in this work.

On June 26, 1902, Mr. Wadsworth married Miss Edna V., daughter of Wallace and Lenore Anderson, of Wallace, the wedding occurring there also. They have one child, Morris B., born March 28, 1903. Mr. Wadsworth and his wife are members of the Congregational church in Kellogg. He is a Republican and well informed.

SAMSON SNYDER, Jr. A business man of ability and keen discrimination that have led him to succeed well in all his undertakings, and now at the head and owner of a thriving general merchandise establishment in Pierce, a public minded and patriotic citizen, and always ready to aid any enterprise that is for the welfare of the town or district, and a progressive and stirring man of sound principles, we with pleasure accord an epitome of his career space in the history of his county.

Samson Snyder, Jr., was born in Randolph county, West Virginia, on August 9, 1868, being the son of Samson and Elizabeth (Boner) Snyder, natives of West Virginia. The father was born on August 19, 1835, and now lives retired in Harmon, West Virginia. He served three and one-half years in the Civil war and the details of some of his life are intensely interesting. He enlisted in the Home Guards and was elected captain of his company, having been chief spirit in organizing it. They enlisted in a body and were joined to the Thirty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He had many narrow escapes and was wounded several times. Once his leg was broken. He was in the battles of Rich Mountain and Carricks Ford, and in very many skirmishes. His company was largely in skirmish duty and was under McClellan. He was a scout for the general on numerous occasions. His father, the grandfather of our subject, was in sympathy with the Confederates in the commencement of the war, but later changed his mind and enlisted in the Union forces, in his son's company. He was detailed on scout duty most of the time and the Confederates had a heavy reward placed on his head. He was captured many times, but always succeeded in escaping. He was a man of intense spirit and rendered valuable service to his country. Captain Snyder was captured once and was tortured by being forced to remove his boots and walk over frozen ground. Captain Hutton, a Rebel officer, was holding his arm in this barbarous proceeding, and as they came to the edge of a stream, Captain Snyder shoved the unwary Rebel down the bank and took to the woods. More than a hundred shots were fired at him, but he escaped them all and got away. But he was in a rebel settlement and had to go thirty miles barefoot over two mountain ranges to get to the Union lines. It is of note that Hutton, the rebel who was tumbled down the bank, is now living in the same county with Captain Snyder and it speaks volumes for the honor and noble manhood of the latter that he is friendly to his former persecuter. The mother of our subject was married in West Virginia and came from Scotch ancestry. She is now living, aged sixty-three. Our subject was raised in his native place and educated in the district school and later in the West Virginia University, and was appointed cadet by Hon. T. C. Green, regent of the University. He returned to his parents before graduation and in 1891 came to southern Idaho, spending six months at Nampa. Then he came to Moscow and thence to Fraser, where he homesteaded a quarter section. He farmed and raised stock until 1901, then opened a hotel in Pierce and in the fall of the same year started a miners' supply store, which has become one of the leading general merchandise establisments of the town. Mr. Snyder has seven brothers and four sisters. He was married on November 2, 1892, at Fraser, Elizabeth C., daughter of John W. and Adell (Tupper) Clark, natives of Michigan, becoming his bride on that occasion. Mr. Clark and his family now reside at Weippe. Three children have been born to this union: Vergie, Erma P., and Oro Lolo. In addition to his business, Mr. Snyder has four hundred and eighty acres of land, of which one hundred acres are hay and orchard and the balance in fine yellow pine timber. Mr. Snyder is an active Republican.

THEODORE BROWN has spent a life of constant and stirring activity in various portions of the west, and the salient points of his career will be interesting to the readers of this history. He was born in California, April 1, 1863, the son of Peter A. and Emma Brown, natives of Sweden and Germany, respectively, and now living in California. The father was a sea captain and our subject was contented with the land only until he was seven years of age, when he slipped away and became cabin boy on the Blue Jacket. He sailed the seas until 1876, being in all portions of the globe; while on board the Blue Jacket young Brown learned to read and write and although he never attended school one day in his life, he succeeded in securing a very fine education and is a very well informed man. From 1876 until 1880 he rode the range for Carr and Tevis; next we see him at the Placer fields at Baker City, Oregon, where he located a claim from which his partner afterward became very wealthy. On December 23, 1883, Mr. Brown landed at Eagle City, and prospected until 1886; he remained there and in the vicinity of Murray doing mining and prospecting, and on one claim he and his partners took out twenty-five to fifty dollars per day for each man; this continued for a year; then he worked in the Golden Chest and afterward came to what is now Wardner. While working in the Idaho he grubstaked Ben Thompkins, who located eleven fine claims in the Libby creek district, in Montana. Mr. Brown went thither, but as the Indians killed Mr. Thompkins he was unable to secure the claim. Later Mr. Brown located some fine properties in Spring Gulch, also on Flat creek. In Spring Gulch he had a fraction between the O. R. and N. and the Keystone. He spent seven thousand dollars in developing this property, but in the crisis of 1893 lost it all. Then came a trip to California overland with a photographic outfit. In 1894 he was again in Wardner, working in various mines. He has been foreman or shift boss in the Bunker Hill, Tiger, and Poorman and other properties of the mines. Mr. Brown is interested in the Shoup, the Idaho, the High Up, the Teddy and the Brown Fraction, on Pine creek, while he has a half interest in nine claims in southwestern Oregon, from which they have received assays from one to nine thousand dollars. Mr. Brown has two brothers: Oscar, Harmon, and one sister, Lilly.

On June 22, 1898, Mr. Brown married Miss Ella L., daughter of Phillip and Bertha Bowman, natives of Germany, now living near Kingston. Mrs. Brown was born in Virginia City, Nevada, on November 14, 1878. They have three children: Theodore, Eleanor and J. Olive. Mr. Brown is a member of the K. of P. at Wardner, and a strong Republican.

JOSEPH G. ECCLES. A competent and energetic man, who knows how and does the intricate work of his responsible position in a skillful and quiet manner and who has gained, because of his real worth, the approbation and esteem of all, it is fitting that he be accorded space in the history of Shoshone county.

Joseph G. Eccles was born in Lancashire, England, on February 16, 1862, being the son of William and Emily (Massey) Eccles. He came to the United States in 1879, to join his father in Lawrence, Massachusetts, who had come to this country before our subject was born. Joseph was in Massachusetts for six months and then came to Chicago, and thence to Colorado, and from that time to the present he has followed mining. He has operated in Arizona, California, eastern Oregon and other places, and in 1894 came to the Pierce district. He soon located a quartz claim on French creek and has made a one hundred and seventy-five foot cross cut besides running one hundred feet on the ledge. In the spring of 1895 he accepted the position of foreman of the Crescent Consolidated Mining Company, whose property is three miles east from Pierce. They have a five stamp mill and a shaft three hundred and seventy-five feet deep besides a thousand feet of tunneling on each of two levels. Mr. Eccles was also superintendent of the Red Rover mines at Ravenna, California, for five years. He was foreman of the Monumental fourteen months in the Granite district near Sumpter, Oregon.

Mr. Eccles is still enjoying the quietness of the celibatarian's life. He has one brother, John, residing in England. Mr. Eccles is a member of the A. F. & A. M., in Los Angeles, California. Politically he is allied with the Republicans and is intelligent in the questions of the day.

LEROY TUCKER. In the person of the subject of this article we have before us one of the stirring and capable young business men of Kingston. His achievements have manifested his ability in the business world, and his clean and upright walk, his integrity and sound principles.

Leroy Tucker was born in Blair, Nebraska, on June 8, 1874, the son of Erastus F. and Susan (Denny) Tucker. The father crossed the plains to California and in 1876 went to Oregon, settling near Prairie City. The John Day Valley was the scene of young Tucker's childhood days and after the district school was completed he received a good course at the University at Salem. On account of ill health, however, he was unable to remain until graduation; from there he came to Kingston and soon filed on a homestead two and a half miles from town, which he has improved in a wonderful manner; in addition to this he is in partnership with his brother-in-law, Robert W. Hunt, and together they do a large business in handling mining timber. Mr. Tucker is a member of the M. W. A. and in political matters he reserves for his own decision all the questions of the day; consequently he is independent.

EDWARD G. STONEBREAKER is well known in Kellogg, where he is operating a cigar store and billiard hall, having recently purchased the same from Price Brothers. Mr. Stonebreaker is also one of the blacksmiths at the Bunker Hill mill at Kellogg and while his days are given to his work he spends the evenings in attending to his business, which is operated in the day by his clerk. Soon Mr. Stonebreaker intends to resign the industrial labor and devote his entire attention to his store.

Edward G. Stonebreaker was born in Iowa, on November 30, 1859, the son of Sebastian and Mary J. (Snyder) Stonebreaker. The father was born in Indiana and died in Kansas in 1897, aged fifty-three. He was a farmer and came from German ancestry. The mother of our subject was born in Kentucky of German extraction and died in 1883, aged forty-five. Our subject was raised in Kansas, educated there and there learned the blacksmith trade. When twenty he stepped forth from the paternal roof and worked in various parts of the state until 1891, when he came to Seattle and opened a general shop, which he conducted with success for three and one-half years. Then he came to Farmington, Washington, where he operated a shop for six years. In 1900 Mr. Stonebreaker came to Kellogg and took his present position in the mill. On January 1, 1903, he purchased his cigar store and is doing a good business. Mr. Stonebreaker has two brothers and two sisters: Squire F., Elsie C., Emma Minnear, Hattie Corren.

At Washington, Kansas, Mr. Stonebreaker married Miss Artie M., daughter of Jacob and Nancy Starcher. She has two brothers and one sister: Lafayette, Jacob, Anna Grow. They have one adopted child, Oxcil Westbery, now twenty-four years old. Mr. Stonebreaker is a member of the I. O. O. F., of the W. W. and of the Industrial Union. He is a stanch Republican and takes the part of the intelligent citizen in political matters and is a good substantial man.

FRED ROOS, Jr., is a westener by birth as well as in his sterling pioneer qualities. He was born in Latah county, near Palouse, on February 4, 1876, being the son of Ferdinand and Katherine (Young) Roos, natives of Germany and now residing in Lewiston. The father resided in England for many years and then came to the United States when fifteen, and was alone on the trip. He was in California in early days and in Idaho as early as 1870. He is a noted violinist and has a first-class reputation as a musician. Our subject was raised on a farm near Palouse and later went to Lewiston, the family moving there. He labored with his father for years, studied in the graded school at Lewiston and in Vashon college and in April, 1901, he came to Pierce. He soon bought an interest with Mr. Gisel and they now do a saloon business under the name of Gisel & Roos. Mr. Roos is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Rebekahs, and Maccabees.

Mr. Roos married Miss Martha E., daughter of Christopher and Nora Held, and a native of Clinton, Iowa, on April 10, 1901.

ROBERT W. HUNT is one of the leading young men of Kingston; his property holdings indicate a wisdom, thrift and enterprise that have always characterized him and which have brought their sure and gratifying results. He was born in Colfax county, Nebraska, on February 6, 1880, the son of Thomas W. and Jeanete B. (Buchanan) Hunt, mentioned in this volume elsewhere. Robert W. was educated in his native place and in Hyde county, South Dakota; he came to Kingston with the balance of the family and in due time began operations for himself, his first venture was to lease a quarter section from John Whitehead, which land he is still cultivating and intends soon to purchase. He has reaped good returns for his labor on this land and in addition to handling that, he has taken a quarter section of government land near by, which he is improving. Mr. Hunt is also contracting mining timber and does a large business in this line.

On August 4, 1901, at his father's home in Kingston, Robert W. Hunt married Miss Mary E., daughter of Erastus F. and Susan (Denny) Tucker, natives of Indiana, and now residing in Salem. Mrs. Hunt was born in eastern Oregon on January 27, 1883; her parents had come to Prairie City across the plains in early days and she spent her childhood days at her native place and at Salem, Oregon, where she received a fine education. She has four brothers and three sisters: Leroy, Frederick, Edwin, Harry, Rodence Lawrence, Hetty, Annie Perry, who died in 1894, aged twenty-two. Mr. Hunt is a member of the M. W. A. He and his wife are popular members of society and of excellent standing in the community.

FRANK S. SMITH, who has a comfortable and cosy home on the Main street of Kingston, is one of the bright and energetic young men who have wrought well since coming to this country; he gives his attention entirely to river work, doing both boating and driving logs. Frank S. Smith was born in Sheboygan, Michigan, on July 20, 1876, the son of Frank and Elizabeth (Page) Smith, mentioned elsewhere in this volume; he came to Kingston with the balance of the family in 1885, and has since remained here.

On September 28, 1899, at Kingston, Mr. Smith married Miss Nora M., daughter of Thomas and Jeanette B. (Buchanan) Hunt, also mentioned in this work. Mrs. Smith was born in Nebraska on January 28, 1879; two children have been born to this union, Lester E., aged three, Lloyd Clinton, born May 16, 1903. Mr. Smith is a member of the M. W. A. and is one of the popular young men of this section; he has manifested industry and close attention to business, which have given him the esteem of the community and a goodly holding of property.

JOHN M. ELLIOTT. This genial and affable gentleman, who is now deputy sheriff of the Wardner district, has for a long time been in business in Wardner and is one of the prominent and substantial men there, while in political matters, although he has never sought preferment, still he has been placed in various offices of responsibility by the call of the people, always running ahead of his ticket.

John M. Elliott was born in Franklin county, Illinois, on April 24, 1870, the son of John and Matilda E. (Baldwin) Elliott, natives respectively of Gibson county and Vincennes, Indiana. The father died in 1881, aged fifty-four and the mother passed away in 1899, both at Dayton, Washington. Mr. Elliott served four years, five months and ten days in Company E, Twenty-fourth Indiana Infantry. He was wounded twice in the battle of Shiloh and languished seven weeks in the hospital. Later he suffered the horrors of death in Libby prison for four months and only his exchange saved his life. He was in the battle of Gettysburg as also in many other prominent engagements, in fact he was in active service all the time of his enlistment, except the time of hospital and prison incarceration. His company, E, was the first one of Indiana to respond to the call at the commencement of the war. He finally died from disability received in the war. Our subject was reared in Dayton, whither his parents had come when he was nine. He graduated from the high school there when twenty and went to Seattle and engaged in the restaurant business. Two years later he was following the same in Yakima and in 1894 he sold and went to Lewiston. Later we see him in Pullman in charge of the Union hotel and on September 12, 1895, Mr. Elliott came to Wardner and for eleven months he was steward of Page's hotel. Then Mr. Elliott opened a restaurant and lodging house and for years this was one of the popular places of Wardner, under his charge. In May, 1901, he sold this business to his wife's sister, retaining ownership of the building and the same is conducted with a good patronage today. In 1901, Mr. Elliott was nominated on the Democratic ticket for county commissioner without the asking and he ran far ahead of his ticket, and served his time as chairman of the board. At the last election he did not allow his name to be presented but was appointed deputy sheriff for this district. He is a popular and efficient officer and has the confidence of the people. Mr. Elliott has three brothers: Perry O., Arthur and Luther S.

On February 8, 1893, Mr. Elliott married Miss Julia E. Anson at Moscow. She is a native of Norway and she has one sister, Mrs. Martha Johnson. Two children have been born to this union: Mildred and John M., Jr. Mr. Elliott is a member of the K. of P., being past C. C. and delegate to the grand lodge last year. He is also a member of the A. O. U. W. and was delegate to the last grand lodge; of the W. W., of the Red Men, of the Eagles, of the United Moderns and is grand organizer for this jurisdiction. Mr. Elliott is also an active member of the volunteer fire department. Mrs. Elliott is a member of the United Moderns, of the Daughters of Pocahontas, of the auxiliary of the Maccabees, and of the auxiliary of the A. O. U. W.

JACOB GISEL was born on September 29, 1862, in Schafhausen, Switzerland, being the son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Myer) Gisel, natives of Switzerland. The father lives in the old home place, aged seventy-three. He has always been a farmer and is a prominent man. The mother died when our subject was three years old. Jacob remained at home and grew up on a farm, gaining his education from the common schools, and in 1883 he made his way to the United States. He lived in Iowa for four years, engaged in farm work. Then came a trip to California and he continued in farm work there until 1893, when he journeyed on to Portland and spent fourteen months there in saloon work. It was in 1894 that he found his way to Pierce and at once delved into prospecting. This continued for some time and then Mr. Gisel started a saloon in partnership with Sam Bloyer, an old time prospector of this section. Soon Mr. Gisel bought out his partner and continued his business alone. Recently Mr. Gisel sold half interest in the business to Fred Roos, Jr., mention of whom is made in another portion of this work. Mr. Gisel has had some interest in mining, but of late he has devoted himself entirely to his business. He has four step-brothers in Switzerland and one sister, Louise, in North Dakota. Mr. Gisel has never left the joys of bachelordom for the uncertain seas of matrimony. He is a strong Republican.

FRANK SMITH is one of the capable and successful men of Kingston. He has one of the best residences there and in addition to doing general farming he handles a great many timbers and does contracting. Frank Smith was born February 5, 1851, in Maine, the son of David and Margerite (Littlefield) Smith, natives of Maine and now living at Kingston. Frank spent the first fifteen years of his life in Maine, then went to Michigan, where he remained until 1894. That was the year of his advent to this country. His family had all preceded him, but when he arrived he found them all busy freighting by boat on the Coeur d' Alene river. They received as high as fifteen cents per pound for transporting freight on that river. Many of their boats were large and propelled by poling. In 1887 Mr. Smith filed on one hundred and sixty acres adjoining the townsite, and he now has seventy acres of rich bottom land under cultivation.

On November 30, 1873, occurred the marriage of Mr. Frank Smith and Miss Elizabeth, a native of Kingsville, Ontario, and a daughter of Charles and Margeret (Smith) Page, natives of Canada, now living in Cheboygan, Michigan, where this wedding occurred. Ten children have been born of this marriage: Ivory L., lumberman at Springfield, Oregon; Frank S., lumberman; T. Kingston; Roy A., miner in Alaska; David M., Charles L., Sidney, Calvin, Chester, at home; Ina P., wife of A. McGillivray, a farmer of Kingston. Mr. Smith is a Republican; he has four brothers: Edwin, Walter A., Abraham L., Charles, and six sisters: Laurana Holland, Lewella Overton, Phebe Sharp, Laura Gaffney, Nellie Stean, Grace Wiley. Mrs. Smith has three brothers: Walter Gray, Elanender, Alva R., and three sisters: Mary Littlefield, Maggie DeFraine, and Martha Godfrey.

CHARLES H. WENTZ, one of the prominent business men of Wardner, being at present assistant cashier of the Weber bank, is a potent factor not only in the business world, but also in the political arena, has won signal victories and his standing in the social realm is of the very best. Mr. Wentz is a man of marked capabilities, has always manifested sterling worth and integrity and is well fitted to hold the prominent place which he occupies at this time.

Charles H. Wentz was born in Canal Dover, Ohio, on July 27, 1870, the son of Valentine and Elizabeth (Weber) Wentz. The father was born in Germany, came to the United States with his parents when small, and learned the millwright trade and later embarked in the manufacture of fire brick. He is now a retired capitalist. The mother was born in Canal Dover and is still living there. Our subject went through the public schools in Canal Dover, and then graduated from the Union college at Alliance, Ohio, in 1887. Following this Mr. Wentz occupied the bookkeeper's chair for the Wible Enck Company, of Canal Dover, then held the position of assistant postmaster for two years. From 1889 to 1890 he was assistant cashier of the First National Bank in his native town and in 1897 he came to Wardner and accepted his present position. The Weber brothers are uncles of Mr. Wentz. Since coming here Mr. Wentz has shown a marked interest in the upbuilding of the town, and has warmly supported all measures of general good. He is a man of public spirit and enterprise and to show the appreciation in which he is held, we note that when his name was mentioned for justice of the peace, three hundred and eighty-five votes out of five hundred were quickly cast for him. He has held this important office here for several terms and he is also a notary public. Mr. Wentz is a stanch Republican and his sagacity is timely in the councils of his party. Mr. Wentz is treasurer of the Kellogg Power and Water Company and owns one-third of the stock and he is also interested in several mining propositions of merit. He is a member of the German Lutheran church and still enjoys the quietude of the celibatarian and the charms of that life.

LOUIS C. ROBERTS is one of the best posted men in the mountain regions of Idaho, and is one of the best guides for these regions to be found in the central part of the state. He is a typical frontiersman, being a man of few words, reliable, keen, courageous and withal possessed of excellent practical judgment and a boundless store of information relative to these districts and the business of prospecting and guiding.

Louis C. Roberts was born in Pike county, Illinois, on November 9, 1856, being the son of Lewis and Lydia (Doak) Roberts. The father was born in Pike county, Illinois, and was of English extraction. He died when Louis was one year old, aged thirty-six. The mother was a native of Virginia and her parents were of Irish extraction. She died in 1863, aged thirty-nine. Our subject was reared by his legal guardian and uncle, James Roberts. He received a good district schooling and at the age of seventeen began to work out. In 1877 he came to California, thence to Oregon and eighteen months later to Palouse, where he resided for thirteen years. He took a claim there and sold it later and in 1892 he came to the Pierce district, and has raised cattle and mined here since that time. He recently purchased a farm of eighty acres near Fraser, where the family reside. Mr. Roberts is at the placer property, five miles north from Pierce, which he owns with some eastern parties. They have eight hundred acres and are buying more. He also had a goodly interest in a property that sold for twenty thousand dollars recently. Mr. Roberts is a reliable and skilled miner of practicability and also is an excellent guide in the mountains, having done much of that work.

Mr. Roberts has one brother and one sister, the former is in Garland, Oklahoma, being a cattle man and postmaster; his sister is Mary Hamner, and her husband was probate judge in Council Grove, Kansas.

At Palouse on August 20, 1882, Mr. Roberts married Miss Fanny Anderson, whose father died when she was young and her mother married Andrew Galau, a blacksmith and cabinet maker in Palouse. Mrs. Roberts was born in Kansas in 1865, and her brothers, Alexander and John, are near Palouse. Five children have been born to this household: Laura, Louis, Lillian, John and Frank. Mr. Roberts is a Democrat. Mrs. Roberts was formerly a school teacher and was county superintendent of Clearwater county until it was discontinued. Mr. Roberts has done much for the advancement of this district and is a faithful and wise worker in the realms where he is operating. Mr. Roberts and a partner from Detroit, Michigan, bought the Russell Shells Falls placer and are doing development work on it.

THOMAS C. THOMAS is one of the thrifty, intelligent and progressive miners of Wardner, a man of excellent standing and influential in political circles. He was born in Wales, December 25, 1854, the son of Even and Sarah Thomas, natives of Wales. The father was killed in a mine in Wales in 1866 and the mother died in Wales in 1897, aged ninety-four. The parents came to the United States a few years before our subject was born but soon returned to their native land. He was educated in a private school and also took a fine mining course and remained in Wales until 1879, having spent the last six years as foreman in the coal mines. He settled in Iowa and spent five years in the coal mines there and since that time he has continued uninterruptedly in this same capacity, having been foreman and shift boss in many mines in Iowa, Washington, Oregon, and Idaho. While in Oregon, Mr. Thomas bought a farm near Oregon City, which he is now renting. He has one brother and two sisters: James, Jane Evans, Mary Perry. Mr. Thomas is now engaged in the Empire State mine.

On September 27, 1875, Mr. Thomas married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Richard and Sarah Humphreys, now living in England, where the wedding occurred. Mr. Humphreys is a preacher in the Congregational church and has occupied one pulpit for thirty-three years. Mrs. Thomas has one brother and three sisters: Richard, Sarah Jenkins, Mary Rees, Hannah Hughes, all in Wales. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas: Sarah, widow of George M. Freeman, with her parents; Evan R., a blacksmith in Wardner; Thomas J., and David H., at home. Mr. Thomas is a member of the I. O. O. F., Newcastle, Washington, Lodge No. 8, being past noble grand; of the Encampment, being past high priest and patriarch; of the A. O. U. W.; of the Order of Pendo; and in all these orders he has filled the various chairs. Mr. Thomas is an active Republican and has been a delegate to the conventions of the county and also the last state convention. Mr. Thomas owns the family residence and considerable other city property. Mrs. Thomas is a member of the K. O. T. M. They are highly respected people and loyal and patriotic citizens.

CHARLES D. HUNT was born in Washington county, Nebraska, on September 28, 1873, the son of Thomas W. and Jeanette B. (Buchanan) Hunt, is now one of the prosperous farmers of the vicinity of Kingston. His parents are mentioned in another portion of this work and he partook in their travels until they all landed in this section. Charles D. was educated in Nebraska, Colfax county, and also in South Dakota. He was one of the ten children who came across the plains with their parents driving eleven head of horses. He has continued here since and has a good body of land.

On May 24, 1896, Mr. Hunt married Miss Frances, daughter of Frank and Mona (Bedell) Martin, the wedding occurring in Kingston. Mrs. Hunt was born in Lafayette county, Oregon, on October 10, 1880. Her father was born in Pennsylvania and came to Oregon across the plains with his parents in 1858. Settlement was made in the Willamette valley and in 1881 he came to northern Idaho and also participated in the gold rush in 1883-4. The mother of Mrs. Hunt was born in Missouri and crossed the plains in an early day, coming in over the old Mullan road. She drove a four-horse team. She was married in Seattle, where her father was engaged in lumbering. Her mother died in Rathdrum on May 24, 1886. Mrs. Hunt has one sister, Leo Williamson. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, Alfonso C., Tracy C., Thomas W., Jeanette A. Mr. Hunt is a member of the M. W. A. He and his wife are among the leading young people of their section and are of excellent standing.

THOMAS W. HUNT is one of the heaviest land owners in the county of Shoshone and he is one of the men whose endeavors have been rewarded by a good success. In addition to doing farming he also handles mining timbers. He was born in Tompkins county, New York, on July 14, 1846, the son of David and Mila Ann (Robinson) Hunt, natives of New York. The father made a fortune from oil at Bradford, Pennsylvania, and then retired from active business. His father was a prominent business man of Elmira, New York, and handled the largest tannery in the section. The grandfather, being the great-grandfather of our subject, was governor of New York state. David Hunt died in 1892, aged seventy-two. The mother of Thomas died when he was one year old.

He was raised and educated in Bradford, Pennsylvania, and vicinity, and in 1862 he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Forty-ninth New York Infantry, Captain John Gaffney, and Colonel H. A. Barnum. Mr. Hunt participated in eighteen of the leading battles of the war, and his regiment went in with nine hundred and eighty-nine and was mustered out with one hundred and sixty. Among his battles may be mentioned Lookout Mountain, Gettysburg, Chancellorsville. Mr. Hunt was slightly wounded once. In 1866 he went to Montana and freighted and three years later went to Iowa and settled in Osage. Then came a journey to Omaha, with ox teams, the date being 1872. The next year he went to Colfax county, Nebraska, and took a homestead. In 1887 he went to Hyde county, South Dakota, and farmed unsuccessfully. In the spring of 1890, Mr. Hunt with his wife and ten children came across the country to his present location. He owns four hundred and seventy-two acres of good land, and has one hundred and fifty cultivated. One son has two hundred and forty adjoining, and another son has two hundred acres. Mr. Hunt does general farming successfully, and is prospered. He has two brothers, John H., Charles H., and one sister, Emma Huff.

On December 21, 1869, at Bradford, Pennsylvania, Mr. Hunt married Miss Jeannette B., daughter of Arthur W. and Adeline (Foster) Buchanan, natives of Pennsylvania. The father died in 1902, aged eighty-three. He had lived on the same farm for seventy-four years. The mother lives in Bradford, where also Mrs. Hunt was born. The Foster family were prominent in American wars. Mrs. Hunt has one brother, Elwin, and four sisters, Irene Whipple, Florence Barnes, Della Holcumb, Minnie Schmoller. Twelve children have been born to this union: Charles D., Samuel N., Nora Smith, Robert W., Thomas E., Mila A., Calvin T., Effie, George B., Arthur W., who died in Colfax county, Nebraska, aged seven; Orlo G., died in the same place, aged eighteen months; Wilbur C., died October 19, 1896, at Kingston, aged twenty-four. Mr. Hunt is a member of M. W. A. and the G. A. R. He is a Republican in political matters, and interested in the general welfare of the country.

FRANK L. FOREMAN, one of the well known miners of Wardner, now in the Empire State as timberman, has had a wide experience in the western part of the United States in various capacities in mines and in prospecting and is thoroughly posted in his work.

Frank L. Foreman was born in Dover, Delaware, on June 27, 1854, the son of Joseph and Margaret J. (Mousley) Foreman, natives of Pennsylvania and Delaware, respectively, and now both deceased. The family came to Salt Lake City when our subject was five years old. He graduated from the graded schools there and then bought an outfit and freighted two years. At the age of twenty he went to work in the mines, and in this capacity he has been ever since. While in Utah Mr. Foreman would take trips to other districts and territories and mine and prospect and return to Salt Lake as his headquarters. He was foreman in the old Telegraph mine in Utah for five years, shift boss in the Bulpion Beck, also the same at the Continental, and the Eureka for four years, and he superintended the Bingham for one year. In August, 1899, Mr. Foreman came to Wardner and held the position of shift boss for the Bunker Hill until December, 1902, when he resigned and took his present positon. Mr. Foreman has two brothers and two sisters, Leander, Joseph, Mrs. Eliza Sellers, Mrs. Lavina Montague, all in Salt Lake City.

At Salt Lake City, on March 31, 1876, Mr. Foreman married Miss Rachel, daughter of William and Phoebe Brown, deceased. She was born in Bountiful, Utah, and has three sisters, Mrs. Mary Race, Mrs. Adelia Stanley, Mrs. Naomi Woolsey. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Foreman, Frank L., Jr., Jesse, Harvard. Mr. Foreman is a Republican, and while always laboring for the best interests is not a partisan.

SIM CANMAN. The fact that when seventeen years of age with a capital of twenty-five cents, the subject of this article started a bakery business in Colorado, and made such a success of it that he was enabled to sell it in six months for eight hundred dollars, is a pertinent index to the enterprise, ability, energy and business sagacity with which he is possessed.

Sim Canman was born in Baden, Germany, on October 18, 1867, the son of Simon and Mina (Kahnheimer) Canman, natives of Baden, and now living there. The father is a prominent man and land owner, and served in the Franco-Prussian war. The father's brother was lieutenant in the same company, and now wears the iron cross. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a very prominent military man. Personally he was seven feet tall, weighed three hundred and fifty pounds, and was one of the officers of the grenadiers who fought under Napoleon at Moscow. Later he took the field against Napoleon and fought with the Austrian army, and here as in the German service received important decorations. He was an important personage in action for the government in the German rebellion of 1848 against Schurz, Sigel and others who were exiled. He lived to the grand old age of one hundred and one, dying in the 'seventies. He started his military career as a non-commissioned officer, and received upon retirement a pension of eleven hundred marks per year.

Our subject came to the United States when thirteen and finished his education, which he had begun in Germany. He learned the baker trade in St. Louis, and when seventeen started the business in Colorado which we have mentioned, and which demonstrated his capacity for business. After selling this business he wrought in all of the western states, Mexico and British Columbia, and in September, 1897, he came to Wardner and entered the employ of another baker. For three and one-half years he wrought there, and then the proprietor failed. Our subject bought out another small shop, and being short of capital, took it on installments. He began a career of success at once, and now has a fine stock of four or five thousand dollars' worth of the choicest confections and bakery goods, and is handling a thriving trade. He occupies the upper apartments of his building as a living place, having sold his residence. Mr. Canman has made a brilliant success in his business, and is of excellent standing. He has the following brothers and sisters: Max, Daniel, Leo, Morris, Mrs. A. Schier, Hannah, Amelia. In Utah, on December 25, 1891, Mr. Canman married Miss May, daughter of Thomas and Mary Powell, deceased. Three children have come to bless the home: Leo, Mamie, Alice. Mr. Canman is a member of the M. W. A., and in political matters he is as active as his business will permit, being a stanch Republican.

WILLIAM H. MYERS. In the various capacities in which Mr. Myers has wrought in this district, as in other places also, it is fully demonstrated that he is a man of enterprise and ability, and in the position which he now fills with acceptability, that of superintendent of the Morning Mill at Mullan, he has shown forth a keen discrimination, executive force, practical and sound judgment which have placed him in the front ranks of mining men of this district.

William H. Myers was born in Salem, Jefferson county, Ohio, on January 6, 1850, the son of Andrew J. and Mary J. (McKee) Myers, natives of Ohio. The father was in the Civil war, being a member of Company I, Sixteenth Ohio, and was killed early in the struggle at the battle of Perryville, Kentucky. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a patriot in the Revolution. The mother now dwells in Quincy, Illinois, aged seventy-six. She comes from Scotch extraction. Our subject was reared and educated in Iowa, and after completing a high school course, he entered a military academy in Fulton, Illinois, whence he graduated and then removed to Illinois to live. He took up railroad contracting for five years and then erected a flour mill in Quincy. This he conducted for twelve years, then sold out the milling business, went to St. Joseph, Missouri, and took up railroad work again for seven years. After this we see him again in Quincy, and in 1897 he came thence to Mullan, where he wrought as a millwright. In 1900 Mr. Myers assumed charge of the Morning mill and since that time he has handled the plant in a satisfactory manner. He has one brother and two sisters, John, Mrs. Harriet Steele, Jennie M.

On June 8, 1881, Mr. Myers married Miss Mary, daughter of Robert and Ann Fitzgerald, who are now deceased. Mrs. Myers was born in Washington, D. C., and she has one brother, Robert. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Myers, Agnes, wife of Wilbur Greenough, of the Greenough Brothers Mercantile Company of Mullan, Idaho; Rose, attending college of the Holy Names, in Spokane; Ruth, at home. Mr. Myers is a member of the A. F. & A. M., of the R. A. M. and of the K. T. He is a man of excellent standing in the community, has shown himself upright and capable and has hosts of friends from every class.

DANIEL McEACHERN is a leading mining man of the Coeur d'Alene country, and is at present living at Silver King, where he is following this business with enterprise and skill. He was born in Prince Edward Island on January 22, 1842, the son of Donald and Ellen (McVarish) McEachern. The father was born in Prince Edward Island and his parents were natives of Scotland. He went to California via the isthmus in 1854, and mined until 1861, then came to Boise basin, and in 1865 returned to his native place. Afterward he came to the coast for a year, then settled in Cape Breton Island, where he died in 1878. The mother was born in Virginia, and died at her home in Cape Breton Island a few months after her husband's demise. Our subject was educated in the public schools, and when seventeen went to Massachusetts, then followed the sea for three years. Later he went to California via the isthmus, then on to Boise basin, where he joined his father. He continued mining there until 1870, then went to Pioche, Nevada, Arizona, Utah and in 1876 went to Butte. In 1879 he was in Custer county, Idaho, then Lemhi and other portions of the center of the state. In 1884 he located at Delta and in April located the Weiser bar placer. He and his partners spent much time and money on that without success. In 1886 he came to the vicinity of Silver King and here he has been since, continuing in mining industries. Mr. McEachern has been engaged in most of the leading mines of the district and is thoroughly versed in mining and handling mines. In 1891 he located the Wyoming in Grouse gulch, and in 1887 he located the Oro-Dell. He retains interests in all of these and is vice-president of the Wyoming Mining & Milling Company. This company has some valuable property and Mr. McEachern is interested in all their holdings. He has one brother,—Hugh, and four sisters, Mary A. McDonald, Catherine, Margaret and Annie. Mr. McEachern has never seen fit to embark on the matrimonial sea but is still enjoying the quiet charms of celibacy. He is independent in political matters and is a man of sterling qualities of uprightness. He is interested in all of the mining properties and companies adjacent to the O. K., and is one of the heavy operators.

ISAAC D. CLEEK. A stirring and energetic man in the industrial world of Pierce, being now owner and operator of the saw mill in that town, while also he is interested in mining, the subject of this article is deserving of representation in the history of his county.

Isaac D. Cleek was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, on June 30, 1857, being the son of James and Elizabeth (Reeves) Cleek, natives of Kentucky. The father was killed in the battle of Wilson Creek in the Civil war. He was a physician. The mother was married in Kentucky and died in Pullman, Washington, on December 25, 1897, aged sixty-two. In 1867 she was married a second time, becoming the wife of William L. Ritchey, who was a pioneer in the region of Boise. He built the first cabin, planted the first potatoes, and set out the first apple tree in that now prosperous region. In company with Messrs. Davis and Ellis he laid out the town of Boise. He now lives in Pullman. Our subject came to Boise with his mother and uncle when he was six, and there he gained his education and also learned mining. He has followed mining in all the southern Idaho camps, in Oregon, Montana, and various other places. He came to Shoshone county in 1893 and mined and did blacksmith work. He recently erected a sawmill, capacity eight thousand feet daily, and he is doing a good business. Mr. Cleek is one of the owners of the Klondike mine of French creek, the Oro Grand mine and several other properties. The Oro Grand is a large low grade proposition and doubtless is very valuable. Mr. Cleek has two brothers, Mathew S., an engineer in Palouse; Benjamin, farmer in Linn county, Oregon. Also he has one half brother, George Ritchey, in Pullman. Mr. Cleek is a member of the K. of P., Banner Lodge, No. 1, in Ketchum, Idaho.

On April 12, 1886, at Ketchum, Mr. Cleek married Miss Anna, daughter of William and Ann (Dennison) Martin, natives, respectively, of Nottingham, England, and Toronto, Canada. The father came to the United States when he was a young man, and died in Michigan in 1888, aged sixty. Mrs. Martin married in Canada and died in Michigan on November 1, 1898. Mrs. Cleek has five brothers and one sister, Franklin, Charles, Arthur, Burton, all in Grand Rapids, Michigan; Fred, living with our subject; Jane, wife of Charles Anderson, at Grand Rapids. Politically Mr. Cleek is an independent thinker. In 1891, one of those accidents which no human reason can compass, but to which we can only bow, occurred in the home of Mr. Cleek. His wife became totally blind. She is a woman of wonderful tenacity of purpose and skill, for despite this affliction, she attends to her household duties and displays most commendable skill and a beautiful spirit. Mr. and Mrs. Cleek are very popular and are possessed of very many warm and admiring friends.

SAMUEL H. LINN. Among the capable and successful citizens of the Coeur d'Alene country we are constrained to mention the subject of this article whose labors have always been directed toward upbuilding the country and development of the grand mineral resources which are to be found here. He was born in Sweden on September 30, 1873, the son of Hans and Emma (Buhr) Linn. He came to the United States in 1887, having been well educated in the public schools of his native land before he bade farewell to its familiar scenes and turned to seek his fortune here. After reaching Minnesota he spent some time in school and working on a farm, and in 1889 he made his way to Old Mission in Kootenai county. Saw milling occupied Mr. Linn for a year, and railroad work then at Wallace for a time. Next we see him in the Bunker Hill and other leading mines of the district. Afterward he associated himself with his brother, Ole Linn, and he is now in this capacity. Mr. Linn is engineer at the O. K. mines in Silver King, and is a capable and trustworthy man in this responsible position.

On January 5, 1900, Mr. Linn married Miss Annie E., daughter of Frank and Minnie (Peterson) Johnson, natives of Sweden, and now farmers in Vernon, South Dakota. This wedding occurred in Alexandria, Minnesota. Mrs. Linn has four brothers and one sister,—Rudolph, Fred, Arthur, Alben, Lottie, all at home in Vernon. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Linn,—Herbert, aged one year. Mr. Linn is a member of the Scandinavian Brotherhood. From 1896 to 1900 Mr. Linn was residing in Minnesota, where he bought a farm, which is now rented. He is interested in the Rhode Island group of mines near Osburn.

HENRY H. BOLE. Sometimes the charms of the miner's calling and the allurement of the quiet of nature's wilderness entice from the professional calling devotees and successful men, and among this number we are to mention the estimable gentleman of whom we now speak. Dr. Bole is a man of culture and excellent training, being a graduate of both the Bellevue and the Rush medical colleges, as well as trained in practical exercise of his profession for many years. At the present time Dr. Bole has a fine showing in the mining world, having a group of claims known as the Homestead group, while also he owns a number of miles of ditch and some fine placer claims. He resides about one and one-half miles east from Pierce, and is devoting his attention to mining interests. The quartz claims are valuable property and eventually will return a fine revenue to the owner.

Henry H. Bole was born in Meadville, Pennsylvania, on January 1, 1851, being the son of William J. and Ellen (Mead) Bole. The father was born in Meadville, and his parents came from the north of Ireland. He died at the age of ninety-one in August, 1895, at the home place. He was a large land owner. The mother of our subject was born in Meadville, and her parents were descended from the New England Puritans. Meadville was named after her father, Darius Mead, who owned the ground on which the city of Meadville now stands. Henry attended the district school and then completed his literary training in the Allegheny College at Meadville. Subsequent to this he took the medical course mentioned above and graduated with honors. He had spent some time in the work of the educator during the interim, however. Until 1882 Dr. Bole was constant in practice and handling a drug business in Pennsylvania, and then he did business in Minnesota, in the Black Hills in an early day, and in 1889 he came to Spokane only to have his entire household goods burned in the depot, with his stock of drugs. Afterward he did business in a tent with a portion of the stock which had not arrived until later. But in 1890 the fire fiend devoured all this, and the doctor left Spokane and located his family in Lewiston while he went to prospecting in the vicinity of Pierce. His labor has been crowned with success and he has some of the most valuable property in the vicinity, being the pioneer locator of quartz in this district. Dr. Bole has three brothers and four sisters,—William H., in Warren, Pennsylvania; Darius W., in Beaver county, Pennsylvania; David M.,in Warren, Pennsylvania, doing business in oil; Elizabeth, wife of Samuel Mead, in Pennsylvania; Mary, wife of Philip Kleckner, in Bradford, Pennsylvania; Sarah E. and Agnes at home. Dr. Bole is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, and of the A. O. U. W.

On December 14, 1882, Dr. Bole married Miss Margie A., daughter of James D. and Eliza E. (Miller) Shields, natives of Pennsylvania. The father was a lumber merchant and died when Mrs. Bole was fourteen. His wife died in Pennsylvania in January, 1897. Mrs. Bole was raised by an uncle and was educated in the graded schools. She lived in Erie, Pennsylvania, Cleveland, Ohio, and in Philadelphia. Dr. Bole and his wife are cultured people and universally beloved by all who know them, and they are worthy of the excellent holding that they have acquired by arduous labor.

CHARLES S. PERRIN. Early in 1903 Mr. Perrin took the important position of warden of the state penitentiary of Idaho at Boise. His home is in Wardner where he has been one of the leading men of many years and where his sound and clear counsel in the meetings of his party,—the Republican—have manifested him to be a man of sagacity, keen discrimination, good reserve force and real worth. He was born in Iowa on November 2, 1857, being the son of Caleb and Mary J. (Uretteer) Perrin, natives of Indiana and Pennsylvania, respectively. The paternal ancestors came from Normandy, settled in England in the time of William the Conqueror, thence to America in 1636, were prominent in the war of independence and of 1812. The father died in August, 1900, in Gilliam county, Oregon, aged seventy-eight. The mother came from an old Pennsylvania family, and she died in Gilliam county in May, 1893, aged sixty-four. Our subject was reared and educated in Oregon, completing his training by a three years' course in the university at Salem. The family left Gilliam county for that place when he was fourteen. At the age of twenty-four he went to live in eastern Oregon, and farmed and raised stock. He was under sheriff of Gilliam county, and was United States and city marshal in Arlington for three years. Later he went to Puget sound and did general merchandising, then took up hotel keeping in Fairhaven, after which he operated in the Monte Christo mining district. In 1895 Mr. Perrin came to Wardner, and here he has done contracting for the Bunker Hill mine most of the time since. From 1898 to 1900 Mr. Perrin was chairman of the central committee, and he has been an influential figure in the state conventions. He has been an active Republican, true blue, since he was twenty-one, and is a man of great influence and stability. Mr. Perrin has the following brothers and sisters,—George L., John P., Frank, Mrs. Phœbe Stinchfield, Mrs. Mary Eddleman, Mrs. Laura McConnell, Mrs. Lillie Kiser.

In February, 1881, in Linn county, Oregon, Mr. Perrin married Miss Eliza E., daughter of John B. and Julatha Trask, the father an early pioneer of Oregon, and the mother born there. Four children have been born to this marriage,—Ralph E., died May, 1898, aged sixteen; Roy B., aged eighteen; Fred, aged seventeen; George D., aged three. Mrs. Perrin has seven brothers and one sister,—William H., Lewis, Horace, Augustus, Edward, Arthur, John, Mrs. Emma Frost. Mr. Perrin is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Fossil Lodge No. 81, at Fossil, Oregon. He is also affiliated with the I. O. O. F., and the American Mechanics, and, with his wife, belongs to the Daughters of America.

EMMET L. VANDERWERKEN is one of the substantial mining men of the Silver King camp and his record as one of the early pioneers shows that he is a man of enterprise, courage and skill. He was born in Schoharie county, New York, the son of John H. and Sarah A. (LaGrange) VanDerwerken, natives of New York, and their ancestors came from Alsace-Lorraine. The grandfather took part in the war of 1812. Our subject's father died when he was eight. The mother died in 1899 at St. Louis, Missouri. Our subject was educated and reared in his native place receiving a good academic training. He enlisted in Company F, Second New Jersey Cavalry, under Captain Mitchell and Colonel Kargee. Companies F and H were ordered to charge eight hundred enemy at Egypt and they were repulsed with great slaughter. Then the regiment surrounded the enemy and captured them. It was one of the bloodiest episodes of the war. Following the war Mr. VanDerwerken taught school, and in the early seventies removed to Colorado and did mining and operated in a quartz mill. Then he was in Arizona and New Mexico, and in 1881 he was found in Idaho, and he was one of the first to come to the Cœur d'Alene country. He operated a hotel at Trout Creek, farmed on Jackass prairie and later worked in the mines in Wardner. He did development work in his own properties between times and he is now interested in various valuable properties. He located his first claim in Government gulch in 1886, and is now the president of the Government Mining & Development Company, Ltd. His son, John A., is secretary and B. Flaig is treasurer. Mr. VanDerwerken has one sister,—Emma Fiske.

On January 1, 1868, at Warrentown, Missouri, Mr. VanDerwerken married Miss Dorcas Hammontree, who was born in Blount county, Tennessee, in March 1845. Her father was a native of the same state and died in Missouri in 1901. Mrs. VanDerwerken has three brothers,—William, John, Ellison, and one sister,—Margaret Logan. Nine children have been born to this marriage,—Katie, widow of Daniel O'Neil, a locomotive engineer, who was killed in a holdup on the Northern Pacific, near Garrison, in 1902; Jennie, wife of Peter Kau, of Wallace; John A., a miner in Wardner; Emma, wife of Kenneth McLeod, a blacksmith of Wallace; Ida, wife of Harvey Hanawalt, a miner in Wardner; Maud, single; Lillie, Edward E., the first boy born on the South Fork; Tillie. The last three are deceased. Mr. VanDerwerken is a member of the A. F. & A. M. He is a Democrat and a good solid man and public minded citizen.

WILLIAM GAFFNEY. Among the popular young men of Pierce, there is none that stand higher in the esteem and confidence of the people than the subject of this sketch, who is a stirring business man and has wrought here with no uncertain results in his achievements. At the present time Mr. Gaffney is a partner with his brother John, who is mentioned elsewhere in the volume. They own the Ozark group of freemilling gold quartz mines, which are at the present time bonded for fifty-seven thousand dollars. In addition to this, Mr. Gaffney has a one-third interest in a quarter section of valuable placer ground near Pierce; has a farm of one-quarter section of fine farming land and as much excellent timber near Weippe. He is still a young man and the accumulations of his labors show him to have been a good business manager, possessed of keen foresight and thrift.

William Gaffney was born in Pierce on February 14, 1873, being the son of Patrick and Bridget Gaffney, of whom mention is made in this work. He was educated in the common schools and by a private instructor provided by his father. He is well trained in knowledge requisite to a first-class business career and is a stirring man. Politically Mr. Gaffney is a Democrat of the Jeffersonian type and capable of defending his position in debate and telling argument. He is still content to remain in the ranks of bachelordom, as the charms of quiet celibacy are congenial to his tastes.

WILLIAM M. FALCONER is a highly esteemed citizen of Silver King, and is the postmaster there. He is a man of real worth and stands high with all who know him. William M. Falconer was born in Ontario, on the St. Lawrence, on November 19, 1832, the son of James and Anna (Hay) Falconer. The father was born in Philadelphia, and when young was taken to Canada where he remained until his death in 1861. The mother was born in Scotland, and she died when our subject was six. William M. was educated and reared in Canada until eighteen and then he came to the United States and labored at bricklaying and marble cutting until 1863. Then he went to California, via the Isthmus, and worked at his trade and in the mines about and at the Comstock. Next he was in Minnesota, and for five years was chairman of the board of county commissioners. After this he operated a general merchandise business in the Black Hills, and later in Bismarck, North Dakota, then followed farming and raising stock for five years, after which he operated a hotel in Bismarck for seven years. Thence he came to Kellogg in 1888 and did timbering on the Bunker Hill. He has been postmaster at Silver King since July, 1901, and his administration has given general satisfaction. Mr. Falconer is also handling the boarding house. He has mining interests with his nephew, William J. McLean, also other mining property. Mr. Falconer has the following brothers and sisters,—Samuel A., Norman, Daniel. William A., John, Henry, Anna McClellan, Margaret McDonald, Eliza MacNider, Jennie Cameron, Christena Gilbert, Mary McLean.

On February 9, 1873, Mr. Falconer married Miss Sadie McTigue, the wedding occurring at St. Paul, Minnesota. Mrs. Falconer was born in New York on August 3, 1851, and death claimed her on October 22, 1889, at Sioux Falls, South Dakota. One daughter survives her, Edna, wife of Chauncey W. Butler, a dentist in Independence, Oregon. Mr. Falconer's son, Samuel N., died January 21, 1883, at Bismarck, aged seven; his daughter, Clara C., died in Wardner September 6, 1897, the result of an accidental gunshot. Mr. Falconer is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and of the chapter and of the I. O. O. F. He is a Republican and was postmaster at Bismarck for five years. Mr. Falconer is now clerk of the school board and is justice of the peace.

JOHN AULD is one of the early settlers of Kellogg, and for years has been identified with the country and the mines. He is a man of substantial qualities and of excellent standing. John Auld was born amid the rugged scenes of Scotland and reared and educated there. The date of his inception in life was January 3, 1850, being the son of John and Agnes (Rodman) Auld, natives of Scotland. The father was a calico printer and muslin weaver, now deceased. The mother died in August, 1902, aged eighty. Our subject came to the United States in 1880, locating in Randolph county, Missouri, where he followed mining. Later he wrought at this occupation in Murphysboro, Illinois, then went to Tombstone, Arizona, and mined for silver. Next we see him in Coos Bay country, Oregon, where he mined coal, and in 1887 he made his way to Wardner, and, after a short time in various employments he took a position in the Bunker Hill mines and remained in that capacity until 1892. Then he was transferred to the mill at Kellogg and there he has wrought with display of faithfulness and efficiency since. Mr. Auld has a fine large two story lodging house, and also a residence, besides other property.

On October 24, 1873, Mr. Auld married Miss Agnes, daughter of Andrew and Mary Garrett, deceased. Mrs. Auld has two brothers,—James and Andrew, in Arizona, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Gunnyon, in Portland. Five children have been born to this couple,—Mary, wife of Adam Geottge, a miner in Wardner; Agnes, wife of Charles W. Simmons, bookkeeper in the Bunker Hill; Margaret, wife of William H. Herrick, shift boss in the Empire State; Jamesina, with parents; John, a student in the university at Moscow taking a special course in mining. Mr. Auld is a member of the I. O. O. F., Sunset Lodge No. 5, in Marshfield, Oregon. He is also a member of the Industrial Union, and in politics he is a Republican. Mr. Auld has also served as school trustee.

JOSEPH B. KENDALL is foreman of the Coeur d'Alene Development Company's mines at Silver King. He was born in Mariposa county, California, on September 16, 1863, the son of Benjamin and Palmer (Vigeraux) Kendall. The father was born in Bristol, England, and died in 1902 at Spokane, aged seventy-one years. He was a blacksmith and came to the United States in 1850, sent out by a mining company. He followed his trade and mining all his days. He was in the Cariboo excitement in the 'sixties, then he returned to California, later was in Silver City, Idaho, and in 1875 was sent to New Guinea for a French mining company. He went to England in 1900 and upon his return came to work with his son and was taken with pneumonia and died in the Sacred Heart hospital on August 2, 1902. The mother was a native of France and lives in Bodie, California. Our subject was educated in the district schools in California and in Virginia City until fourteen, then he went to work on a ranch in Nevada. He operated in the mines at Bodie for six years, then followed mining in Virginia City, later he was in the fire department there also, after which he prospected in Arizona and was shift boss and foreman in various places until 1895, when he came to the Coeur d'Alene country. He was a short time in the Bunker Hill, also in the Last Chance, being shift boss for over two years. He leased for some time the mines, and on April 1, 1901, Mr. Kendall came to his present position and here he has remained since. He has one brother, Thomas, and one sister, Helen Duval, and one half-sister, Annie Kelly.

On March 17, 1896, Mr. Kendall married Miss Mable, daughter of John and Sarah (Duffy) Bagley, natives of New York. They have one child, William T., born November 16, 1902. The father was a pioneer to California and was port inspector at San Francisco under Grant and later at the mint at Carson. He died in 1883. The mother died at San Francisco in 1894. Mrs. Kendall is a native of San Francisco and has one sister, Katie Smith.

WILLIAM H. HERRICK, JR., well and favorably known in Wardner, where he holds the position of shift boss in the Empire State mine, is a young man of capabilities and excellent standing. He was born in Oswego, New York, on May 3, 1875, being the son of William H. and Harriet (Mollison) Herrick, natives of New York. The father descended from an old and prominent American family and his ancestors fought for American independence, one of them being an officer in the Continental army. He is now agent for the Louisiana Cypress Company in New York. The mother came from Scotch ancestry, who also were prominent in the Revolution. Our subject was reared in Oswego and Lockport until fourteen and then the family went to New Rochelle. He received a fine course in the high school in New York and then a scientific course in the University in that city, paying especial attention to civil enginering. Completing that, Mr. Herrick came to Rossland, British Columbia, where he operated in the mines two years. The next year was spent in charge of the Stray Horse mine in Republic, Washington, and in July, 1900, Mr. Herrick came to Wardner and engaged in the mines. Two months later he was promoted to his present position and has done efficient work here since that time. Mr. Herrick has three brothers and one sister, Gilbert, Harold, Richard, Lena.

On September 17, 1901, Mr. Herrick married Miss Margaret, daughter of John and Margaret Auld, who are mentioned in the work, as also are their children. Mr. Herrick is a Republican and takes the part of an intelligent citizen in the political campaigns. He is a member of the Delta Phi fraternity.

WILLIAM D. SHAMBERGER is the efficient superintendent of the Cœur d'Alene Development Company at Silver King, and is a well known and capable mining man. He was born in Baltimore county, Maryland, on May 21, 1857, the son of Jacob and Julia (Beckley) Shamberger, natives of the same county as our subject. The father was a prominent preacher in the German Brethren, and also a leading business man. He operated farms, saw and grist mills, was president of a railroad and was a successful man. He died in 1895 on the old homestead. His father, Jacob, was a participant in the war of 1812. The mother died in 1891, and came from a very prominent family. Her brother Daniel is now managing a large paper manufactory that his grandfather established. Our subject was educated in the public and normal schools, and, when twenty-one went to North Dakota. Then we next see him in Butte, Montana, foreman of the concentrator for the Parrott Smelting Company. Under President Arthur's administration he was appointed farmer on the Shoshone reservation. Then he was one of the builders and owners of the Butte Reduction Works, and also leased mines. Later he was superintendent of the Young American mine just above Colville, Washington, and assisted to found Bossburg. In November, 1893, Mr. Shamberger returned to his old position in Butte for five years. Then he was manager of the Eva May mines at Basin, Montana, and in 1899 he came to Silver King, and since that time he has been in charge of the Silver King, Crown Point and other properties of this company. Mr. Shamberger has three brothers and four sisters,—Daniel, Joseph, John, Elizabeth Royer, Sarah Barron, Esther Chenowath, Susannah.

On October 26, 1896, at Butte, Mr. Shamberger married Miss Maud, daughter of Hugh and Mary (McLeod) McMillan, natives of Canada. They live in Butte, but Mr. McMillan is now absent in South Africa building mills. He is an architect and millwright of note. To Mr. and Mrs. Shamberger there have been born four children,—John Philip, aged six; Hugh A. and Ralph J., twins, aged three; Ruth, aged eighteen months. Mr. Shamberger is a member of the Foresters, and of the Junior Order of Mechanics. Mrs. Shamberger is a member of the Presbyterian church. He is a solid Republican, and has been to the state conventions. Mr. Shamberger is interested with his brother in a stock farm at Payette.

WILLIAM P. SWINERTON. A pioneer of the early days, coming to Wardner, then Kentuck, on May 3, 1886, in company with J. H. Anderson, the subject of this review has steadily wrought here since with assiduity and faithfulness, and is one of the substantial and reliable men of the town. Wardner consisted of one tent where the Spokane hotel stands, one tent opposite, and one log house when Mr. Swinerton arrived here, and he has seen the growth and improvement that has made this one of the best districts of the northwest. At first he bonded the Sierra Nevada for sixty thousand dollars and his partner went east to raise the funds, but failed until after the bond expired. Then Mr. Swinerton went to hauling ore for the Empire State, and later contracted for the Bunker Hill & Sullivan to handle their freight, and since then he has continued at this business. He has about thirty head of horses and also does general freighting and contracting. We append also a detailed account of the career of Mr. Swinerton which will be interesting to all. He was born in Ontario, Canada, on April 29, 1853, being the son of Thomas and Eliza (Parker) Swinerton, natives of Canada. The paternal grandfather of our subject was born in Ireland. Thomas Swinerton was reeve of his county in Canada for thirty years, the office being the same as chairman of the board of county commissioners here. He was a member of the lower house of parliament for four years, and in 1849 came to California and built a saw mill which he operated for two years. Returning to Canada, he came back to California for one year and then went home with a good fortune. He owned farms, a saw mill, grist mill, a general merchandise store and much other property in Canada. Mr. Swinerton was a prominent and influential citizen and was also a leading Free Mason, being past grand master. His death occurred on December 21, 1893, being aged seventy-three. The mother of our subject died March 29, 1901. Her father was a wealthy and prominent man, born in Ireland. Our subject was educated in the excellent schools of Ontario, and when twenty-five came to Iowa, having also been on his own resources since thirteen years of age. He bought a farm, later sold and engaged in the livery business, and then sold that and came with an old prospector, J. H. Anderson, overland to Murray in 1885. He mined in this place a little and then came to Kentuck, as mentioned above. Mr. Swinerton has two brothers and two sisters,—James, Albert, Margaret, Mary.

On February 28, 1879, Mr. Swinerton married Miss Agnes, daughter of James and Agnes Richardson. Mr. Richardson owned a beautiful residence in Canada, known as the Maple Grove. He went to California in 1849 and returned with a good fortune. He died on May 26, 1894, in his seventieth year. Mrs. Richardson is also deceased. Mrs. Swinerton has two brothers,—John W., William H. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Swinerton,—Mrs. Agnes Thompson, whose husband is foreman in the machine shops of the Empire State; Alice, Albert T., both attending the university at Moscow; Wiley and Annie, both deceased. Mr. Swinerton is a member of the K. P., of the I. O. O. F., and of the Eagles. Mr. and Mrs. Swinerton are both active Republicans, and he is a member of the central committee, while Mrs. Swinerton takes as active a part in political matters as the duties of her household will permit. They are among the leaders in society and are popular and good people. Mrs. Swinerton is a member of the Congregational church.

FRED A. STEVENS is one of the leading, enterprising and public minded citizens of Osburn, and it is with pleasure that we are privileged to mention his career in this connection, especially so as he is one of the earliest prospectors in this district, and is one of those whose labors have wrought much for the country. He was born in England on May 6, 1859, the son of Alfred and Sarah (Denhan) Stevens, natives of England, where they still live, now retired. Our subject was well educated in the leading schools, and came to the United States in 1882, and in May, 1883, he was in the first excitement in the Cœur d'Alene district. All left again, and the next year as some came out with dust to buy provisions there was another rush. Our subject bought a beef animal and hired Indians to pack it in and sold it to good advantage. Then he bought another and drove it in and netted one hundred and ninety-two dollars beside sixty dollars for a load his horse packed. Then Mr. Stevens went to packing and into the meat business and he did well. He also had prospectors out and he did well in that line, selling one claim for seven thousand dollars. Mr. Stevens also packed the first ore out of the Bunker and other mines. In 1886 he bought his present ranch in Osburn, and later added some other land. Then he went into the meat business, and later added freighting and devoted himself to these occupations and conducting his farm. Latterly he has given himself entirely to handling stock and to operating a wholesale and retail market. He has established one of the most excellent places in the Cœur d'Alene district, it being at Wallace. He is now located on Sixth street. Mr. Stevens has three brothers and three sisters,—Joseph, Cornelius, Edwin, Sarah Harding, Mary A. Harding, Florence Purcell.

In October, 1884, Mr. Stevens married Mrs. Mary

Taylor, a native of Ireland. Mr. Stevens is a member of the I. O. O. F., and of the Encampment. He is popular, both for his stirring qualities and for his genial and upright ways, and his friends are numerous from all quarters of the country. Mr. Stevens is a capable and successful business man, and has manifested real worth and industry in his career.

WILLIAM J. SHEEHY is one of the partners of the firm of Smith & Sheehy, druggists of Pierce. He was born in Allamakee county, Iowa, on November 26, 1872, being the son of James W. and Ellen (Murphy) Sheehy. The father was born in Brattleboro, Vermont, in 1847 and died in 1897. He was of Irish extraction and was prominent in local politics, having been mayor of his town, Postville, for two terms. He followed contracting and building. The mother of our subject was born in Missouri, and her parents came from Ireland. She was married in Clearmont, Iowa, in 1871 and died in 1899, aged fifty years. William J. was raised in Iowa, received his elementary training in the district school and afterwards was especially favored in having a course at the state university and also at Bayless college in Dubuque. In 1892 he went to St. Paul with Gordon & Furguson, furriers, continuing for three years. Then he acted as salesman in various places in Dakota and in 1901 he came to Idaho engaging for a short time in Lewiston. Next he came to Orofino and later entered partnership with Mr. Smith. In addition to their drug business they handle a large trade in tobaccos and cigars. Mr. Sheehy has six sisters, Mayme, wife of George Newburry, cashier of the First National Bank at Carrington, North Dakota; Margaret, Nellie, Kate, Veronica and Ruth, all residing at Carrington. Mr. Sheehy is a member of the K. of P. and the M. W. A. at Orofino.

In North Dakota on December 6, 1897, Mr. Sheehy married Miss Laura A., daughter of James and Margaret (Johnson) Hunt, natives of Canada, and now in the implement business in Willow City, North Dakota. Mrs. Sheehy has a common schooling and has two brothers and two sisters, Harry, Robert, Edith, wife of Charles Mallory, partner with his father-in-law; Jessie, single, living with parents. Two sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sheehy, Harold and Alvin. Mr. Sheehy is interested in mining in the Pierce district.

BENJAMIN C. HAMMITT was one of the first to invade the Prichard creek country in the early days and since then he has been associated with the mining here almost constantly and his enterprise, skill and assiduity have given him a good success. He was born in Oregon, December 20, 1859, the son of Norman P. and Frances (Zumwalt) Hammitt, natives of Ohio and Missouri, respectively. The father crossed the plains to San Francisco in 1849, mined about seven years, then went to the Willamette valley, where he died on June 6, 1901. He fought in the Rogue river Indian war. The mother crossed the plains with her parents in the early 'forties. Our subject was educated in the public schools and the state university, then was employed on the civil engineer corps of the O. R. & N. and in 1883 came to Palouse, Washington. He came in August of that year over the Evolution trail to Mr. Prichard's house, the only one in Eagle and later went back to the Palouse country. The next year he came in over the Jackass trail and since then he has been here constantly excepting some visits to his native place. Mr. Hammitt sold a quartz claim for two thousand dollars and he has located, sold and worked in mining constantly since. In 1891 he bought a fourth interest in the Myrtle group and since has devoted his energy to working that group. He also owns an interest in the Montana bar group and also has several other claims. Mr. Hammitt has the following brothers and sisters, George, Marvin, Victor, John, Cloud, May, Belle Seeley, Fanny Barker, Maud, Grace. Mr. Hammitt is a member of the A. F. & A. M., being senior deacon. He is a Democrat and has been in the county convention. Mr. Hammitt is a man of worth and good character, has many friends and has won confidence and esteem from all.

LUDWIG NISTLER, who is now mining at Delta and is one of the well known and popular men of the district, has had a long and eventful experience that detailed in full would make an interesting volume. We append a brief epitome. He was born in Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Germany, on April 27, 1854, the son of Ludwig and Sophie (Walter) Nistler, natives of the same place. The father died on May 1, 1901. He had been in the United States and had served in the Civil war. The mother died when our subject was fifteen. Ludwig was well educated in literary lines and in music and also perfected himself in the locksmith trade. When twenty-seven he came to the United States and worked in Missoula, then mined on Clearwater creek, then wrought variously until January, 1884, when he came to Eagle via Trout creek. He built houses, laid foundations and did various other work with his partners and later prospected. Then he was in the Lolo creek district but returned here "broke." He sold a mule and got a start, then prospected some more with the success of finding nothing. Then Mr. Nistler assisted to erect Brown's brewery, to dig Hammond's big ditch and also did some good performing on the great Fourth of July celebration well known to all in early days. Mr. Nistler built a good portion of the Osburn road, dug on Dutch Jake's bar, where he made an ounce per day, then mined all summer industriously with his partner and in the fall summed up their capital into forty dollars of debt and the grub all gone. They tried it on California bar and hired help, but after they paid their men found themselves in the same condition as on the last occasion. Later he bought an interest in Placer Gulch and sunk a shaft but found nothing. The next year they ground sluiced and simply made their board and still Mr. Nistler was not discouraged, his native grit keeping well in play. Then he returned to his old shaft and twelve feet further on at last grasped the wing of the elusive fortune and they made good pay for two years. Next he and his partner located a claim abandoned by the millionaire Chas. Sweeney, and took out one nugget that netted seven hundred and seventy-two dollars. This was in July, 1902. Mr. Nistler is still mining and is now well prospered and Dame Fortune is smiling on his efforts. He has one brother and one sister, Carl, Rosa.

On November 10, 1895, Mr. Nistler married Mrs. Paula Rehm, born in Hanover, Germany, on August 12, 1863. Her father, Hans Schroeder, died in Germany in 1882. The mother, Minna (Billerbeck) Schroeder, died in 1885. Mrs. Nistler came to the United States in 1891. She has one brother, Louis, and three sisters, Anna Borchert, Regina Strudhoff, Marie. Mr. Nistler is a member of the I. O. O. F. Mrs. Nistler received a fine education in her native land and she is a sweet singer and an excellent musician. Mr. Nistler is also possessed of excellent vocal powers and is skilled in instrumental music as well. They are entertaining and leading people and are very popular both on account of their genial and kind ways and their qualifications.

JOHN P. WHITE. This industrious and enterprising gentleman is one of Wardner's well known business men. He is handling a custom and repair shop in shoe ware while also he carries a stock of ready made goods of all kinds of footwear. In addition to this Mr. White operates a cigar and tobacco store, thus demonstrating his energy, tact and skill in the line of business. He is a skilled workman and has commanded a fine patronage from the beginning.

John P. White was born in Rowlesburg, West Virginia, on May 15, 1860, being the son of Edwin and Ellen (Freeman) White. The father was born in Connecticut, springing from a well known old New England family. When twenty-one he went to West Virginia and now dwells in Indiana. The mother was born in Virginia, coming from an old Virginia family. She died in 1870, aged forty-five. The death occurred near Baltimore. Our subject was reared in West Virginia and Virginia principally, remaining there until 1899. He learned the shoemaker trade and became an expert in this line and followed it there. In the year last mentioned he came to Bonners Ferry and after a few months there made his way to Wardner and opened his present shop. He has continued here since that time with an ever increasing patronage and is now one of the established business men of the place. Mr. White has a comfortable home and other property which his industry and thrift have accumulated. Mr. White has one brother, Charles, and two sisters, Mrs. Laura Beavers and Mrs. Olive Shay.

In December, 1879, in Virginia, Mr. White married Miss Mary C., daughter of George and Susan Wiseman, now deceased. Mrs. White has one brother and one sister, George, Mrs. Belle Baylor. To Mr. and Mrs. White six children have come for blessing and comfort, Otto, Laura, Maude, Mabel, Orpheus, Tulloss, all at home. Mr. White is fraternally affiliated with the M. W. A. and the K. O. T. M. He is a devout member of the Congregational church and his wife of the Lutheran. Mr. White devotes much time and attention to church work and is known as a man who practices what he preaches. In political matters he is a Democrat but not a partisan and always favors the best man and the wisest principles.

JOHN I. DREW. The Maze saloon is operated and owned by Drew Brothers, the firm being John I. and Thomas W. Drew. They also own another saloon in Kellogg. The Maze is the headquarters for miners and prospectors and is conducted personally by the subject of this sketch while Thomas handles the Kellogg property.

John I. Drew was born in Scotland, on February 11, 1867, being the son of James and Mary (Irvin) Drew, natives of Scotland. They came to the United States in 1871 and now dwell at Blackfoot, Idaho. Our subject received his education in Braidwood, Illinois, and Park City, Utah, in which the father followed his occupation of mining. 1879 was the date the family settled in Park City, Utah. After a short time in the schools there John I. went into the mines and he has since that time until recently been connected with prospecting or mining in all the various camps and districts of the northwest. He came to Wardner in 1898 and in 1900 the brothers opened the present place of business in Wardner. Thomas W. was born in Scotland on January 17, 1865, and he has been associated with his brother in all the various ventures and labors and business that have occupied him. They have three more brothers, William, George, James, and two sisters, Mrs. Annie Mackie, Mrs. Jessie Murphy, all in Blackfoot, except the last who is in Nebraska.

At Dubois, Idaho, on January 31, 1892, Mr. John I. Drew married Clementina Hutchinson whose parents, Jacob F. and Rhoda J., are farmers near Blackfoot. Mrs. Drew has four brothers and two sisters, Joseph, William, Eugene, Dewey, Stella, Lelia, all at Blackfoot, but the first, who is at Wardner. Mr. Drew is a member of the I. O. O. F. in Blackfoot and of the Eagles, being trustee, in Wardner. Mr. Drew is a Democrat but not a partisan. The Drew Brothers are well known and are substantial citizens.

ANDREW B. WARD. This pleasant and genial gentleman is now one of the leading mining men in Thiard and has the distinction of being one of the early pioneers to open up this district. He was born in Randolph county, West Virginia, on July 26, 1855, the son of Levi D. and Rebecca (Wamsley) Ward, natives of West Virginia. They both died on the old homestead, the mother on July 1, 1880, and the father on September 1, 1863. The father had been imprisoned by the Federal authorities on supposed sympathy with the south and when he came home he was broken in health and died in two weeks. The Ward family is prominent in Virginia, Kentucky and other states and the ancestors came here in early days. They were well represented in the Revolution and other wars of the nation. The mother's people were also prominent in the early days. Our subject was well educated and taught school for seven years and then in the fall of 1882, he and his brothers Samuel and James came to the Black Hills country and there spent two years hunting buffalo. They were very successful in bagging the large game. Then they came to this district, landing here on March 20, 1884. They went at once to prospecting and located the Fay Templeton claims and eleven claims at the head of Trail Gulch. In addition our subject and his brothers own various other claims, quartz and placer. Mr. Ward has the following named brothers, Samuel, born May 3, 1852, who returned to West Virginia in 1901; James A., born February 11, 1860; Jacob L., born January 1, 1848. James is here with his brother. Among other claims Mr. Ward and his brother located the Wakeup Jim and Charleston groups.

On October 7, 1901, Mr. Ward married Mrs. Charlotte Ashman, nee Hutchison. Mr. Ward is a Democrat but is now partisan, for he always reserves for his own decision the questions of the day and his vote is cast for the general welfare and the policy that is for advancement and improvement.

MARTIN NOONAN was born in Ireland, on November 10, 1833, the son of Daniel and Mary (Quinn) Noonan, natives of Ireland. The father died in Scituate, Massachusetts, in 1890, and in that city the mother also died recently. Our subject came to the United States with his parents when he was sixteen, remained in East Bridgewater for six years and then went to Scituate where the parents remained until their death. He learned shoemaking and his father opened a business in Irish moss which his grandson is now carrying on. In 1858, our subject left the Old Bay state for California and mined there until 1864, then came to Boise, and two years later went to Montana. He has always followed placer mining and is an expert at the business and is interested in the Myrtle group and the Montana bar. Mr. Noonan has the following brothers and sisters, Patrick, Michael, Bridget Quinn. Mr. Noonan is retired from business now and receives a good income from his mines.

CLARENCE P. SMITH. This cultured and stirring young business man is proprietor of the Pioneer drug store at Pierce, which business he has placed on a good footing, it being one of the established houses of the town.

Clarence P. Smith was born in Northumberland county, Ontario, on September 21, 1879, being the son of Adam H. and Frances (Lankford) Smith, natives of the same place. The father is a mason and farmer and a member of the city council in Warkworth. He is aged fifty-one. The mother is aged forty-seven. Clarence was educated in the high school and then took a diploma from the Campbellford college. Subsequent to that, Mr. Smith spent one year in traveling and finally located in Lewiston, engaging with Ray & Osmers, druggists of that place. His technical knowledge rendered him a valuable assistant in their line and he soon won distinction as a pharmacist. In April of this year, Mr. Smith opened the Pioneer drug store, which was a successful venture from the first.

Mr. Smith has three brothers and one sister, Henry L., Richard C., Morley E., and Mary B., all in Canada. The brothers are successful school teachers in Canada and the sister is a small girl. Mr. Smith is still quietly sailing a bachelor craft. He is popular and has won many friends, being an upright and genial young man of sound principles.

LODOWICK W. GAY, one of the well known and prosperous business men of Kellogg, comes from a family of noble birth which landed in Virginia with the cavaliers in the days of John Smith and have been stanch Americans ever since. Upon his mother's side he comes from the Evans family which came hither from Wales in the seventeenth century.

Lodowick W. Gay was born in Springfield, Missouri, on August 28, 1848, being the son of Martin B. and Ann (Evans) Gay, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. They crossed the plains in 1851, settling on a donation claim in the Willamette valley. The father died there in 1867 and the mother was called to the scenes beyond in 1874, both departing from the old home place. Our subject received his education and was reared in Oregon. He raised stock there and farmed until 1884 and then came to Eagle City. He delved for the precious in Potosi gulch and to use his laconic phrase, "went broke." He quit mining then and engaged in the grocery business. This was in 1886 and he opened business at Kingston. In 1887 he went thence to Wardner Junction, and from there in the same year to Wallace. In 1888, we see him in Mullan and in 1889 he returned to Wardner Junction, now Kellogg, and here he has remained since. Mr. Gay has manifested great energy and enterprise and his close attention to business and kind and careful treatment of all have given him a good patronage. Mr. Gay has seven brothers and one sister, James W., a farmer in Lincoln county, Oregon; Charles F., a real estate man in Spokane; John W., in Linn county, Oregon; Evans S., dairyman and wholesale grain dealer in Kellogg; Daniel G., farmer in Linn county, Oregon; David G., farmer in Lane county, Oregon; William K., a farmer in Linn county; Mrs. Martha A. Masterson, in Lane county.

On June 30, 1879, Mr. Gay married Mrs. Mary A. Miller, nee Wedding. Her stepfather is Charles B. Sweet, a well known Oregon pioneer, who crossed the plains in 1852 and now lives in Lane county aged seventy-eight. Her mother, Elizabeth Sweet, also lives there. Mrs. Gay has one brother, Grant C., with his parents. She has one child by her former marriage, George T. Miller, a stock man in Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Gay have two children, Evans, a student at the Oregon University in Eugene; Leslie, a butcher at home. Mr. Gay is a member of the Junior Order of American Mechanics, Washington Lodge, No. 1, and also the Loyal Orange Institution of the United States, Lincoln Lodge, No. 403.

WILLIAM M. RIGGS. This popular gentleman and substantial citizen of Kellogg is handling tonsorial parlors there, being proprietor of the same and is doing a good business, with everything up to date and handled in a skillful and pleasing manner.

William M. Riggs was born in Pacific county, Washington, on May 26, 1861, being the son of Greenberry and Sarah (Hart) Riggs, natives of Missouri. The father crossed the plains in the early forties and located in Polk county where he followed shoemaking and farming for a number of years. He was also engaged in logging and was all through the Indian wars of southern Oregon and later in Idaho. The mother crossed the plains with her people in the forties and married in Polk county. Our subject was reared in the Willamette valley and received a good education from the common schools and the Dallas Academy. Then he followed farming with his parents and came with them to eastern Washington, whence they went to Rainier, Oregon, and then to Pacific county, Washington. Our subject remained eighteen years at Rainier, following the wood business and then barbering. It was October, 1898, that he came to Kellogg and opened a barber shop. Here he has continued since with good success, and a fine patronage, merited by his skill and deferential treatment of all. Mr. Riggs has one brother, G. Arthur, a barber in Aberdeen, Washington.

On August 16, 1882, Mr. Riggs married Miss Marie, daughter of Peter and Omerine Parmentier, and a native of Belgium. Mr. Riggs is a member of the K. P., and the W. W., both in Rainier, Oregon. Mr. Riggs is a Democrat but not partisan and reserves for himself the independence of thought in reference to man and principles that should characterize every true American citizen. In addition to his business he has various mining interests in the vicinity.

GEORGE A. WOOD is at the present time postmaster at Thiard, where also he operates a general merchandise establishment and in addition to these occupations does considerable mining. He is a man of enterprise and has been connected with the mining industries in this section for many years. George A. Wood was born in Rhode Island, on July 29, 1846, the son of Ransom and Susan (Taylor) Wood, also natives of Rhode Island, descendants from old colonial families. The father died on May 12, 1876, and the mother is now deceased also. Our subject remained in Rhode Island until six years of age and then went to Illinois and there attended school and worked on the farm with his father. In 1872 he left home and came to Montana and since that time he has devoted himself mostly to mining and prospecting. On May 31, 1884, Mr. Wood landed in Littlefield, coming in over the Thompson Falls trail. He at once commenced to prospect and mine and in the fall of 1887 he came to his present place and soon bought an interest in the placer ground. Since then he has continued here and is one of the substantial men of the section, well known and esteemed by all. Mr. Wood has one sister, Abbie Combest.

On March 4, 1893, at Spokane, Washington, Mr. Wood married Miss Kate Cavanaugh, who was called hence by death on April 23, 1896. Mr. Wood is a Democrat and is always interested in the welfare and advancement of the country and has always labored faithfully for this end. The measure of success that he enjoys has been entirely merited by his industry, skill and uprightness.

EMIL E. BROWN was born in Alsace-Lorraine, under the French flag, on December 22, 1845, the son of Samuel and Flora (Houbert) Brown, natives of Alsace-Lorraine. Our subject came to the United States in 1865, was educated in the parochial schools in his native land and here assisted his father in the brewery business. Later he was in St. Louis and then after four years there he went to the west and visited Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Montana and other places. He did brewery business, mined, and freighted and in the spring of 1884, he came to the Murray country. With others he built a brewery in Delta, but later abandoned the project on account of high price of packing in grain. Since then Mr. Brown has devoted himself to mining. He has two brothers and four sisters in the old country.

In Denver, Colorado, Mr. Brown married Miss Flora Andela, a native of Los Animas, Colorado, and now deceased. One child was born to this union, Mary, in Denver.

BENJAMIN E. JENKINS, a well known miner and business man of Wardner, where he is managing the interests of E. A. Brady, owner of a saloon in Wardner, was born in Cornwall, England, on November 19, 1869, being the son of John and Lane (Polglase) Jenkins, natives of England. The father is deceased but the mother still lives there. Our subject came to the United States in 1889, landing in Glass Valley, California, where he mined for a time, then wrought in mines in other portions of the state, in Colorado, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Montana and Utah. It was 1896 that Mr. Jenkins came to Wardner and took a place in the Bunker Hill and Sullivan. He continued steadily in this with the exception of six months spent in Cripple Creek, where he went to take a position in the band, until May, 1902, when he accepted the place he now occupies. Mr. Brady was called away by other business and placed the management of his property in the hands of Mr. Jenkins. Mr. Jenkins has three brothers and four sisters, William H., a miner in Grass Valley; James and Nicholas in England; Mrs. Mary Richards in Coulterville, California; Mrs. Elizabeth J. Jenkins, in Butte; Emma and Phillipa, in England.

On June 21, 1898, Mr. Jenkins married Mrs. Grace C. Oscheir in Wardner. Her parents are deceased. She has two brothers and one sister, James H., George Hoskens, in Wardner; Mrs. Jane Van Gilder, also in Wardner. Mrs. Jenkins has one daughter by a former marriage, Ruby, a school girl. Mr. Jenkins is a member of the Eagles and is a skillful manipulator of the tuba in the Wardner band. In politics he is a Republican and his standing in the community is excellent.

GEORGE McKINNIS is one of the old timers of the Wardner and entire Coeur d'Alene country and at the present time is operating a saloon in Kellogg. He was born in Jackson county, Ohio, on October 16, 1848, the son of William and Elizabeth (Hadway) McKinnis, natives of Ohio. The father is from an old American family of Scotch extraction and the ancestors were famous highland warriors for many generations. The paternal great-grandfather of our subject fought for American independence, his grandfather in the war of 1812 and his father and two brothers were in the Civil war fighting for the Union. The father died in 1893. The mother of our subject died when he was seven. He was reared in Ohio and Missouri, whither the family came in 1854. The two older brothers enlisted, one in Iowa and the other in a Missouri regiment, while the father was one of the home guards and our subject was detailed to care for the younger members of the family. Charles was a lieutenant when mustered out and James had suffered in Andersonville. Both are now deceased. In June, 1865, our subject went to New Mexico and freighted for the government, making two trips from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Union. One year later he returned home and in 1870 he went to St. Joseph and engaged with his brother and brother-in-law in their mercantile house. At the time of the Black Hills excitement they went with freighting outfits loaded with goods and sold them well in the mining camps of that district. Our subject erected buildings in Crook City and Deadwood and they remained until 1880. Then the brother went to Colorado; where he died. George went to Missouri and did mercantile work until 1884, when he came to Eagle City and prospected and mined. He came in over the Belknap trail with nine others and his cash fed them all. Not doing well in the mines, he worked out at various employments, then went to Thompson and Butte and cut much wood. He was back to Murray at the time of the starting of the bedrock flume and came to Wardner when it was a town of tents. He bought lots and opened a saloon. There and at the junction at Kellogg he has been since. Mr. McKinnis has erected two hotels and other buildings in Kellogg and has had the misfortune to lose much property by fire. He has three sisters living, Lucinda Frederick, near King City, Missouri; Sarah Gilbert, Savannah, Missouri, Elizabeth Middlebaugh, near Kidder, Missouri.

On one occasion Mr. McKinnis joined company with the famous Kit Carson and it was not infrequent in his travels that he passed through vast herds of buffalos. He had numerous fights with the redskins and on one occasion he pulled fourteen arrows out of his wagon bed after such a fight.

At St. Joseph, on January 10, 1881, Mr. McKinnis married Miss Victoria Womach, a native of Missouri. One son, Armond, has been born to them and he is an apt scholar in journalism and in mechanics. He is with his mother in St. Joseph studying at the present time. Mr. McKinnis is a member of the I. O. O. F., being past noble grand. He is also a member of the Junior Order of American Mechanics, Washington Lodge, No. 1, and the Knights of Pythias. Politically Mr. McKinnis is allied with the Republicans and although not partisan he is well posted and labors for the best interests.

JEREMIAH M. SAVAGE, who is at the present time assistant superintendent and president of the Northern, Delta, Mascot and Beaver Creek Gold Mining Companies, is one of the most energetic and enterprising mining men in Northern Idaho. He is a leader in Murray in mining; is prominent socially and in political circles and is looked up to as one of the best all around mining and business men in the northwest. Jeremiah M. Savage was born in Grant county, Wisconsin, on December 6, 1847, the son of James and Ellen (Mars) Savage, natives of Ireland and England respectively. They both died in 1873. The father was a farmer and miner in his native state; our subject received his educational training from the public schools, gained good discipline with his father on the farm and in the mines and continued in his parental home until 1866. That year marks his advent into Montana, where he engaged with a will in prospecting and mining, continuing the same in various sections of the state until 1884. In that year, memorable to the section of which we are writing, Mr. Savage came on the crest of the excitement over the Thompson Falls trail to Murray. He engaged for a short time in the saloon business, but soon dropped that and returned to his first love, and so thoroughly has he devoted himself to mining and mining interests that he knows the science from the beginning of the prospector's work to the producing mine, being also expert in mineralogy and all the attendant matters of science. He bought an interest in the store at Myrtle first and also in the old Myrtle placer claims, which was considered the richest in the district and he is still interested in the same property. In 1901 Mr. Savage went to Montana and interested C. S. Crister in the Beaver district prospect. Mr. Crister went east and formed the four companies of which our subject is now president. The operations of these companies are more fully told elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. Savage has two brothers, John V., James S. and two sisters, Ellen J. and Joanna Dwyer.

On February 10, 1887, at Missoula, Montana, Mr. Savage married Miss Sophie Sanfason, a native of Grand Isle, Maine. Three children have been born to this union: Viola L., aged fourteen, on Oct. 14, 1902; Azalie A., born February 20, 1891; Edward H., born March 18, 1900. Mr. Savage is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and the I. O. O. F. He is a Republican of the most strict type and takes a very active part in all the campaigns. Murray is greatly indebted to Mr. Savage for bringing its resources to the knowledge of capital and he is deserving of great credit for his tireless labor, the skill and enterprise manifested and his loyalty to this district and its interests.

THOMAS SHUSTER is proprietor of the Delta hotel and is a man who has been intimately acquainted with this country from the earliest discoveries till the present time, also having had an active share in the good work of discovering and working mines here. He was born in Wisconsin, September 14, 1859, the son of John and Annie (Slatner) Shuster, natives of Austria. The father came to this country in the early fifties and settled in St. Croix county, Wisconsin, the birthplace of our subject, and there farmed. He died in Kent, Washington, in 1898. The mother was married in Germany and now lives with her son, Joseph, in Republic, Washington. The father served in the Civil war. When Thomas was nine the family went to Independence, Missouri, then to Ft. Scott, Kansas, and he learned the carpenter trade. Later he took land in Nebraska, and in 1876 crossed the plains to the Willamette valley, Oregon. He left there for Goldendale, Washington, the next year and in 1880 he came to Rathdrum. He did timber work and steamboating until September, 1883, when he came to Eagle City over the Evolution trail with fifteen animals packed with provisions. He packed and later mined in all the various sections of this district, some times unsuccessful and some times with good results in dust. On the Black Hills placer he did poorly at first and then took out one hundred dollars per day to the man for a time. In 1891 he bought the Delta hotel and since that time he has continued here with the exception of one year in Sumpter, Oregon, where he was engaged in mercantile pursuits. October 25, 1902, was the date he came here and since then Mr. Shuster has continued in the operation of the hotel and in mining. He has various valuable interests in both quartz and placer. Mr. Shuster has three brothers, Joseph, John and Frank.

On September 5, 1888, Mr. Shuster married Miss Winnie Hutchinson, at Myrtle, Idaho. She was born on December 2, 1866. Her parents crossed the plains in early days to Oregon and are now deceased. Mrs. Shuster has one sister, Charlotte Ward. Mr. Shuster is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in political matters he is independent. He is a notary public and is a man of good business ability and their hotel is a favorite place for traveling people.

ANDREW M. ROBERTS, a well known and capable business man of Pierce, and also the worthy postmaster of that thriving place, was born in Clay county, Kentucky, on January 12, 1851, being the son of Washington and Melinda (Gilbert) Roberts, natives of Kentucky. The father died in Arkansas in 1894, aged seventy-six. His father came from Virginia and settled in Kentucky and secured large estates, which are still in the family, which is one of the prominent ones of Kentucky, and from which have sprung some of the leading professional men of the state. The mother of our subject died in Kentucky on the old homestead in 1878, aged fifty-two. The Gilberts originally came from Virginia and are a very prominent family in professional lines and as property owners. John Gilbert, an uncle of Mrs. Roberts, was a noted Baptist preacher and died at the good old age of one hundred and ten. Our subject was reared and educated in Clay county and then went into the lumber and logging business for himself at twenty, continuing in these lines for five years. He had a farm of eighty acres and in the spring of 1879 he sold this and went to Lane county, Oregon, where he rented land for four years. In 1883 he came to the John Day country and located, buying a half section of land. As a merchant, farmer and blacksmith, Mr. Roberts occupied thirteen years there and then sold out and journeyed to Dayton, Washington, where he conducted a meat market for one year, after which he repaired to Asotin and operated a general merchandise establishment for two years. In 1897 he came to Pierce and opened a store and was soon appointed postmaster, which office he has filled since. He has a good store and business building in Fraser, which is conducted by his son-in-law and partner, Eugene S. Friend. In Pierce Mr. Roberts has a large stock and owns the buildings and lots where he does business and also he owns residence and other business property in the town. He is agent for a ditch worth several thousand dollars. Mr. Roberts has two brothers and three sisters, Swinfield, in Kentucky, who served three years in the Union army in Company E, Twenty-fourth Kentucky; John E., farmer in Clay county; Nancy, widow of John Davidson, in Newton county, Arkansas; Catherine, wife of Eli Eastep, also in Newton county; Emily, wife of John Burns, also in Newton county.

On April 14, 1870, in Kentucky, Mr. Roberts married Miss Mary J., daughter of John and Margaret (Lochart) Roberts, but not related to our subject. Mrs. Roberts' parents were natives of Kentucky. She was born May 17, 1855, was educated in the district schools and has four brothers and one sister, William, Pharris, Thomas, Felix, America Gay, all in Kentucky.

Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Roberts: Emily, wife of Eugene Friend; Orlena, wife of Edward Turner, farmer near Fraser; Margaret, wife of William Davis, wholesale tobacconist in Lewiston; Daniel, clerk in the Beehive in Lewiston; Laura, George, Baty, Nellie, Felix, all at home.

HENRY T. GILBERT. The firm of Gilbert & Wadsworth, general merchants of Kellogg, is one of the leading business houses of the town and is an up-to-date establishment conducted on sound business principles. The subject of this sketch is postmaster of the town in addition to conducting the mercantile business and is one of the prominent men of the section.

Henry T. Gilbert was born in Brainerd, Minnesota, on May 30, 1871. His parents are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Our subject was reared in Minnesota, Bismarck, North Dakota, and in the west. He was educated in these places, finishing with a course in the Spokane business college. He spent sometime in ranching, mining, prospecting, and so forth, being associated with his father in much of this and most of the time. In 1895 Mr. Gilbert opened a store in Kellogg and has by care and skill gained a gratifying patronage. In 1901 he sold a half interest to William B. Wadsworth and since that time the firm has conducted the business. 1898 was the year Mr. Gilbert was appointed postmaster. In addition to this business, Mr. Gilbert has some heavy mining interests, one with his father and another with two partners which is bonded for one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and a sale close at hand. He also has several other mining properties and is one of the careful and skillful operators of the district. Mr. Gilbert has also been in business with his brother-in-law, Mr. Sinclair, who is mentioned in this york.

On February 3, 1893, Mr. Gilbert married Miss Adelaide, daughter of Burton and Abbie Wadsworth. The father is deceased and the mother lives in Marshall, Missouri. Mrs. Gilbert has one brother, William B., partner of our subject, and one sister, Mrs. Geneva Allen, in Marshall, Missouri. Mrs. Gilbert is a member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Gilbert is a stanch Republican and has frequently been delegate to the county convention and is one of the central committeemen.

JOHN PELKES, who is the present owner and operator of the Milo saloon in Kellogg, is a heavy property owner in various sections of the Coeur d'Alene country, both in real estate improved and mining property. He was born in Luxemburg, Germany, which was the native place of his parents also, the date being January 27, 1852. He was educated in his native land and also became master of the brewer's art. It was in 1878 when Mr. Pelkes came to the United States and his first location was in Minnesota. Then came a journey to Washington and for three years our subject followed his business in Colfax. Then he started a brewery in Palouse in 1884 but sold the same two years later. At that time Mr. Pelkes came to Wardner and opened another brewery, which he recently sold and now gives his whole attention to the conduct of his present place of business. This was started two years since with a partner, whom Mr. Pelkes bought out recently. Mr. Pelkes owns a commodious and up-to-date cottage in Kellogg, which is the family home. He has no near relatives in this country. The marriage of Mr. Pelkes and Amelia Goetz was celebrated in Coeur d'Alene on February 13, 1890. Mrs. Pelkes has one daughter by a former marriage, now the wife of Dr. Ide, a dentist in Wardner. Mr. Pelkes is a Democrat and has attended the state convention and has sent his proxy to the county convention several times. Mr. Pelkes is past noble grand of the I. O. O. F., Wardner Lodge No. 29. He is trustee of the Big Creek Mining Company and is also interested in Saltese, Gold Run, Murray and many other localities. He has between twenty-five and thirty different propositions which he is carrying and his mining interests are among some of the best undeveloped properties of the district. Mr. Pelkes owns two dwellings in Wardner, a hotel building in Wallace, a residence also in Wallace and several other properties besides some real estate in Kellogg.

AARON S. WARREN. This well known and stirring business man is now one of the leaders in Pierce, being proprietor of the City Hotel and also owner of a fine stock ranch, well equipped and supporting some fine cattle, horses, poultry, hogs, and so forth, while also he owns some of the finest quartz claims in this mining district. Among these may be mentioned the G. A. R., Veteran No. 9, which is supplied with a twelve foot arrastre, and has rock running over two hundred dollars per ton. Then he owns the Potlach group, which has just produced an ore chute that has phenomenal values both in silver and gold. Mr. Warren's hotel has a fine patronage, is well equipped and popular.

Aaron S. Warren was born in Hopkinton, Massachusetts, on July 16, 1846, being the son of William H. and Betsey E. (Cousins) Warren, natives of Massachusetts as also their ancestors were since the landing of the Mayflower. The father operated an express and dray line and handled a dairy farm and hotel. He died in 1896, aged seventy-two. The mother died in 1894, aged sixty-seven. Her parents had nine children and lived and died in Massachusetts. Our subject was raised in Hopkinton, a suburb of Boston, and when sixteen he hurried to the front, enlisting in the Twenty-second Infantry, Company A, of his state. His captain was Walter A. Sampson and his colonel, Henry Wilson, afterward vice president of the United States. Mr. Warren served through the entire war and was in fourteen general engagements besides many skirmishes. He was sergeant and at the battle of Gainsville he was captured and languished five months in Andersonville. His regiment was rank twelve in the death rate of the war, but he was only slightly wounded in the entire service, and he has never applied for a pension. Succeeding the war, Mr. Warren crossed the plains from Minnesota to Helena, Montana, with a train of one hundred and twenty wagons. This was in 1866 and he operated in the mines and did a butchering business there for five years, doing well. He was in Confederate gulch most of the time. After that Mr. Warren travelled through California, Arizona, Nevada, Old Mexico and many other places, mining and doing contract work. He had a beef contract on the Southern Pacific when it was constructing and did well for two years, then went to Virginia City, Nevada, and there opened a large meat market with his two brothers and they did an extensive business for three years. After that Mr. Warren went to Idaho and had a large beef contract with two partners. At the time of the Clearwater extension of the Northern Pacific, he did business in the same line and when the town of Kendrick was started he was one of the promoters and one of the first to start business there. He operated a meat market there until 1895 and the following spring he came to Pierce and opened his present business and since that time he has done a thriving trade here. Mr. Warren was elected recorder for this mining district the first year here and has been school trustee and director since. He was the second mayor of Kendrick. Mr. Warren has two brothers and three sisters, George W., in Boston, who was in the revenue department for twenty-four years; James H., a mining man at Butte, Montana; Lucy, wife of Fred McQuesten, a millionaire lumber dealer and shipbuilder in Boston; Eliza J., widow of Libbeus Chilson, in Boston; Clara H., wife of Willard F. Mason, a prominent lawyer in Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Warren is a member of the G. A. R., Sherman Post, No. 20, at Kendrick, Idaho, and was vice commander when he left that place.

In San Francisco, in 1873, Mr. Warren married Miss Mary Jones, a native of Utica, New York, and she died in Virginia City, in 1878, aged twenty-nine. At Kendrick, Idaho, on April 22, 1894, Mr. Warren celebrated his second marriage. The lady becoming his wife on this occasion was Mary Hutchison, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Kirk) Hutchison. The father was born in Prince Edward Island and died in 1895, aged sixty-three. His ancestors were of English extraction and four generations of them were born on the same farm where he was. Mrs. Warren's mother was born in the West Indies, being of Scotch descent. Mrs. Warren was born in Prince Edward Island on December 4, 1868, and lived there until fourteen, gaining in this time a good education from the public schools. Then she went to Boston and learned dressmaking and tailoring, which she followed there until 1892, when she came to Kendrick and opened a shop. She did a good business until she was married. Mr. and Mrs. Warren have three children, Bessie L., George W. and Harry H. Mrs. Warren has four sisters, Flora, wife of John B. Richardson, a miner and blacksmith in Pierce; Kate, single and living in Boston; Jennie E., wife of Alvin Arnold, a mining man of Lewiston; Isabel, wife of John Riley, a Presbyterian preacher in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Mrs. Warren has one brother, Robert, with his parents in Prince Edward Island. Mr. and Mrs. Warren are among the leading people of Pierce and enjoy the companionship of many sincere friends and have made for themselves a good name and have carved a good fortune for their comfort.

DANIEL E. HARBIN, who dwells at Delta is one of the well known and successful mining men of the Coeur d'Alene country and has manifested commendable energy and enterprise in the work of developing and bringing to the front the vast mineral resources of these districts. He was born in Missouri, on September 5, 1862, the son of John T. and Elizabeth (Bailey) Harbin. The father was born in Virginia and came from one of the old and prominent families of that state. He died in 1900, aged seventy-four. The mother was born in Ohio and lives in California. Our subject was well trained in the educational institutions of the Willamette Valley, whither his parents removed across the plains when he was young. He graduated from the Santiam Academy and also had other excellent advantages which were well improved. Following this he was engaged in saw milling for three years and then came to Asotin county, Washington, where he followed that industry for five years. Then Mr. Harbin went to prospecting and from Gray's harbor to southern Idaho he followed that vocation, and in 1892 he came to the Coeur d'Alene country. Later he ran an engine for a year in Murray and then bought a road house where he still lives. Mr. Harbin has constantly been interested in mines and is now owner of a group that is bonded to C. S. Cryster. He is also interested in the Bessie, Lucky Man, Buckeye, Beaver Creek, all in the Beaver district and has a one-third interest in the Summit claims adjoining Senator Clark's mine. Mr. Harbin has the following brothers and sisters, Joseph T., James, George, Jeremy, Lenora J. Donaca, Esther, Ellen Floch, Mary Floch, Bertha Shields, Maud Jay, Alice Ausman.

On April 15, 1896, Mr. Harbin married Mrs. Jennie Mitchell, daughter of William and Elizabeth Ingraham. Mrs. Harbin has two children by her first husband, Bessie, aged sixteen; Hazel, aged fourteen. Mr. Harbin is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is central committeeman on the Democratic side of the house. He is a man of worth and integrity and is one of the leaders in pushing this country to a good development.

THOMAS GILBERT. The more than three score years which have passed over the head of this substantial farmer and mining man of Kellogg have left little trace and he is as hale and hearty as in the days of yore, while the accumulated wealth of experience gained in an active life of various occupations, especially on the frontier, render him one of the sagacious and skilled operators in this section.

Thomas Gilbert was born in far away Rhode Island, on April 30, 1840, being the son of Updyke and Dorcas (Jakeways) Gilbert, both natives of New England and descended from old New England families. The maternal grandfather of our subject was a soldier in the war of 1812. Thomas was reared in the native place until twelve and then came a period of seven years of seafaring life in which he had many thrilling and hard experiences. In 1859, he came to the Golden State and prospected and mined in various places for many years, then went to Arizona, Montana, Wyoming and finally back to Iowa where he farmed and also tilled the soil in Minnesota. Later we see Mr. Gilbert in the grocery and meat business in Spokane after which he came to Kellogg and settled on an unsurveyed eighty which he later homesteaded and which is now the family home. He has it well improved, handles general produce and raises some stock. Mr. Gilbert has also given considerable attention to mining and has a fine group with his associates on Pine creek which show valuable ore. Mr. Gilbert has no near relatives living.

In June, 1868, Mr. Gilbert married Miss Christena, daughter of James and Jennie Falconer, natives of Canada, and now deceased. Mrs. Gilbert has the following brothers and sisters, William, Samuel, Henry, John, Norman, Daniel, James A., Mrs. Jane Cameron, Mrs. Martha White, Mrs. Eliza McNider, Mrs. Mary McLean, Mrs. Margaret McDonald, Mrs. Annie McClellan. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert, Ida J., wife of M. J. Sinclair; Henry T., in Kellogg, being postmaster and member of the firm of Gilbert & Wadsworth; Mrs. Nellie M. Pettitt, in Kellogg; Mrs. Lulu Colburn, in Spokane; Mrs. Lizzie Turner, whose husband is secretary of the Kendrick Mercantile Company of Northport, Washington; Mrs. Mary Rogers, Spokane; Mrs. Jennie Colvert, in San Francisco; Walter E., school boy at home. Mr. Gilbert is a member of the Junior Order of A. M., No. 1, Washington, and of the Orangemen, Lincoln, No. 403.

GEORGE F. BALL. The self denial, arduous labor, and hardships undergone by one who presses into the wild country to make a home are never understood except by those who attempt it. One of the worthy ones who have made a first class success in this pioneer labor is named at the head of this article and we are pleased to grant him consideration in his county's history.

George F. Ball was born in Syracuse, New York, on March 12, 1862, being the son of Francis D. and Sophia (Ruby) Ball, natives of France. The father was born November 21, 1832, came to the United States in 1851 and now lives near our subject. The mother was born April 16, 1830, was married in Syracuse, and died on September 21, 1884, in Buffalo, Nebraska. George was reared in Syracuse and was educated there in the graded and private schools until he was fourteen years of age. Then the family came to Lincoln county, Missouri, and the father bought land and farmed. Later they came to Nebraska, the father continuing farming and our subject taking a position with a large cattle company. In 1889, he came to the vicinity of Palouse and the parents took a homestead. In 1895 George came to his present location, a mile and a half north from Greer. He came in the dead of winter, shoveled deep snow from the site of his cabin and erected it in that trying season. In the spring he walked back to Palouse to help his brother bring in the balance of their stuff. He walked fifty-four miles in one day in going out. The brother came and took land adjoining that of our subject and the father came and took a forty near by. The father raises beans principally, harvesting about seventy-five bushels this year. Our subject has sixty-five acres fenced and cultivated and the balance of his land is timber. He raises the cereals and flax, also has some fine blooded horses, good hogs and is prospered in his labors.

Mr. Ball has one brother, Edward L., and a half brother, Frank W., and three sisters, Frances, wife of Louis Swan, a merchant tailor in Syracuse; Jennie, wife of William Bramer, in Lincoln county, Missouri; Emma, wife of William Reed, in Latah county. Mr. Ball is a member of the M. W. A., Fraser Camp, No. 10360. He is also a member of the Lutheran church. He has not yet entered the happy state of matrimony, but is contented with the quiet of his life of celibacy. Politically Mr. Ball is allied with the Democrats, but he is not active in this realm. In addition to the other improvements of good buildings, fences, and so forth, Mr. Ball has a couple of fine orchards and contemplates in the near future putting out many more apple trees. Fruit of all kinds does fine on his land and in this section.

DONALD A. FINLAYSON is a mining man and a millwright in Murray who has won a good standing because of his faithfulness and his ability in the lines which engage him at present. He was born in Prince Edward Island, Canada, on May 10, 1861, the son of Angus and Jessie (Micholson) Finlayson. The father was born in Scotland and came to Canada with his parents and learned the carpenter trade, which he has always followed. He is now aged seventy-four. The mother was born in Prince Edward Island and died in 1868. Our subject remained in his native place until twenty, receiving a good education and on his birthday he went to Boston on business. He worked at various employments and then went to Baltimore and built bridges on the B. & O. After this he mined in Montana, reaching there in November, 1884. In August, 1891, he came to Wallace and worked at his trade of millwright which he had followed in Montana. In 1896, Mr. Finlayson settled in Murray and now he lives at Littlefield. He is following his trade in various portions of the district and is also heavily interested in the mines of this section. He owns in Lucky Boy, Powhattan and others, and one of the claims shows two feet and six inches of solid galena on the surface. Mr. Finlayson has three brothers, John, Samuel, J. Quincy, and three half-brothers, Daniel, James R., Angus.

On July 15, 1898, Mr. Finlayson married Miss Jennie L., daughter of Louis K. and Lin (Sayre) Johnson. Mrs. Finlayson was born in Rockford, Illinois, in 1870. One child, Lenora, aged three, has been born to this union. Mr. Finlayson is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and of the A. O. U. W. He is independent in political matters and is a man of sound principles.

DANIEL W. PRICE. Among the genial and popular business men of Kellogg, there certainly should be especial mention of the deserving and capable gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, who is manager and partner in the Price Furnishing Company, a new and prosperous concern, which this company recently purchased from Goddard of Wardner. The house has been established for some time but this present management has recently taken charge. Mr. Price was with Mr. Goddard for a number of years previous to this venture and was well and favorably known and he is manifesting those qualities in the management of this business which betoken a bright success.

Daniel W. Price was born in Waukesha, Wisconsin, on April 7, 1872, being the son of Rees and Ann (Richards) Price. The father was born in England of Scotch ancestry and is now in the real estate business in Forest Grove, Oregon. The mother was born in Wales and came to the United States when six years of age. Our subject was reared in Waukesha until sixteen and then went to Racine and learned the carriage trimming art, working for the Racine Wagon Company. Thence he came to Wardner, worked a time in the mines, spent some time in prospecting and in May, 1899, he entered the establishment of W. F. Goddard. He continued with Mr. Goddard until November 16, 1902, when he purchased the present establishment and entered into business for himself. Previous to this, he had owned an interest in a cigar store which his brother operated, but which they recently sold. He has one more brother, John, a farmer in Wisconsin. Mr. Price is a member of the K. O. T. M. and in political matters is allied with the Republicans, but is not partisan. The firm carry a stock of five thousand dollars worth of well selected goods and are doing a fine business, which their care for the interest of their customers, their uprightness and their skill justly merit.

JOHN THYNE is well known as one of the leading men in handling mines in the Murray country and is now superintendent of the Golden Chest. He was born in Massachusetts, February 2, 1854, the son of Ralph and Martha (Lyons) Thyne, natives of Massachusetts. The father died in 1888 and the mother in 1893. Our subject was educated in his native place and when twenty-one came to Colorado. He worked in the mines in various parts of the state for a decade and held various responsible positions in these years. In July, the first day, 1891, Mr. Thyne landed in Wardner and began work in the Bunker Hill. Later he was in the Tyler, the Stemwinder and in various others until he landed in Murray. Then he went to the Morning mine, was afterward in the Gem, and in March, 1894, he came again to Murray. For two years Mr. Thyne was in the Daddy, then foreman in the Chest for three years and was finally appointed to his present position. He is a thorough mining man and stands high in the esteem and confidence of the people. Mr. Thyne has one sister, Lizzie Topliff.

In Sacramento, California, December 21, 1887, Mr. Thyne married Miss Mary, daughter of James and Mary Bath, natives of England, where also Mrs. Thyne was born on May 25, 1858. The parents came to the United States when this daughter was young and the father followed mining. He died in Everett, Pennsylvania, in 1898 and the mother died when Mrs. Thyne was twelve. Mrs. Thyne has two brothers, William, and John, and one sister, Lizzie Glover. John Bath has invented the Bath Grinder which has given him both fame and fortune. Four children have been born to our subject and his estimable wife, Edward B., aged fourteen; Florence, aged ten; Violet, aged six; James, aged four. Mr. Thyne is a member of the K. P. and is a solid Republican. He is a musician and handles the violin in the home orchestra and on account of his affability, kind ways and integrity he has won many friends.

CHARLES W. VANCE. While the noble-men and women who made the colonies came for conscience sake to found a free state, still they carried the school book with the Bible, and contemporaneous with the house of worship appeared the place of study. Self sacrificing and wise men and women were not lacking to take up the arduous labor of properly training the youth and the days of Yale are well known when the student took his peck of corn to pay his tuition. Nor has it ended there. Many scholars, who instruct in the wealthier universities receive fitting remuneration, but the rank and file of the American people are trained in that home of our free institutions, the common school; and here we need now as in the earlier days, the same self sacrifice, patience, and devotion to the cause, and happily we can say, it is still supplied by as noble descendants as were the grand pioneers who were tossed by the stormy deep and beset by cruel savages in their attempts to plant the seeds of freedom. Any community is measured by its schools and the schools are a success in proportion to the devotion, self sacrifice, and erudition of the teachers. Measuring by this standard, and it is the true one, although searching, we are forced to conclude that the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this humble article is one of America's noblemen, for he has so given his life in this grand calling, that real and true success of the most exemplary kind, has crowned his efforts and his fortunate pupils have reaped a rich legacy from the noble inspiration of a true man and typical instructor. And strange it is that this labor, so trying, so wearing, and sometimes so little appréciated at the time, is by a generally generous public, so inadequately remunerated. Such is one of our living enigmas—who will solve it?

Professor Vance was born for a teacher; the thought possessed him as a boy, it grew as he grew, he studied for that end, and although he turned aside to read law and was admitted to practice before the supreme court of the state of Nebraska, still his first love reclaimed him and quickly sacrificed to the consuming fire of the real teacher all the lore of legal books, and he was but a better and broader minded man than before he slighted his real muse. His training has been ample and excellent. He passed quickly through the graded and high schools of Hillsboro, Ohio, then studied at the famous Valparaiso Normal of Indiana and finally completed his days of abstract study in the Ohio University. While he had taught before this, and where is the true teacher that does not teach from youth up, he now commenced in earnest his life work and for six years held the principalship of the Schuyler schools, in Nebraska. Thence he came to Silver City, Idaho, and then to Wallace. In that city, Professor Vance was principal of the city schools for nine years and the excellent work done can hardly be over estimated. In 1900 he was nominated by the Republicans for county superintendent of schools and although he ran six hundred ahead of this ticket, fate decreed that he should still remain at the desk and gave the office to his opponent by nine votes. Then he came to Wardner and is now the superintendent of the city schools, where he is doing his characteristic work of faithful, conscientious, and wise instruction.

On August 27, 1889, at Columbus, Nebraska, Professor Vance married Miss Adelaide M., daughter of Sebra G. and Jane F. Inlay, who reside in Glenwood, Iowa, the father being a retired mechanic. Mrs. Vance has one brother and three sisters, Lamont, Mrs. Alida Stevenson, Mrs. Olive Spicer, Mrs. Clara Hooper. Mr. Vance has one sister, Mrs. Olive Lamar. To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born two children, Dorothy, who died March 11, 1900, aged eleven months and twenty-six days; Harold C., aged two and one half years. Professor Vance is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., the Elks, the K. of P. Mrs. Vance is a graduate of the Valparaiso Normal and taught five years in Fremont, six years in Schuyler, Nebraska and five years at Wallace, Idaho. In 1898 she was chosen as county superintendent of schools of Shoshone county, the first lady holding the office. She did efficient work and holds the confidence and esteem of a discriminating constituency. Professor Vance has been president of the County Teachers' Association, also that of the Joint Teachers' Association of Shoshone and Kootenai counties combined and of the State Teachers' Association as well.

Charles W. Vance was born in Newmarket, Ohio, on August 12, 1858, being the son of Isaac W. and Elizabeth (Lemon) Vance, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively. The father was a contractor and builder and is deceased. The mother lives in Ohio, still occupying the house where our subject was born.

GEORGE W. COLEMAN. The energy and adaptability manifested by Mr. Coleman, as will be noted in outlining his career in this article, are the key to his success, which has been bright and gratifying. He is a man of uprightness and of good standing and is a well known pioneer.

George W. Coleman was born in Bedford, Pennsylvania, on September 23, 1858, being the son of George and Elizabeth Coleman, deceased. The father was born in Pennsylvania and the mother in Germany. Our subject was reared on a farm and educated in the district schools. When sixteen, he went to the Black Hills, Dakota, prospected and worked in the famous Homestake. In 1880 he went to Miles City, Montana, thence to Livingstone and engaged in the wood business. Hearing of the Coeur d'Alene excitement, he left his wood, and also a five hundred dollar team in Butte, which he has never heard from since, and came as far as the train came toward Eagle and then plodded through twelve feet of snow the balance of the journey. He at once went to freighting for Phil. Weber, hauling the freight on a hand sled. He received thirty cents per pound and made fifteen dollars per day. His cargo was liquor and when weary, Mr. Coleman did not always stir his blood with cold snow water on the journey. Eagle was a bunch of tents, with one log eating house, kept by Mat Brown, the first colored man in this district and now in Wardner. Mr. Coleman freighted this way six weeks, then went with the stampede to Murray, worked as porter and came to Wardner, then Kentuck, with the first rush and carried the mail from Murray to this place, receiving fifty cents per letter. Later he operated a logging house for A. R. Goldstein, then was porter in a saloon, receiving two hundred dollars per month. Later he went on his ranch three miles east fom Wardner. After this he managed Al Page's ranch nearly two years, then did contract work, mined with the Bunker Hill, and located the Coleman mine. He kept up the assessment until 1902, when Mr. Coleman sold to the New Jersey Gold Mining Company for ten thousand dollars. He also sold land and mill site additional to the amount of one thousand more. He is now in the employ of this company and owns a claim adjoining the one sold.

In 1882 Mr. Coleman married Miss Lottie Kelly, a native of Liberty, Clay county, Missouri. Her parents live in Leavenworth, Kansas. Mr. Coleman also owns mining property with Dan Dalton and Richard Toner, and has a good residence in Wardner.

CHASTINE DUNAVAN has been in the Coeur d'Alene country for many years and in fact was one of the first to invade these fastnesses when the excitement began. He has continued here ever since and is one of the well known and valuable citizens whose labors have always been for upbuilding and advancement. Chastine Dunavan was born in Kentucky, March 8, 1829, the son of William and Mary (McElroy) Dunavan, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. The father was a patriot in the Revolution. Our subject was raised in Kentucky and in the Blue Grass state he received his education and when eighteen he enlisted in the Nineteenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, Company K, under Colonel John W. Tibatts. He served eighteen months, then spent one year at home and after that clerked in a mercantile house in St. Joseph for three years. Then came six years of steamboating on the Missouri, after which he spent two years more in St. Joseph and in 1863 he came to Montana and mined. Seven years were spent in the grocery business then, and two years on a trip in the east. In 1876 we find Mr. Dunavan in the Black Hills and he was one of the enterprising men there until 1884, when he came over the Trout creek trail to the Coeur d'Alene country. In March of that year he landed in Eagle City and a few days later he was in the mercantile establishment of Hayes & Higby, the pioneers of this camp. Later we see Mr. Dunavan in mining and since those days he has devoted himself to this constantly. He is one of the prosperous men of the section and has various properties. Mr. Dunavan is in receipt of a pension from the government for services in the Mexican war and is one of the patriotic supporters of the noble stars and stripes. Mr. Dunavan is not in the hills much but is promoting mines and is now in partnership with Lawrence O'Neil, mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Dunavan has one brother, William, retired in Kentucky. Mr. Dunavan is a real Jeffersonian Democrat and is sound on the principles of government. He is a genial and highly respected gentleman and possesses a high sense of honor and of his stewardship.

WILLIAM McDOUGALL. Among the genial, capable and patriotic men who have charge of the various interests of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan properties we are privileged to mention the subject of this article, who is now foreman in the Bunker Hill mine. Mr. McDougall is a practical miner, understanding the art from the grass roots to the finished producer and well laid out property in working trim, and all the methods from the hand drill to the improved machinery of the present day and so is well qualified to fill the position where he find him, where his wisdom, faithful work and efficiency have made him a valuable man to the company and his integrity and affability have won for him the high esteem of all his fellows.

William McDougall was born in Minnesota on April 24, 1861, being the son of Duncan and Ellen (Aldwisely) McDougall. The father was a native of Canada, of Scotch descent and the mother was born in England. Our subject was reared in California, whither his parents went when he was three years old. His education was received in the institutions of learning in Bangor, Butte county, California. At the early age of sixteen, Mr. McDougall commenced his mining career and since that time he has steadily pursued this line of endeavor. He worked first in the Abott quicksilver mines, in Lake county, California. Then he was in the gravel mines in Plumas county, in the silver mines in San Bernardino county four years, then in eastern Oregon as foreman in the Sanger mine two years, then in the Elkhorn and Baisley in Baker county and then with his associates he bonded the Virtue. Later the bond lapsed and he went to California again and was foreman in the Lone Star in Eldorado county a short time, after which he was shift boss in the W. Y. O. D. and Empire seven years. In 1901 Mr. McDougall came to his present position and since that time has done excellent work here. Mr. McDougall has one sister, Mrs. Annie McCloud, in Cherokee, California.

In 1893 Mr. McDougall married Miss Belle Allen, whose parents live in Butte county, California, the father being a general merchant. Two children have been born to this union, Loyd L. and William S. Mr. McDougall is a member of the A. F. & A. M., in Grass Valley, California; of the Grass Valley Chapter, R. A. M.; of the Coeur d'Alene Commandery, K. T.; and of the Industrial Union. He is a Republican and stands well in the community, having many friends.

JAMES O. THOMAS. This genial and affable gentleman is one of the best known of the early pioneers and his kind and social ways have given him hosts of friends all through this section and he is of the best of standing in the district today. James O. Thomas was born in Ponsett, Middlesex county, Connecticut, on May 26, 1834, the son of James and Olivia (Huppard) Thomas, natives of Connecticut. The father is from an old New England family of prominence and patriotism and he died in his native state. The mother comes from a distinguished family and many of them are prominent in manufactories, in the professions and in governmental affairs. Our subject received his education and was reared in his native state and in 1854 he came via the Isthmus to California. He mined two years and then took a position with the Western Union Telegraph Company and was with them for nine years. He was in charge of the gang that closed up the gap on the Central Pacific between the Atlantic and the Pacific. Following that he went on a mining tour to South America, but finding the climatic and other conditions unfavorable to his work in that line he returned to California at once. Then he fitted out and went to Montana. He came via Old Mission and followed the Old Mullan road and at the present site of Wardner he prospected in the creek beds for gold, little realizing the immense bodies of wealth now owned by the Bunker Hill and Sullivan were so close beneath their feet. He went on to Montana, prospected and made his way to Big Hole, famous for the Indian battle there. Later Mr. Thomas went to the Salmon region, then went to Lemhi county and finally returned to Connecticut and remained on the old homestead for five years. In the spring of 1886 he came to Murray and located a small piece of garden ground, buying the right to it. He did gardening for some time and about 1890 he sold it for six hundred dollars, the price paid. It has since been sold to the mining company for five thousand dollars. After selling this land Mr. Thomas came to Murray and began in his present business, handling feed, hay and grain. He has done well and is carrying on a good business at the present time. Mr. Thomas has three brothers, Oscar, Edwin, Wellington and three sisters, Olive Mooney, a widow, Emily, Laura Killingsworth. Mr. Thomas has never seen fit to embark on the sea of matrimony and is content with the quieter joys of the celibatarian. He is a good Republican and is always ready to aid whatever is for the public good.

JAMES L. SAFFORD. A well known mining man and promoter of properties, being also skilled in the science and art of mining and experting mines, and at the present operating in connection with the Sierra Nevada, it is quite in place to recount the career of Mr. Safford in the history of northern Idaho and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to add that in his social standing, as well as in other lines he is of the highest and is characterized by faithful labors in general advancement and progress. In this connection also we wish to mention that Mr. Safford does much church work, especially in the Epworth League and in local preaching, in which capacities he has wrought with great faithfulness.

James L. Safford was born in New York state, on October 17, 1864, being the son of George O. and Ellen (Strader) Safford. The father was born in Vermont, has resided in New York for sixty years and is a well known literary man, whose articles appear in various leading journals and magazines. He is credited with the stanzas on our beautiful Coeur d'Alene lake, which are found elsewhere in this volume. The mother of our subject was born in Canada and came with her parents to New York when an infant. James L. was raised in Canton, New York, and was there educated. When twenty-two he went to Minnesota and traveled there and in the Dakotas for the Pilsbury-Hulburt Elevator Company. Later Mr. Safford went to Park City, Utah, and engaged in mining and in that line he has operated since. He is now doing expert work for several parties in this district and is thoroughly familiar with the Coeur d'Alene country. He has also operated properties in Nevada, Utah and other sections of the northwest and is a man of excellent judgment and great keenness in these lines, being fortified with both practical experience and a thorough understanding of the works in reference to his profession. Mr. Safford has one brother and three sisters, George H., a real estate man in Spokane; Mrs. Retta A. Sharp, in Binghampton, New York; Mrs. Mary C. Grieves, in New York; Mrs. Lena F. Clarke, at the old home place in Canton, New York. Mr. Safford is still enjoying the quiet joys of the celibatarian. He is, as said before, actively engaged in church work and many of the outlying districts have heard the gospel through his faithful efforts.

WILLIAM D. FULLER is one of the enterprising business men of Murray, being senior partner of the firm of Fuller Brothers, meat dealers, and he is also one of the stanch supporters of the town and is to be credited with excellent achievement in its upbuilding and growth. He has devoted himself to mining here for years and has some fine showings in that line now. William D. Fuller was born in Carson City, Nevada, on December 16, 1863, the son of James M. and Jennie A. Fuller. The father was born in Michigan, came to Nevada in 1862, did freighting and then dealt in meat and since 1880 he has dwelt near Moscow, in Latah county. The mother was born in Indiana, crossed the plains with her parents and is still living. Our subject was raised in Nevada and received a good education in that place. After finishing school he raised stock, operated a stage for seven years from Whiterock to Tuscarora, then mined successfully for a time and in the fall of 1893 he came to Murray. He at once turned his attention to prospecting and mining and continued that until March 1902, he opened his present business. His brother, March H., came down from Alberta and entered partnership with him and they now conduct the business together. Our subject is heavily interested in the Iron Clad, Luella, Levant, Roy Boy, and also two placer claims, Fuller and Cornelius, with water rights. He is doing a great deal of development work on the Iron Clad and others and on the former has about three hundred feet of tunnelling. The property is one of the best of its kind uncovered here and will doubtless soon be a shipper. Mr. Fuller has one brother besides his partner, Melvin, and one sister, Sarah E.

On November 18, 1892, Mr. Fuller married Miss Mary, daughter of Morgan Shearer. Mrs. Fuller was born in Chico, California, and she has one brother Frank. The wedding occurred on the North Fork, near Murray. The following children have been born to this union: Floyd L.; aged nine; Hazen H., aged seven; Cecil, aged five; Howard, aged three; Clarence, aged seven months. Mr. Fuller is a member of the Red Men and of the A. O. U. W. He is a Democrat. Mr. Fuller is well impressed with the excellencies of this country and its worth. He is a man of good standing and has hosts of friends.

THOMAS H. SIMMONDS. The high qualifications, worth, stability and patriotism of the mining men of the Coeur d'Alene district are evident to a casual observer, and it is a matter of great importance that men of this character are handling these mammoth industries. Especially does this hold true of those managing the mines and the mining interests. On every hand we see men of great experience, keen discrimination, sagacity and practical ability, coupled with moral qualities, integrity, sound principles and uprightness that vouchsafe that substantiality, wisdom, justice and execution which so happily conserve the interests of owner and operator and inspire confidence in the public, producing general advancement, upbuilding and progress and fostering the love of home and country, the sure guiding star to every true man and loyal citizen. We greet with pleasure, therefore, this opportunity to recount, although necessarily in brief, the salient points in the career of one who stands among the leading mining men of this world famous producing district and who is lacking in none of the qualifications mentioned, and whose achievements here speak more emphatically than our words can, being a bright success as regards himself, the men and property under his charge and the public in general. Mr. Simmonds is a thorough miner in the fullest sense of the word. He understands minerals, and knows how to wrest them from their rocky security to replenish the coffers of the commercial world; he understands men and is able, in handling them, to exemplify that justice and fairness which characterize brother with brother and man with man; he understands principles and is able to put them in application from abstract mathematics and chemistry to practical concentration and definite civil and mining engineering, from theoretic ethics and political economy to that even balance of the golden rule which wrongs neither the capitalist nor the least employee. Following the leading of these salutary principles and this wisdom, nothing short of success, and that of the most substantial and gratifying kind, could crown the efforts of Mr. Simmonds, as has been the case.

Reverting more particularly to his personal life, we note that Thomas H. Simmonds was born in England, on November 29, 1859, and his parents, James T. and Emmaline (Collins) Simmonds, are also natives of that country and now live there. The father is a retired mining manager. Our subject was thoroughly educated in his native land and when eighteen came to the United States. He went direct to Kern county, California, engaging in the mines of Senator Jones. Later he mined in Grass Valley, then in the quicksilver mines of Lake and Napa counties for seven years. He was foreman of the Sulphur Bank mine in Lake county two years. In 1887 he went to Amador county and held the foremanship of the Big Bar mine. He was also in the Zillie and Kennedy mines then went to eastern Oregon in 1889. There he held the foremanship in the Bradley properties and went thence to the Cashier mines in the Exchequer district in the Mohave desert. Next we see him in the Coeur d'Alene country and one year later he went thence to Eldorado county, California, where he was superintendent for two years in the Taylor mine. Next he was in the W. Y. O. D. mine in Grass valley and held the superintendency for six years and one year in the Empire. Then Mr. Simmonds accepted the position as manager of one of the mines of the South Africa Gold Fields Company and went to England to take the management, but the Boer war prevented his journey to Africa and hence he returned to the Coeur d'Alene district and in August, 1900, he accepted his present position of superintendent of the Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining and Concentrating Company. In this capacity he has operated since with the best of success attending his efforts.

On November 6, 1880, Mr. Simmonds married Miss Annie E., daughter of Washington and Nannie Davey. The father is deceased and the mother lives in San Jose, California. Mr. Davey owned at one time all the stage lines from Calistoga to Napa, Knoxville and all points in Lake county, and was a well known and prominent man and pioneer. He crossed the plains in early days and his wife crossed in 1850. His wife's sister was the wife of Hugh Dimond, a well known capitalist and a director of the Hibernia Bank of San Francisco, California. One child, Elton J., aged twenty-one, has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Simmonds. He was educated in St. Matthews College, in San Mateo, California, and is now a miner in the Bunker Hill. Mr. Simmonds is a member of the A. F. & A. M.; of the R. A. M., Chapter 18, in Grass Valley; of the K. T., at Nevada City, California; of the Elkatif Temple of the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Simmonds is a Republican and takes the part of the intelligent citizen in political matters. He is a man of affability, excellent judgment, stands exceptionally well among the people and has the confidence of all.

CLYDE S. PARKER. Born in one of the early towns of the west, raised in the occident, and a business man here since, surely entitles the subject of this article to be classed as a genuine western man. He is at the present time carrying on an insurance and real estate business together with collections and so forth in Wardner, where he enjoys a good patronage and is of excellent standing.

Clyde S. Parker was born in Canyon City, Oregon on May 23, 1866, being the son of Newton O. and Sophia S. (Cornelius) Parker. The father was born in Virginia of an old family and Parkersburg, West Virginia, is named from his grandfather. He died on September 28, 1898. The mother was born in Pennsylvania of German ancestry and lives in Wardner. Our subject was raised principally in Portland and there graduated from the high school. Then he went to Lewiston with J. P. Vollmer & Co., retaining this place six years. He was manager of the Lewiston and Genesee stores. Then he was deputy assessor of Latah county for four years and in 1895 Mr. Parker settled in Wardner. He was train boss for the Bunker Hill for a time and then took up the insurance business. He has been justice of the peace for four years and he has gained a fine business in the lines which he follows. Mr. Parker has been delegate to all the county conventions except the last one and he is a strong Republican. He has one brother and one sister, Newton F. and Stella.

On September 22, 1888, Mr. Parker married Miss Jennie, daughter of Michael and Elizabeth Reddy, both deceased. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Parker, Kelso and Frances. Mrs. Parker has two brothers and four sisters, Owen, Richard, Mrs. Marvin Caldwell, Mrs. Katherine Worden, Mrs. Elizabeth White, Mrs. Sarah Elliott. Mr. Parker is a member of the I. O. O. F., of the Eagles, and of the Junior Order of A. M. He is a man of affability and is of first class standing.

CALVIN NUSS. Although the subject of this article has not been so long in this country as some of the old timers, still he has evinced such enterprise and energy in the opening of the district and its improvement that he is entitled to representation as one of the substantial builders and supporters of the county. He was born in Pennsylvania on November 25, 1863, the son of Joseph and Annie E. (Jacobs) Nuss, mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Our subject was reared and educated in the east, principally in Illinois and there he remained until 1900 when he came to this country. He at once devoted himself to mining and in the spring of 1900 he located the Jersey group, on Eagle creek and the Homestead group in Bear Gulch. Mr. Nuss secured a valuable property when he located these and he is giving his attention to developing them. The tunnel showings are in good ore and great promise is in evidence. Mr. Nuss is a brother-in-law of C. B. Ferguson, one of the well known pioneers and mining men of this district. Our subject is a member of the M. W. A. and is a man of good standing and has many friends.

THOMAS WRIGHT, one of the earliest settlers in Wardner, and one who has continued here since, is well known and has a first class standing. He has been occupied in mining in all the prominent northwestern camps and has had great experience in the pioneer places and early days.

Thomas Wright was born in New York state on April 26, 1839, the son of William and Margaret Wright, natives of Ireland and now deceased. The father was a steam engineer and this son also became skilled in this line. Our subject was reared on the St. Lawrence across on the Canadian side until thirteen and then went to Platt county, Missouri. Two years later he went to Kansas and there he married when twenty-four and with his wife crossed the plains in 1862. He located on the Powder river, in Oregon, later settled in Auburn, then went to Boise basin, leaving the wife and child in Auburn. He located some valuable ground and with his two brothers put in eleven miles of ditch which cost nearly fifty thousand dollars. Later he bought out his brothers and in 1876 he sold the ditch for a small figure and went to the Salmon river, where he found dirt that paid him ten dollars per hour with a rocker. Four years were spent there and then Mr. Wright returned to Kansas and did saw milling and grist milling for sixteen years. He built the first house in Longton then spent eight years in the Cherokee nation. There he operated a saw mill, handling black walnut. In 1886 Mr. Wright came to Wardner and here and in the vicinity he has remained since. He worked for the Bunker Hill for six years and has clerked for his son-in-law, J. F. Van Allen, for five years. Mr. Wright has a residence in Moscow which he rents. He has the following brothers and sisters: John, William, Rose, Lou, Margaret, Caroline. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wright, Jesse, Charles, Nellie, Hattie. Mr. Wright had been a life long Democrat, but at the last election he voted the Republican ticket and now stands on that platform.

JOHN F. VAN ALLEN is proprietor and operator of a fine hardware establishment in Wardner, handling also all kinds of sheet iron, does tin work and plumbing, carrying a good stock in each line and being one of the substantial and popular business men of the town.

John F. Van Allen was born in Morrisburg, Dundas county, Ontario, Canada, on August 22, 1862, being the son of Isaac and Mary J. (Morgan) Van Allen. The father was born in the Mohawk valley, New York, was a loyalist and went to Canada with a band of twenty-five thousand loyalists in the time of the Revolution. The mother was born in Canada of English and Scotch ancestry and died in 1867. Our subject was raised in Canada and was educated in the excellent schools of Ontario, which are noted widely for their superiority. Finishing his high school course he learned the tinner's trade and in 1885 he came to Pottsdam, New York. A year later he went to Minneapolis and in 1891 he came to Wardner. He engaged with the Coeur d'Alene Hardware Company, then Holley Mason Marks Co. In 1896 this company removed to Wallace, and Mr. Van Allen bought a stock of goods from them and opened a store for himself. This has been his place of business since and he has devoted himself to the advancement and building up of his trade and is successful, being now one of the thriving merchants of the town. In 1896 Mr. Van Allen bought a lot and erected the business building that he now occupies. He also has a good dwelling of nine rooms, well appointed and of modern architecture. Mr. Van Allen has three brothers and two sisters, Lemuel H., George I., William H., Mrs. Nellie Garlough, Emma.

In March, 1897, at Wallace, Mr. Van Allen married Mrs. Nellie Poteet, daughter of Thomas and Frances

Wright, who reside in Wardner. Her father was one of the earliest pioneers in Idaho and is said to be the first white man to enter the Boise basin and followed placer mining. Mr. Van Allen is a member of the K. P., the Elks, the W. W., and Women of Woodcraft. Mr. Van Allen is a Democrat, but is of liberal and independent ideas.

JOSEPH A. R. CAMPBELL. No man is better known in the Wardner country than the subject of this article and no man is more feared by the lawless and criminal class of people, for Joseph Campbell is a man of keen penetration, quick action, fearless and bold, skillful with weapons, above a bribe, and with a nerve of steel. His determination to do his duty in the position which he holds of city marshal and the integrity and unswerving adherence to principle which characterize him have made him a power for law and order and Wardner is to be congratulated that such a man is handling this department.

Joseph Campbell was born in Davis county, Iowa, on April 22, 1855, being the son of John J. and Alice (Noland) Campbell. The father was born July 12, 1812, and died on April 6, 1890. He crossed the plains in 1858, returned in three years, crossed again in 1862, located the ground where a part of Baker City stands, went into stock near Baker City and there died. He was captain of the train that stopped first at Baker City. Our subject's paternal grandfather was a patriot in the Revolution. The mother of Joseph died when he was four, and he was raised principally in Oregon, being in Baker, Umatilla and Polk counties. In 1866-7 he rode the bell animal of pack trains into the Boise basin, which was a remarkable feat for one so young. Our subject was educated in the public schools and at Monmouth College. He rode the range, did sawmill work and various other work in his early days and in 1876 took charge of three thousand and seven hundred cattle to Cheyenne. He returned to Montana. In 1877 he bought an interest in a sawmill, the next year he bought a wood business in Butte and in 1879 he was chosen chief of police of that city, and that office and deputy sheriff he held there for five years. He was the first chief there. In 1883 he went east for an operation on his arm, which had received a gunshot wound in an encounter with a criminal. Mr. Campbell took his man, however, on this occasion, as on all others, but sometimes they were carried on a stretcher, and it is well, for the dignity of the law must be obeyed. In 1884 Mr. Campbell came to Eagle City and engaged in several placer deals, but was not successful. He came here ten days after the location of Bunker Hill and located fourteen claims adjoining. In 1885 he went back to Eagle and was deputy sheriff at the Hopkins boom. The next spring he returned to Wardner and was constable, deputy sheriff, and deputy U. S. marshal, and when the city was incorporated he was chosen city marshal. Mr. Campbell has four brothers and one sister: George, Benjamin, Henry, Frank, all near Baker City, in the stock business; Mrs. Sarah Thompson, at Ft. Wayne, Indiana.

In 1888 Mr. Campbell married Miss Hebe M., daughter of J. J. and Elizabeth Lent, residents of Wardner, where also the wedding occurred. Two children have been born, Arthur D. and Colvin C. Mr. Campbell is a member of the Junior Order A. M., of the I. O. O. F., of the Encampment, of the Rebekahs, of the Eagles, and in politics is a stanch Republican. He has frequently been to the county conventions and has also attended the state conventions. For three years Mr. Campbell represented his lodge of the I. O. O. F. at the grand lodge for the state of Idaho.

HARRY L. DAY was born December 12, 1865, at Dayton, Lyon county, Nevada, the son of Henry L. and Ellen (Powers) Day, mentioned elsewhere in this work. Our subject was raised principally in California, whither his parents removed when he was young. He was educated in the schools of Nevada and Sacramento counties and then took a degree from St. Marys College of San Francisco. Previous to this course he had labored assiduously at various employments, beginning with selling papers on the streets of Sacramento. Mr. Day graduated in 1885, then returned to Truckee and worked at bookkeeping and other employment until he removed to Wardner in April, 1886. He then prospected and held various positions in leading mines of this district and also he and his father operated the first dairy in Wardner, which their skill and business enterprise made successful. In 1889 Mr. Day and his partner, Fred Harper, discovered the now famous Hercules. This magnificent property is mentioned fully elsewhere in this work, but we will say that Mr. Day had faith in it from the beginning and steadily pursued his labors, having charge of the books of the company and pressing on its development constantly. He was employed in various sections of the Coeur d'Alene country in prospecting and in the leading mines and mills, and is at present manager of the Hercules Milling Company. He has two brothers, Eugene R., Jerome J., both mining men of Wallace and both interested in the Hercules. He also has two sisters, Mrs. E. B. Royce, who resides with her husband in Denver; Blanche, single and dwelling with her parents in Wallace. Mr. Day is a Democrat and takes a keen interest in the welfare of the community.

On August 13, 1900, Mr. Day married Miss Nellie B., daughter of P. M. and Ellen Dwyer, who dwell at Newman Lake, Washington. The wedding occurred at the historical old church, Old Mission, in Kootenai county. One child has been born to this union, Lawrence Y.

MILES RENNICK is operating winch-man on the Delta Gold Mining Company's dredger at Delta, and is a highly respected citizen. He was born in Decatur, Illinois, on November 22, 1868, the son of George M. and Rachel (Davis) Rennick. The father was born in St. Francis county, Missouri, in 1849, and now dwells in Sedgwick county, a respected farmer. His father was one of the oldest pioneers of Missouri, who married Polly Anne Wilborn, a native of that state and daughter of early pioneers. She died in 1895. The mother of our subject was the second daughter of Joseph Davis, who was precluded from joining the Union army by physical disability. Joseph Davis married Mary Davidson, a native of New Jersey, who died ten years since at Doe Run, Missouri. Our subject was reared on a farm, received a common schooling and at the age of twenty-one went to do for himself. His first venture was to Gunnison county, Colorado, where he mined and in 1890 he went thence to the Chickasaw country in Indian Territory. In 1896 we see him in Cripple Creek and there he witnessed the great fire of that place in June of the same year. After this Mr. Rennick prospected in the Colorado and San Juan rivers and later in various sections of the state. In 1900 he made his way to Washington and also visited British Columbia. Next we see him in Harrison, Idaho, where he located a homestead. In 1903 he sold the property and came to his present position. He is a skilled man in his line and has the confidence of the people. Mr. Rennick has the following named brothers and sisters: George, a farmer of Mulvere, Kansas; Clinton, at Ouray, Colorado; Ferdinand, of Mulvere, Kansas; Mrs. Minnie D. Canady, of Oklahoma; Ruby, at home; Bessie Howard; Mamie, at home.

JOSIAH HILL. When the town of Wardner consisted of one tent, Mr. Hill was here and has remained here since that time, thus preeminently entitling him to the position of the earliest pioneer and one of the real builders of Wardner. At the present time he is handling a livery barn in connection with his son, Roy, who is a partner in the business, and is also operating a stage line from Kellogg to Wardner and does a general transfer business of passengers, express, mail, freight and so forth. We are pleased to recount some of the details of Mr. Hill's life, especially so since he has been an active pioneer since he was twenty and also since he has been a potent influence in the advancement of this section for years. Josiah Hill was born in New Brunswick, on January 18, 1844, being the son of David and Anna (Brown) Hill. The father was born in Calais, Maine, on July 6, 1806, and died in 1884. His father took from the government the land on which Calais is built and the grandfather of our subject was in the Revolution. The mother of Josiah was born in New Brunswick, on July 6, 1812, and died in August, 1870, being of Scotch descent. Our subject was educated and remained in his native place until he was twenty and then took the long journey to San Francisco, whence he came to Seattle, arriving in Port Gamble on the old bark Ranier. He deserted the ship and went in an Indian canoe to find his brother at Seattle, whom he had not seen for years. A storm overtook him and his cockle shell craft was about to be swamped when a passing steamer picked him up and by a remarkable coincidence, his brother was captain of this steamer. In 1867 Mr. Hill made a trip to San Francisco on a lumber schooner, thence to Eureka, where he remained until 1870. He did lumbering, stage driving and various other labors during these years and in 1870 he started east. He visited Cheyenne, Denver, Kansas City, and also a brother at Atchison, Kansas, after a while went on back to New Brunswick. Two years there, in which time he was married, and then came a journey to Truckee, California, and after some time in lumbering, Mr. Hill took charge of the freighting stock of Mackey, Fair, Flood and O'Brien, the men of Bonanza fame. He handled their stock for three years and then with a partner bought it, three hundred head, and did freighting from Carson to Bodie. This was during the excitement of 1876 and in addition to freighting, Mr. Hill also operated a sawmill and furnished lumber to Bodie camps. He was well prospered and in 1881 he sold out and came again to Seattle. He went later to Portland and bought one-half interest in the old American Exchange hotel, but sold again in a year. Next we see Mr. Hill in Spokane and as the Northern Pacific was then building, he was soon handling a contract and in this and logging, he continued until 1886. In that year he came to the present site of Wardner, did lumber work at Kellogg, erected a sawmill and was one of the progressive men in opening up this section, being well acquainted with the pioneer work needed to accomplish it in a proper manner. He soon commenced to handle freight and his business naturally went into the transfer line which he is and has been continually operating since that time. As said above, Mr. Hill is also operating a livery stable in Wardner and his son Roy, is his partner. He is one of the substantial young men of the town and is possessed of the stirring energy and executive force of his father and holds the esteem and confidence of all, being a man of integrity and reliability. Our subject has one brother, Captain John S. Hill, who is living on a ranch adjoining Kellogg, which was taken by himself and our subject. They have one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Hannah, of New Brunswick.

On August 17, 1875, Mr. Hill married Miss Marietta, daughter of James and Salome Polk. This wedding occurred in St. Stephens, New Brunswick. Mrs. Hill has two brothers, Sidney and Josiah, both seafaring men. Mr. Hill is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Bodie Lodge No. 252. Mr. Hill is a Republican and has attended the convention and takes the interest of the substantial citizen. He is possessed of some mining interests and is one of the prominent business men and of excellent standing and has hosts of friends.

JOSEPH F. STEVENS, one of the earliest pioneers of the Coeur d'Alene country, dwells at Murray, and in addition to handling mining property is a contracting millwright. He is one of the leading men in both of these lines, and also we desire to mention that Mr. Stevens has always been a promoter of beneficial athletics, and while not wishing to press himself forward it is but right to say that he holds the championship for single drilling in the Coeur d'Alene, and with Cash Patterson, the team honors. He also held several field records in recent days.

Joseph F. Stevens was born in Madison, Wisconsin, on February 13, 1864, the son of Joseph and Eliza E. (Cross) Stevens. The father was born in London, England, on February 22, 1836, and his parents were natives of the same place. He came to America when eighteen, wrought for W. K. Vanderbilt, later went to Joliet, where he took up building and contracting. He married there, and after various moves went to Jasper county, Iowa, where he is now retired. The mother was born in London, the daughter of Robert and Mary Cross, who came with their children to the United States and settled in Joliet, Illinois, where the father took up his business of shoe manufacturing. He died in 1878. Mrs. Stevens is still living. Our subject, the fourth child of the family, remained in the parental home until he was seventeen, gaining good educational training and learning the principles of his valuable trade, mill-wrighting. At the age mentioned he came to Eagle Rock, now Idaho Falls. He wrought for the Utah & Northern and later had charge of a division on the Oregon Shortline. In the winter of 1883-84 he came to the Coeur d' Alene country over the trail from Thompson Falls, packing in two hundred and forty pounds, using a toboggan and snow shoes. He landed April 27, 1884, and at once began operations as a quartz miner. He took out and milled the first pound of quartz of the district, and has been a leader in these lines ever since. This inception of mining was on the Occidental claim. He contracted later for mills and erected the first four mills on Prichard creek, the Yosemite, Daddy, Mother Lode and Golden Chest. He also built mills in the Silver City district and in northern California. The Cumberland at Silver City, his workmanship, is said to be the first in the northwest. Mr. Stevens is now going into the Buffalo Hump country to build several stamp mills there. In addition to the industries mentioned Mr. Stevens during the last year bought and sold over seventy-two thousand acres of land in the Big Bend country.

In political matters Mr. Stevens is a strenuous Republican and while always active for the election of friends and good men he has ever refused nomination for himself. He is a member of the A. O. U. W. and the K. P. In religious persuasion he and his wife belong to the Episcopalian church.

On December 20, 1888, occurred the marriage of Mr. Stevens and Miss Laura E., daughter of John and Julia (Johnson) Clark. The wedding occurred in Murray. Mr. Clark crossed the plains from Indiana to Oregon in 1863 and landed in the Coeur d'Alene country in November, 1883, and was a locator of the famous Widow's Mite placer. He is now a mining man at Applegate, Oregon. Mrs. Clark was born in LaFayette and is still living. Mrs. Stevens was born in Carlton, Oregon, on July 10, 1868, and she has the following brothers and sisters: James, Pearl, Mrs. Calantha Winters, Mrs. Etta Olds. Mr. Stevens has brothers and sisters as follows: Robert, killed accidentally in Murray, July 16, 1892; William A., a mining man in New York; Mrs. Carrie Kennedy; Mrs. Nellie Clar; Mrs. Madge Bergman.

HIRAM BRYANT. How like the patriarchs of old are the worthy pioneers of today! The esteemed gentleman of whom we are now privileged to speak is one deserving especial mention in this history for many reasons, and the interesting details of his life will amply bear out this fact.

Hiram Bryant was born in Breathitt county, Kentucky, on January 29, 1847, being the son of Hiram and Sarah (Mullons) Bryant. When twelve he went with his parents to Morgan county and attended school in the log cabins. But not until after he was of age did he succeed in getting the education he desired, and then he spent some time in teaching, part of which was after his marriage. Our subject's father was born in Missouri but was a pioneer in Breathitt county, Kentucky. He was wealthy but suffered the loss of most of his property from the raids of bushwhackers and soldiers in turn during the awful Civil war. He had enlisted for the Mexican war but peace was declared while he was en route to the front. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania, her father being a prominent pioneer of that state and noted as a hunter. One day when our subject was grinding sorghum he turned to see the soldiers who were firing on their turkeys, and the mill crushed his hand, which crippled him for life. The marriage of Mr. Bryant and Miss Ellen, daughter of Reson and Martha A. (Murphy) Oldfield, was celebrated on March 3, 1869. Sixteen children have been born to this happy marriage: George R., married to Mary Nichols, in Linn county, Kansas; William C., on Central ridge; Sarah Ellen, wife of William J. Ingram, of Central ridge; James M., married to Helda Ritchell, of Anderson county, Kansas; Andrew H. and John M., of Central ridge; Reson, Ellsberry, Grover C., Lydia A., Lillie J., Ivory, Denny H., Elsie, Edgar, and Charles F., all near Orofino except Lillie J. and Edgar, who are deceased. Mrs. Bryant's parents were both born and raised in Kentucky, and in August, 1900, the father died there in his seventy-first year. The mother is still living on the home place. Soon after his marriage Mr. Bryant settled to farming near his parents, and also near his wife's parents. Later they went to Menifee county, Kentucky, in 1874, and that was the home until 1885, when he sold his large estate and went to Linn county, Kansas. He farmed and worked at the carpenter trade, helping to build the railroad shops in Ossawatomie. In 1900 Mr. Bryant sold out and came to Central ridge, where some of his children had preceded him, and in March, 1901, he took his present homestead in Shoshone county. It is situated six miles northeast from Orofino, and is a splendid piece of timber land. Doubtless it contains a number of million feet of fine lumber, and Mr. Bryant is improving it in a becoming manner. During the school seasons he removes his family to his residence in Orofino, where they attend school. In 1869 Mr. Bryant and his wife joined the Christian church, and since that time they have journeyed on happy in the faith that makes faithful and in the spread of the gospel, they have been zealous workers and hearty supporters of the faith. It is a coincidence that the birthday of Mr. Bryant and that of his wife fall on the same day of the same month, but he is five years her senior.

LOUIS F. BECHTEL. To Louis Bechtel, more than to any other one man, is due the credit of opening the country known as the Big Meadows at the forks of the St. Marys river and above that place. In 1886, at Hoodoo mining camps, Mr. Bechtel heard of the meadows through some old prospectors and he immediately set out to hunt for them. He came in a buckboard to the head of Santa creek and as that was the end of the road, he packed his animals and made his way to the forks of the St. Marys and upon investigation, he found it as had been represented and he immediately took a squatter's right. It is the old camping ground for the Indians for many generations back. They pastured their animals here when they fished, hunted and dug camas. Mr. Bechtel went to Palouse and in company with his mother and brother-in-law, Mr. Teats, he returned, bringing a mower and hay rake. They had to cross the river eighteen times and it required three weeks to get from the head of Santa creek to their place. It was thirty miles to the nearest neighbor, where our subject and his companions settled. His mother took a claim and in 1895 sold it and went to Farmington, where she died on July 27, 1901. Mr. Bechtel took a homestead as soon as the land was surveyed, and there he resides at the present time, about one and one-half miles down from Clarkia postoffice. He has devoted his energies to raising stock and has prospered in the endeavor, being now one of the leading men of this section, both in standing and in property holdings.

Louis F. Bechtel was born in Sangamon county, Illinois, on February 6, 1858, being the son of Abraham and Rosana (Burk) Bechtel. In 1869 the family came to Virginia City, Montana, and in 1872 they came to Colfax. In 1875 our subject started for himself and he at once returned to Virginia City and there mined and also in the vicinity of Sharidon for eight years. Then he returned to Colfax and later to the Hoodoo region he journeyed, where he received the information that led to his finding his present home. After Mr. Bechtel had opened the region, settlers began to flock in and he has seen the country grow from a wilderness to a settled and prosperous place. He has always manifested an enterprising spirit in laboring for schools and all improvements.

On August 25, 1901, Mr. Bechtel married Miss Christie Layton, who was born in Marion county, Oregon, on December 25, 1882. She lived near Farmington most of her life until marriage. Mr. Bechtel is a leading and prominent man in this section and has been registrar for this precinct for some time and his faithful labors have done much for its advancement.

EUGENE P. BEARNS is proprietor of the Mint Hotel, which is well known among the traveling people as one of the first-class places to secure entertainment in the Coeur d'Alene country. It is an up-to-date hostelry and when Mr. Bearns finishes the new structure that he is now erecting he will have one of the finest modern hotels in the northern part of the state. Being skilled in the hotel business and having a thorough knowledge of every department, he is in shape to provide for the public the best entertainment to be had. Mrs. Bearns is skilled in this business as well as her husband, and together they are making a very gratifying success and the patronage that is increasing daily demonstrates the opinion of an appreciative public regarding their efforts to please and secure comfort for their guests.

Eugene P. Bearns was born in Newfoundland, on December 4, 1860. His parents were Thomas T. and Alice (Thomas) Bearns, and they live in St. Johns, Newfoundland. The father is a native of England and is a wealthy merchant. The mother was born in Newfoundland. Our subject was raised and educated in his native place, then came to Omaha, engaged with the Union Pacific, later came on to Salt Lake, operated as agent for the Rio Grande and later traveled on to California. Two years after this he was in Arizona and thence went to San Diego. He operated a second-hand store, sold goods through the country of old Mexico and in the spring of 1897 he came to Wardner. He opened the New York Kitchen and his tact, skill and energy soon brought to him a fine trade. He sold out and went to Spokane and sold dry goods through the country. Finally he came to Kellogg, then went to Butte, bought a lodging house and operated it two years. Selling this, he came to Wardner and bought his present place. He purchased the lot and erected the building and opened the Mint Hotel and Restaurant. It has been operated both on the European and the American plan and has been favored with a first-class patronage, which his untiring care demands. In all his endeavors since coming to Wardner first, when he had but little capital, Mr. Bearns has been favored with continuous success and he has now purchased the lot adjoining his present place and is erecting a building which for comfort and convenience as a hotel will be second to none in the entire Coeur d'Alene country. He is handling a free bus to trains and caters to the best trade that comes to the Coeur d'Alenes. Mr. Bearns has three brothers and six sisters: George E., William, Thomas.

In January, 1895, while in southern California, Mr. Bearns married Miss Mattie, daughter of Samuel and Mary Cole, who dwell in southern California. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bearns, three of whom are deceased. Mr. Bearns is a Democrat, but not pressing for personal preferment. He and his wife put their whole attention to making their business a fine success and they have done so and are being favored with the patronage that is deserved by honest and skilled effort to please and provide comfort for the traveling public.

JOSIAH J. ROBIRTS. In the list of those who have labored to open this country for settlement and the ingress of civilization should appear the name of the subject of this article.

Josiah J. Robirts was born in Macon, Missouri, on October 22, 1847, being the son of William and Nancy (Brannon) Robirts, who went, when this son was an infant, to Atchison county. When he was seven the family removed to Otoe county, Nebraska, and when he was fifteen he started for himself. He went to Ft. Leavenworth and engaged to Moses Paine to drive team for forty dollars per month. He was in a train of thirty-six wagons on the way to Ft. Union, New Mexico, and all the way the Indians fought them. At one time they were hemmed in for a month and again three hundred redskins attacked them. They found one train of Mexicans who had lost their cattle by the Indians and one other train which had lost its mules, and Mr. Paine hauled their wagons back to Ft. Lyons. Our subject loaded with corn to return. On one occasion they were snowed in and for five days they did not taste food, being lost. He had three companions in this tramp and one of them, Neal Gunn, recently died in Oakesdale. He freighted one year more and then went to farming in Nebraska. For six years Mr. Robirts served as constable, then went to Johnson county, Kansas, whence he journeyed to Jackson county, Missouri, where he was married to Barbara Lindsy. They went to Nebraska and then to Council Bluffs, Iowa, later to Omaha. In 1889 Mrs. Robirts died, leaving these children: Nancy A., wife of E. L. Stringer, of the Postal Telegraph Company, of Chattanooga, Tennessee; Edward A., also with the same company in Birmingham, Alabama.

On April 10, 1896, Mr. Robirts started from Nebraska with teams and traveled westward to the various places and finally settled on his present place, near Clarkia. He has a good quarter section of land, mostly hay, and he is making first-class improvements, being one of the substantial men of this section. Mr. Robirts packed supplies for the first log drive on the upper St. Marys and had a hard job to cut a trail along the river and through the tangled brush. He has shown himself to be a true pioneer and is one of the highly esteemed men of this section.

ROBERT S. KELLEY, at present the popular and excellent police judge of Wardner, is one of the substantial men of the town and has made a record of dispensing justice without partiality and show of favor and is therefore, as well as on account of his excellent worth, integrity and sound principles, held in high esteem by all and it is his happy lot to have the confidence of the people in full measure and his friends are numbered as legion.

Robert S. Kelley was born in Marietta, Ohio, on March 3, 1858, being the son of Daniel and Mary (Nichols) Kelley. The father was born in the Emerald Isle, went thence to Canada and from that place made his way to the United States. He served through the entire Civil war and demonstrated his patriotism and loyalty to freedom's institutions by two enlistments and a faithful service. He was in the One Hundred and Seventeenth New York Volunteers. He died in 1888. The mother of Judge Kelley was born in Brooklyn and her grandfather was in the Revolution, where he did efficient service for the cause of the colonies. Our subject was reared in New York City and in other portions of the state, and received a good common schooling and then launched out in life's battles for himself. He engaged in various pursuits and in 1879 came to Montana. He secured a wood contract, and for eight years he did well in this business. Then he came to De Lamar and mined, and in 1892 he first landed in the Coeur d'Alene country. He operated in the mines until April, and at the first city election he was chosen as police judge. He is holding this office at the present time, and his faithfulness in administering justice, his uprightness, his efficiency, have given entire satisfaction to a discriminating constituency.

Judge Kelley has one brother, a miner in Utah. He has as yet never embarked on the matrimonial sea, but is still in possession of the quiet joys of the celibatarian. Judge Kelley is a member of the Junior Order of American Mechanics, and is a trustee of the Daughters of America, and he also belongs to the Industrial Union. Judge Kelley is a man of reserve, without ostentation, and manifests that quiet, kind, stanch character that wins and retains friends and has a substantiality that inspires confidence.

B. FLAIG. A genial and pleasant man, a good citizen, a capable and substantial business man, an old pioneer and one who has known Wardner for years, being now owner and operator of a fine jewelry business and having been identified with the interests of the city for all the time since his advent, it is fitting to grant to Mr. Flaig consideration in this volume.

B. Flaig was born in Germany, on January 25, 1852, being the son of Andrew and Christena (Staiger) Flaig, also natives of Germany, where also they remained until the time of their death, the father passing away in 1866. The father was in the war with Denmark in 1848. Two brothers of our subject's mother are in the United States. John is a wealthy citizen of Syracuse, New York, and Daniel lives in Seneca Falls, in the same state. Our subject was educated in Germany and there learned the watchmaker's trade. He came to the United States in 1879 and from New York city he went to Fredonia, New York, where he worked in the watch factory. He went to Springfield, Illinois, inside of two years and there wrought about one year. After this we see him in St. Paul, where he was in business for himself for several years. His next move was to Butte, Montana, and in 1889 Mr. Flaig came to Wardner. He bought out the only jewelry shop here and at once opened a first-class place and since that time he has continued in the prosecution of his present business with gratifying success. Mr. Flaig has won the esteem and the respect of all by his geniality, kind ways and strict uprightness and skill in his business relations. Mr. Flaig has one brother, Andrew, in western Africa, and one sister, Mrs. Barbara Nitz, in Minnesota.

In 1885 Mr. Flaig married Miss Mary Sneider, whose parents were natives of Switzerland and now live in West Virginia. Mrs. Flaig has one brother and one sister, Carl, a watchmaker in Spokane; Mrs. Emma Doyle. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Flaig, Carl and Emma. Mr. Flaig is a member of the A. O. U. W., Spokane No. 16. He and his wife are devout members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Flaig is treasurer and cashier of the Government Gulch Mining Company and also owns several claims in the Pine creek district. Politically our subject is a Democrat and has served as delegate to the county convention. In 1891 Mr. Flaig erected a wooden business structure and in 1893 it was destroyed by fire. He has a good residence and is prosperous in his business.

GEORGE W. HARRIS. Among the professional men of Wardner, who have won first-class success by their efforts of close attention to business, by their skill, by their wisdom and by real worth in professional lines, we are glad to mention the subject of this article, who is now handling a large dental practice in Wardner, while his wife, also a skillful dentist, is doing a good business in Kellogg.

George W. Harris was born in Charleston, Coles county, Illinois, on December 10, 1863, being the son of DeLamar L. and Hannah (Lajara) Harris. The father was a native of London and a practicing physician. He was a physician on a man of war for ten years and is now one of the leading physicians in Charleston, Illinois. He has been sheriff of his county twice and treasurer once. The mother of our subject was born in Madrid, Spain, came to the United States in 1854 and married at New Orleans. She met Dr. Harris while he was in the naval service. She died in 1864, George W. being six years old. Our subject graduated from the high school in his native town and then went to the Northwest Dental College of Chicago, where he spent four years in close study and demonstration. Having graduated with honors, he commenced practice in Durango, Colorado, and four years later he went to southern Utah, thence to Arizona, where he spent five years. Then came the beginning of a long foreign trip, which was inaugurated with a journey to the Argentine Republic, and two years were spent in active practice in Buenos Ayres, after which Dr. Harris went to Valparaiso and practiced one year. Then came a journey from Chile to old Mexico, where he practiced a time and finally landed in the borders of the United States and came through Arizona and Utah, practicing in various places until 1898, when he came to Burke and opened an office. Two years later he located in Wardner and since that time he has done a fine practice and is favored with the esteem and good will of all. Dr. Harris has one brother and two sisters: Layton, a physician in Cedar Grove, Indiana; Mrs. Della Woodfall; Mrs. Maggie Cochran.

In Castlegate, Utah, in November, 1894, Dr. Harris married Miss Mabel L. Thompson, whose father is a prominent dentist in Salt Lake City. One child, Layton, aged seven, has been born to this union. Dr. Harris is an active Democrat, was delegate to the last county convention. was sheriff one term in Gila county, Arizona, also probate judge. He is a member of K. of P., the A. O. U. W., the Eagles, and is popular in these circles.

FRANKLIN P. MATCHETTE, M. D., has been an active practititioner in the Coeur d'Alene country for many years and is doubtless the oldest established physician in Wardner. He devotes his attention exclusively to his private practice, not allowing that to be interfered with by hospital or outside work, although formerly he did a large amount of the hospital practice.

Franklin P. Matchette was born in Anderson, Indiana, on July 4, 1864, being the son of James and Sophia (Hilligoss) Matchette, natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively, of French extraction, and now living at Wallowa, Oregon. Our subject was raised principally in Butler, Bates county, Missouri, whither his parents went when he was eight years old. He attended the high school and in 1881 the family came across the plains with a colony of forty families. They settled near Spokane and three years later went to Eugene, Oregon. Franklin P. graduated from the university there in 1886 and then at once went to the American Medical College at St. Louis, from which institution he graduated with honors in 1890. He came at once to the Coeur d'Alene country and for one year practiced with Dr. Herrington in Wallace. They had all the mining work to do then, being in charge of Providence Hospital. Following that year Dr. Matchette came to Wardner and bought out Dr. Warren N. Davis and since that time he has been steadily in practice here. He has a good patronage and is a physician of experience.

Dr. Matchette has two brothers and three sisters: George H., a prominent physician in McPherson, Kansas, being retained by two railroads; Lee, a stockman in Wallowa; Mrs. Minnie Storer; Mrs. Emma Betty; Mrs. Sarah Daniel.

Dr. Matchette has been twice married, the first time being in Missouri and the lady America Borum, from whom he has since been divorced. The second marriage was with Miss Willetta Zimmerlee, whose father is in Phoenix, Oregon, but her mother is deceased. Mrs. Matchette was burned to death on May 2, 1902, at her home here in Wardner. One child, Goldie, was the fruit of the first union, and one child, James M., the issue of the second, both being with the Doctor at present. Dr. Matchette has long been an Odd Fellow and is past noble grand of the Wardner lodge. He also is a member of the A. O. U. W.; of the Eagles; of the M. W. A.; while in political matters he is a Democrat and is frequently at the county and state conventions.

DREW W. PEEPLES, a man of sterling worth and excellent principles, whose integrity has been demonstrated in this district for more than a decade, is now foreman for the Empire State mine. In this capacity Mr. Peeples has manifested the excellent practical knowledge of mining, of which he has a large fund, has shown fine executive ability and by his wise methods has placed the property in a first-class condition. Politically Mr. Peeples is a Republican, and an active one, being central committeeman and was a delegate to the last county convention. He is also a member of the city council and chairman of the school board. He has won the confidence and esteem of all by uprightness, good business ability, geniality, strictly conserving the interests entrusted to his care, and by a manly open walk at all times.

Referring to his early history we note that Drew W. Peeples was born in Murray county, Georgia, on August 1, 1859, being the son of Mortimore and Margaret (Hossler) Peeples, natives of Georgia. The father went to California in 1849 and was successful in a two-years' placer mining experience so that he entered the commercial life on his return to Georgia. At the time of the war he enlisted in the Confederate army as first lieutenant, under General Lee, and was killed in the battle of Missionary Ridge. He came from English ancestors. The mother of our subject died in 1883 and was descended from Pennsylvania Dutch. Our subject was educated in the academy and remained in his native place until 1877, then went to Texas, where after the first year he rode the range in that state and in New Mexico. Then Mr. Peeples took up mining in New Mexico until 1890, when he came to the Coeur d'Alene country and prospected. He next accepted a position in the Stemwinder for a few months, then in the Bunker Hill and Last Chance until 1895. Since 1895 he has been with the Clark Sweeney syndicate. For a time he was shift boss and in 1900, July, he was appointed foreman of the Empire State, where he has shown excellent skill since and is now operating. Mr. Peeples has three brothers and one sister: Frank, Heristel, Mortimore, Mrs. Florence Holland. He also has four half-brothers and one half-sister: Edward, Richard, John, James Hopkins and Jennie Hopkins.

On June 23, 1897, at Rossland, British Columbia, Mr. Peeples married Miss Goldie M., daughter of Joseph and Harriet Davenport, who are now residing in Wardner. Mr. Davenport is yard master in the Empire State and Mrs. Peeples' brother, Archie, is shift boss in the same mine. To Mr. and Mrs. Peeples one child, Edna G., has been born. She is now four years old. Mr. Peeples is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and the I. O. O. F. Mrs. Peeples is a member of the Christian church and with her husband belongs to the Rebekahs.

MARY E. TEATS. Without doubt the subject of this review has done a noble part in bringing about the development of the St. Marys country and she is deserving of especial mention in this volume.

Mary E. Teats was born in McLean county, Illinois, on February 24, 1856, being the daughter of Abraham and Rosana Bechtel. The father enlisted in the Union army at the beginning of the war and served four years, participating in many battles and skirmishes and then received an honorable discharge on account of disability. In about 1870 Mrs. Teats came with her mother and two brothers to Virginia City, Montana. The father had died on August 16, 1866. On June 6, 1871, our subject married Mr. Phillip H. Teats and they soon came to Colfax, Washington, then removed to Farmington and in June, 1889, she came to her present home about three miles above the forks of the St. Marys, on the south branch. Mrs. Teats is postmistress of Clarkia, being appointed on August 21, 1902. In 1887 Mr. Teats and the mother of our subject and one son and one brother of Mrs. Teats came to this section and they had to cut the road from Santa creek to their present home, it requiring three weeks to make the trip. Mrs. Teats has had much hardship to endure and has done a great deal of trying and hard work to open this country and she is to be credited with real pioneer courage and spirit. Her mother was the first white woman in this section and the daughter-in-law of that lady being the only woman here when Mrs. Teats came. Mrs. Teats was obliged to cross the St. Marys eighteen times when she came in and there were no roads, simply some trails, in places they had to follow the river bed. Six children have been born to Mrs. Teats: Louis P., of Nez Perces county, and he has three children, Mary Ada, Margaret Ann, Dortha; John S., deceased; George H., of Shoshone county, who has one child, Cynthia Hazel; William T.; Mrs. Rosa I. Adams, of Gregg, Idaho, who has one child, Lola; Sylvia E. It is right in this connection to mention that Mrs. Teats had to freight her provisions from Farmington in the early days and this was accomplished with great hardship and was indeed a trying ordeal.

JOEL DAVENPORT. The Empire State mine finds a capable and efficient yard master in the person of the subject of this sketch and he is one of the reliable, highly esteemed and industrious citizens of Wardner.

Joel Davenport was born in Indianapolis, on June 10, 1843. His father, Martin Davenport, was a native of North Carolina and raised in Ohio. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a large planter and during the time of the Revolution he furnished supplies for the American cause. At the close of the war he had ten thousand dollars of Continental currency, which he left to his son, Martin. It was kept in the family until our subject was born and as it was considered worthless, he used to play with it, and after it was all destroyed and lost, congress passed a bill redeeming it. The mother of our subject, Annie (Byrkitt) Davenport, was a native of South Carolina, raised and married in Ohio and died in the fall of 1872, aged seventy-five. Our subject was reared and educated in Indianapolis, finishing the high school and studying in Butler Seminary. When he was sixteen the family went to Kansas and there he participated in the struggles of the early settlers to make Kansas a free state. He enlisted in the Civil war and was with the noted scout, General Jim Lane, in various capacities. In the fall of 1883 Mr. Davenport came to Seattle and there engaged in dairying for four years. He was in Portland and also in Clarke county, Washington, where he followed real estate business and general merchandising. Thence he migrated to Rossland, British Columbia, and from that point Mr. Davenport made his way to Wardner in March, 1898. He at once engaged with the Empire State and has since remained with that company.

On December 22, 1868, in Wyandotte county, Kansas, Mr. Davenport married Miss Harriet, daughter of Daniel and Anna Helin, natives of Pennsylvania and of German extraction, but now deceased. Two children have been born to this marriage: Archie and Mrs. Goldie M. Peeples. Mr. Davenport has three brothers and two sisters: John, Andrew, Noah, Mrs. Sarah Pile, Mrs. Pracilla Milne. Mrs. Davenport has the following named brothers and sisters: Christian, Daniel, Andrew, Samuel, Mrs. Jane Stickney, Mrs. Kate Pence, Mrs. Sarah Kerns. Mr. Davenport and his wife are members of the Christian church and are of excellent standing in the community.

WARREN N. DAVIS, M. D., one of the earliest professional men in the Coeur d'Alene country, has, by excellent wisdom displayed in his practice, by faithful devotion to his patients, by an upright walk and unswerving integrity, placed himself high in the esteem of all and won an enviable position among both the people and his confreres. It is with pleasure that we are privileged to recount some of the details of his active and useful life.

Warren N. Davis was born in Quakertown, Pennsylvania, a suburb of Philadelphia, on September 25, 1849, being the son of George W. and Sarah (McComb) Davis, natives of Pennsylvania. The father was a miller and operated a plant which his father established over one hundred years ago. The ancestors of our subject came to Pennsylvania with William Penn. The mother's parents were of Scotch extraction and her father served in the war of 1812. Warren N. had two brothers in the Civil war, Cyrus C. and David, both deceased now. Cyrus C. enlisted in Company B, Tenth Pennsylvania, was wounded at Gaines Mill, on account of which he was discharged. Recovering, he organized a company and went as lieutenant of it. Our subject was raised in his native town until ten, then went with the family to Philadelphia. After graduating from the high school, he entered the medical department of the Pennsylvania University, where he completed a thorough medical course and on March 12, 1872, graduated with honors. He immediately took up practice in western Pennsylvania and three years later he went to Portland, Oregon, where he was active in his profession for ten years. In 1886 he came to Wardner and was physician for the Bunker Hill and the Chance mines and his practice took him all over the entire Coeur d'Alene country. In 1892 Dr. Davis went to Portland and remained until 1900, when he again came to Wardner and is now devoting himself to his private practice, being favored with a good patronage. Dr. Davis has two brothers and one sister living: Thomas H., James C., Mrs. Martha A. Finsthwait, all in Pennsylvania.

On December 5, 1878, at Oregon City, Dr. Davis married Miss Lillie M., daughter of John and Louisa Barrett. The father was a prominent architect and contractor but is now deceased. He left a large property. The mother is still living in Portland. Mrs. Davis has two sisters, Minnie, wife of Henry Loveridge, owner of the Portland electric works; Mrs. Wissie Caffee, whose husband is a prominent politician and contractor. To Dr. and Mrs. Davis one daughter has been born, Luzelle C., secretary and treasurer of the Inter-Ocean Mining Company, whose property is at Sumpter and their offices in Portland. Dr. Davis is a Democrat, but never accepts nomination for office.

JOSEPH E. FORTIN, one of the old pioneers in this section, is also the pioneer shoemaker in Wardner, since his advent here has steadily pursued his vocation with excellent success, that which honest industry and thrift deserve, while his standing in the community is first class and he is among the popular and progressive citizens, public minded and generous.

Joseph E. Fortin was born in Quebec, Canada, on January 15, 1864, being the son of August and Leonore (Morroi) Fortin, natives also of Quebec. The father was killed in an accident in 1874, aged fifty. The paternal grandfather of our subject lived to be ninety-four, had eight children and at the time of his death had three hundred and thirty-three descendants. The Fortins first settled in Canada in 1608, coming from France, and they were a long-lived family, one living to be one hundred and twenty years old and two others lived to the age of one hundred and six. Our subject's brother now resides on the old homestead that has been in the family for nearly three hundred years; the first Fortin took it in 1608. Some of the ancestors fought under Montcalm in the French-English wars of the eighteenth century. The mother of our subject is still living on the old homestead with her son. She comes from an old Canadian family, prominent in early days. Our subject was reared in his native place and there educated, also learning the shoemaker's trade. In 1885 he went to Montreal and wrought at his trade, thence to Ottawa, where he worked at it for three years and then he came on to St. Paul and six months later to Butte, whence three months later he went to Phillipsburg, Montana. Shortly after that he was in Wallace and soon in Wardner, where he has remained since. He does a fine business, is popular and capable and highly esteemed by all. Mr. Fortin has five brothers and two sisters: August, Stanislas, Damace, Severe Wilfred, Almina Teberg, Leda, all in Quebec.

On June 20, 1889, at Ottawa, Mr. Fortin married Miss Agnes, daughter of John and Delphine (Berner) McAvoy. Two children have been born to this union, Ina, aged three, and Yronne, aged eight. Mr. and Mrs. Fortin are members of the Roman Catholic church. Politically he is allied with the Socialists and this fall ran for county commissioner on that platform.

GEORGE W. HARRIS is the managing member of the firm of Harris Brothers, druggists in Wardner. He is a man of affability, uprightness and possessed of agreeable social qualities, while in business circles he is one of the substantial and competent men of the city. The firm does a first-class business, handle their trade with skill and are very popular with a large patronage.

George W. Harris was born in Pittsfield, Illinois, on February 18, 1858, being the son of George C. and Mary J. (Fimcal) Harris. The father was a prominent physician, born in Emmettsburg, Maryland, and practiced actively for fifty years. He died in Portland, Oregon, in the spring of 1885, aged seventy-five. He had practiced in Oregon for fifteen years and served for three years as surgeon of an Iowa regiment in the Civil war. He resigned that position in 1864 and crossed the plains to California with ox teams. He had crossed in 1849 and mined in the Golden state for three years, making a fair fortune, upon which he returned to Illinois and took up his practice until the war broke out. His father was in the war of 1812 and a native of England, but fought for the American cause. The mother of our subject was a native of Minnesota and died at Pendleton in the spring of 1892, aged sixty-five. Her father was of Pennsylvania German stock and her mother was a native of Maine. Our subject came with the family to Oregon in 1868, studied in the public schools, at the colleges in Corvallis and Eugene and then took a course in Armstrong's Business College in Portland. He graduated from this institution in 1884 and then studied pharmacy, which he has followed since. In 1885 he opened a drug store in Lexington, Oregon, and sold out three years later. Then he traveled for Frank Brothers, an implement house of Portland, three years, after which he was salesman in a Spokane drug store for six months; in 1890, came to Wallace, and one year later he came to Wardner. He worked in the branch store of McNab & Livers and in 1897 bought the establishment and has since operated it with his brother. It is the first drug store in Wardner and in 1901 Harris Brothers opened a branch store in Kellogg. Mr. Harris has one brother, Dr. Fred L., his partner, and a popular physician of Wardner. He also has two sisters, Mrs. Fanny Butler, whose husband, Jay Butler, is one of the faculty of the State Normal at Monmouth, Oregon; Mrs. Hattie Hinkle, at Independence, Oregon.

On April 17, 1887, Mr. Harris married, at Lexington, Oregon, Miss Hattie Towers, whose parents are deceased. Five children have come to bless this marriage: George, Grover, Shirley, Gordon, Earl, aged fourteen, twelve, nine, six and three, respectively. Mrs. Harris has one brother, George, and one sister, Mrs. Kate Steffis, in Kellogg. Mr. Harris is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Wardner Lodge No. 34; of the B. P. O. E., Coeur d'Alene No. 331, Wallace; of the I. O. O. F., Wardner No. 12, being past noble grand; of the F. O. E., Wardner Aerie; of the K. P., at Heppner, Oregon; of the A. O. U. W., No. 12, Wardner. Mr. Harris is a stanch Democrat and for five years he was postmaster of Wardner.

WILLIAM F. GODDARD, a courteous and popular resident of Wardner and head owner of the large gents' clothing and furnishing establishment in that city, which he is operating with excellent success, having achieved the same by reason of excellent business methods and his deferential and uniformly kind treatment of patrons, is one of the prominent men and substantial and public minded citizens of Wardner and quite deserving of representation in the history of northern Idaho.

William F. Goddard was born in Ontario, Canada, on July 4, 1863, being the son of Frederick and Mary (Lamb) Goddard. The father is a native of Brighton, England, and now is a merchant in Simcoe, Ontario. The mother of William F. was born in Ontario and now is at Simcoe. Our subject was raised in Simcoe and there received a high school education from the excellent schools of Ontario, graduating at the age of sixteen. He clerked in a gents' furnishing establishment there for two years, then wrought in other Canadian towns until 1884, when he came to Portland, Oregon, where he wrought as salesman as also in The Dalles and several coast towns. In the spring of 1886 he went to Lewiston and in the fall of 1887 Mr. Goddard came to Wardner. He was salesman for a large concern for a time and in 1889 he opened a store for himself. He has made a brilliant success of his business and is at the present time carrying a stock of twenty-five thousand dollars. He has carried nearly twice this amount while conducting branch establishments at Kellogg and Silver King, but recently Mr. Goddard sold these and now confines himself to the Wardner house. He owns the one-story brick and stone structure which he erected in Kellogg, also owns the brick building where he does business in Wardner, a fine modern residence in Wardner, also several residence and business structures which he rents. Mr. Goddard has two brothers and two sisters: Andrew, J. Wesley, Mrs. David Gable, Mrs. William McFarland.

On January 7, 1883, at Tilsonburg, Ontario, Mr. Goddard married Miss Maggie, daughter of James and Helen Fumerton, now residing in Wardner, the father being a mill man in the Bunker Hill and Sullivan. One child has been born to this happy marriage, Mabel A., aged nineteen. Mrs. Goddard and her daughter are among the leading ladies of society in Wardner and they have a beautiful home, conducted with charming grace and made a center of refined hospitality. Mr. Goddard is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Wardner Lodge No. 34. He is a strong Republican and is chairman of the city council.

MERREL R. ROBIRTS. This enterprising gentleman is proprietor of the Big Meadow Hotel at the forks of the Saint Marys river, and in addition to the business this brings him he is engaged in lumber and farm labors.

Merrel R. Robirts was born in Sydney, Iowa, on December 31, 1872, being the son of John J. and Caibela Robirts. The father crossed the plains to Wyoming in 1863 and the following year he went to Ft. Minor, New Mexico, and the next year, 1865, he was in Denver, making the trip with ox teams. When our subject was a child his parents settled in Nebraska City, Nebraska, and soon after went to Peru, Nebraska, where they remained thirteen years, where Merrel received a good common schooling and acquired skill on the farm. Then he returned to Nebraska City and learned the broommaker's trade, which he followed in different portions of Nebraska. In February, 1901, Mr. Robirts came to Tekoa and in the following June he was in the St. Marys region in the lumber woods. He assisted to bring the first drive of logs down the river from the upper tributaries. Then he drove team for the Phoenix Mill Company of Spokane and in the spring of 1902 he bought eighty acres of meadow, where his hotel now stands. He has a valuable place and the hotel is a good sized building, with eleven sleeping apartments, in addition to the living rooms. He has also a large feed stable and other improvements and manifests excellent thrift and industry. Mr. Robirts is a member of the M. W. A. of Cornwall, Idaho.

On July 3, 1897, he was married to Miss Amanda J., daughter of Peter and Mary Oleson. Mr. and Mrs. Oleson were pioneers of the St. Marys country in 1889, from the vicinity of St. Paul, Minnesota. The father was accidentally shot by a man who was endeavoring to shoot a dog. To our subject and his faithful wife there has been born one child, Adrain.

By way of reminiscence and to illustrate the trying times of the pioneers and their skill in meeting adversity, a note in reference to the father of our subject is quite in place. He went to the Palouse country from the St. Marys region to work for provisions and he had a couple of cayuses. He worked for the provisions, traded his cayuse for a cow, packed two hundred pounds on the cow's back and so made his way back home, and the cow was none the worse for the wear.

PHILIP P. WEBER, banker, merchant, mining man and property owner, is one of the leading and prominent men of the Coeur d'Alene country. He is cashier and manager of the Weber Bank and conducts the large business of the Weber Brothers, leading financial concern of Wardner.

Philip Weber was born in Ohio, on July 27, 1858, being the son of John and Mary E. (Wagner) Weber, natives of Germany. The father came to the United States in the forties, settled in Ohio, where he farmed until August 3, 1898, the time of his death, being then aged eighty-four. The mother was married in New York state and died in 1872, aged fifty-three. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, educated in the public and private schools and at the age of eighteen went to teaching school. Three years in that calling and then came three in the grocery business in Canal Dover, Ohio. Next he went to Bodie, California, where he worked in the quartz mills for a time and in March, 1884, he was one of the newcomers in Eagle City. July saw him in Murray, where he erected several buildings and then went to Butte, Montana. In 1885 he burned the first kiln of brick in the Coeur d'Alene country, handling about one half million. When the Wardner excitement was on in December he came hither, this being in 1885. He conducted a real estate office for two years, also erected many buildings and rented them. He is an expert in building and owns many residence and business structures all through the Coeur d'Alene country. In 1887 Mr. Weber embarked in a general mercantile store in Burke and sold the same in 1889. Removing then to Spokane he suffered from pneumonia and went thence to San Diego, California, and eleven months later came to Wardner, where he has remained since. In 1893, in partnership with his brother, Mr. Weber started his present bank, being now cashier of the institution. His brother is president and his nephew, C. H. Wentz, is assistant cashier. The firm also owns a wholesale cigar and stationery store and do a good trade. Mr. Weber has three brothers and three sisters: Charles W., a hatter in Spokane; Peter, liveryman and stockman in Hailey, Idaho; John H., in the bank; Mrs. C. F. Rudolph, in Kellogg; Mrs. Valentine Wentz, in Canal Dover, Ohio; Barbara, single, living in Spokane. On December 18, 1888, at Spokane, Mr. Weber married Miss Lucy, daughter of Samuel and Lydia Tooney, of Canal Dover, where the father is a large manufacturer, but the mother is deceased. Mrs. Weber was born there. Mr. Weber is a member of the Junior American Mechanics, of the Eagles, of the Industrial Union, and he and his wife belongs to the Daughters of America. Mr. Weber is prominent in politics, being an influential Republican, always at the county conventions and lately at the state conventions, where he is a potent factor, but always refusing nomination for himself. The firm own many buildings, are the heaviest holders of Wyoming stock and the largest taxpayers of this district. Mr. Weber is popular and has host of friends and is of the highest standing.

C. W. MAYS is one of the leading and well known mining men in the Pierce district and it is with pleasure that we incorporate an epitome of his career in this history of northern Idaho. He was born in Starke county, Ohio, on December 28, 1852, the son of Captain James and Josephine (Grifton) Mays, natives of Pennsylvania and Marseilles, France, respectively. The father was a veteran of both the Mexican and the Civil wars and is now living in Harrison, Ohio. Our subject went with his parents to Sandusky, Ohio, in 1865 and later to Chicago and in these places and in his native place he received his educational training. In 1876 Mr. Mays went to Brazil, South America, as a traveling salesman and was absent for two years. When he returned to Chicago he followed railroading there until 1890. Next we see him railroading in Minnesota and in 1894 he started west. He arrived in Pierce on the fourth day of March, 1894, and since that time he has identified himself with this district. He went to prospecting at once and soon had located the Dollar Mark and the Last Strike, promising quartz claims which he sold to the Ohio and Idaho company. He now owns the Outlaw, the Pirate, and Maud M. quartz claims which he has discovered and developed since that time. He also owns a half interest in the Ohio and Elkhorn and has two placer claims, the Sweetheart and Sister Bell, both good producers. Mr. Mays has one sister, Belle, widow of L. Streator, now residing in Jeffersonville, Indiana. Mr. Mays is a member of the K. P. and is a Republican in politics. He is active in the interests of the county and state and is a man of excellent qualifications, and has manifested both integrity and enterprise in his labors here.

JOHN J. TONER. A jocose and genial person, a good business man and the senior member of the firm of Toner Brothers, general merchants of Wardner, one of the earliest business men to establish himself in this camp, and now a leading and substantial citizen, it is with pleasure that we incorporate a resume of the career of Mr. Toner. He was born in Illinois, on December 29, 1849, being the son of Richard D. and Catherine (Welsh) Toner, natives of the Emerald Isle. Our subject was educated in Minnesota in the common schools and then taught school. After this he completed the high school course in Fairbault and followed teaching more. He then turned his attention to other callings and also railroaded in St. Paul for a year and in 1886, he came to Wardner and joined his brother, David L., and these two, with Richard, who came a few weeks later, opened a general merchandise store and in the management of this our subject has remained since. Mr. Toner also has considerable mining interest with his brother. Politically, he is a Democrat but never takes nomination or seeks preferment. Mr. Toner is a member of the Roman Catholic church and it is his pleasure to still enjoy the quiet comforts of the celibatarian. Mr. Toner is happily possessed of that wealth of sparkling wit and humor, the legacy of his people, and he is the center of a large circle of admiring friends.

HENRY A. JONES, a prominent mining man of Wardner, is one of the earliest pioneers to the Coeur d'Alene country and has operated in a leading way in various properties throughout the district. He came to Murray in the spring of 1883, abandoning a recently taken ranch on the Mullan road to join the rush. A hundred or more men camped on Prichard's ranch, drawn thither by Prichard's glowing reports and as the snow was deep, nearly as high as a telegraph pole, it was difficult locating claims. Mr. Prichard's piloted the company to the vicinity of where Murray now stands and our subject secured a claim close by. After working that out and also one at Delta, in 1885, Mr. Jones came to Wardner and since that time he has constantly wrought here with the exception of three years in Alaska. He erected the first lumber building in Wardner, and has been active in building since, owning much property here, among which are residences and the American hotel. He has also been active in mining matters and has interests in many properties and has promoted many. He was one of the original owners of the Silver King. Fraternally, Mr. Jones is affiliated with the K. P., being past C. C. of Galena Lodge No. 12; with the Lincoln Lodge of Orangemen; with the Junior Mechanics; with the Washington Council No. 1, the first of Idaho; with the Daughters of America. Mr. Jones has never yet taken to himself a wife and thus is still enjoying the quiet charms of celibacy.

Referring more particularly to his early life and his family, we note that Henry A. Jones was born in Medina county, Ohio, on August 27, 1854, being the son of Russell A. and Catherine (Woolcott) Jones. The father was born in Ohio, and his father in Vermont. The family were among the first to invade the wilds of the western reserve and were prominent among Ohio pioneers. The father of our subject died in 1858. The mother of Henry A. was a native of Portage county, Ohio, and had the pleasure of being a schoolmate of the noted and beloved James A. Garfield. The Woolcotts were prominent in government affairs in early days and Oliver Wolcot, grandfather of Mrs. Jones, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence. The name is spelled variously. Other members of the family were prominent. Our subject's paternal uncle was a brigadier general in the confederate army and was killed in the battle of Balls Bluff. He was a wealthy slave owner. Our subject was reared on a farm in Ohio, received a fine education from the public schools, the academy, and the normal and gave nine years after his graduation to teaching in Ohio, Kentucky, Iowa and Colorado. Then he went to the Black Hills with a cattle outfit and in 1878 he was in Butte freighting during those flush days. Then he spent one winter in the vigorous exercise of hunting buffalo and later went to placer mining in Quartz creek in Montana. He took a claim, for agricultural purposes near the Mullan road in the fall of 1882 and in the following spring abandoned it to join the rush for Murray. Mr. Jones is well known all over the district and is a prominent man, highly esteemed and of unswerving integrity and real worth.

JOHN C. EDDY is proprietor of the American hotel of Wardner, which he has handled with such skill that it has come to be one of the popular resorts of travellers. He purchased the furnishings of the house in 1900, but on January, 1902, he devoted his whole attention to it and is now doing a fine business. He and his wife have wrought with skill and thrift in directing the various departments of the house, which is both American and European, and have been rewarded with a gratifying patronage.

John C. Eddy was born in Wyoming county, New York, on September 12, 1862, being the son of Edwin and Lorinda (Blood) Eddy, natives of New York state. The Eddy family is an old American family of English ancestrage and prominent in professional and mercantile life in various sections of the country. They were patriotic and brave, as their faithful service in the Revolution, war of 1812, and the Rebellion testifies. In all these conflicts they were the unfailing and unflinching supporters of the American cause and the government. Judge Eddy, the father's brother, is a prominent man in Los Angeles and a powerful political orator. The mother of our subject came from a leading New England family and her brother, Moses, was in high official circles in governmental affairs. The parents of our subject still live in New York and have recently celebrated their golden wedding. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place and came to Nebraska when twenty-one. He rode the range there and in Wyoming for one concern for many years, then engaged with the government in inspection of surveys, then wrought in the mines in Colorado, was in Butte, later in Buffalo Hump country, at Spokane and in the various districts adjacent thereto, including British Columbia and finally he halted in the Coeur d'Alene country. He has wrought in the Empire State mine and in January, 1902, left that for his hotel. Mrs. Eddy had operated the house from 1900 to the time he quit the mine and since then they have both given their attention to its oversight and direction. Mr. Eddy has two brothers, Lewis W., Frank E.

On April 2, 1898, at Idaho Springs, Colorado, Mr. Eddy married Miss Mary, daughter of Frederick and Minnie Bertram, natives of Germany. Mr. Eddy is a member of the A. O. U. W., of the Wardner Industrial Union, and the F. O. E., all in Wardner. He is a Republican and although not specially active he has been chosen as delegate to the county convention.

RICHARD T. TONER, of the well known firm of Toner Brothers, general merchants of Wardner, is a man of sterling worth and excellent business qualifications and is one of the popular and leading men of the town. Mentioning the details of his career, we note that he was born in Winona, Minnesota, on April 15, 1858. His parents, Richard D. and Catherine (Welsh) Toner, were natives of Ireland. The father came to the United States in the forties and died in Minnesota in 1878, aged sixty-five. The mother was married in the United States and died in Minnesota in 1886, aged sixty-eight. Our subject was reared on his father's farm in Minnesota and educated in the public schools. When nineteen he went to Montana where he engaged variously for ten years. In 1886 he came to Wardner, whither his brothers, John and David L., had preceded him a few weeks and had opened a general merchandise establishment, our subject being one of the partners. When this store was started there were two others, but they removed later so this is the oldest general merchandise establishment in the town. They were pioneers and very little of the present town of Wardner was then existing. In 1888 on account of the failing health of David, the other two brothers bought his interest and they continue in the management of the establishment until this date. Our subject has three brothers and two sisters, David, a merchant and mining man in Chewelah, Washington; Charles, a contractor in the east; John, his present partner, and the eldest; Mercy A. Davidson, in Cloquett, Minnesota; Kate, living with our subject.

At Spokane, in 1892, Mr. Toner married Miss Isabel, daughter of James and Sarah Keenan, who reside in Ireland. Two children have been born to this union, Catherine, aged seven; Richard J., aged five. Mrs. Toner is a native of Ireland and has one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Devlin, at Silver King, Idaho. Mr. and Mrs. Toner are faithful members of the Catholic church. He is a Democrat and is frequently a delegate to the county convention but always refuses nomination for office. Mr. Toner was chairman of the school trustees and rendered excellent service. In addition to his mercantile interests, Mr. Toner owns an interest in the Blackhawk and Wyoming mines and also in numerous undeveloped properties.

HEENEN J. ROGERS. The popular O. K. barber shop needs no introduction to the people of Wallace nor does the subject of this sketch, who is the proprietor in partnership with Edward O. Herring, since he is well known and of good standing. The shop is the finest in Wallace, has the best baths with excellent porcelain tubs and is granted a first-class patronage which its excellent management deserves.

Heenen J. Rogers was born in McGregor, Iowa, on September 9, 1861, being the son of Jabez S. and Sarah (Reeves) Rogers, natives of Ohio and Wisconsin, respectively, and now deceased. They both came from old American families and the father served in the Twenty-first Iowa Infantry for three years and three months. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place and when fifteen went to work in a shingle mill. He went to contracting in this business later and remained until 1884, when he went to South Chippewa, Wisconsin, and opened a barber shop. His skill had been gained in shaving the mill men and from the first he did well in the shop. On December 23, 1885, he arrived in Minneapolis and worked in a barber shop for two years. Then he took a position with the Minnesota harvester works and later operated as trainman on the Chicago & Milwaukee. In 1890 we see him in his art in Butte, Montana, and on January 12, 1891, he landed in Wallace. He wrought at his trade for two years and in 1893 he bought an interest in the O. K. shop, which he and his partner are now conducting in a successful manner. Mr. Rogers has one brother and two sisters, Charles F., Edith M. Ford, Eva M. Dressel.

On August 15, 1885, at Hudson, Wisconsin, Mr. Rogers married Miss Sarah J. King, whose parents dwell in Mauston, Wisconsin. Mrs. Rogers has three brothers and three sisters, Peter J., William, Patrick, Mary Galagher, Eliza and Martha. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, James F. and Verna R. Mr. Rogers is a member of the B. P. O. E., and the K. O. T. M. He is an active Republican and wields a good influence in the campaigns.

RICHARD DAXON is heavily interested in mining properties both in the Coeur d'Alene country and elsewhere and is prominent in mining circles. He is president of the Tarbox Mining Company of Saltese, Montana; is treasurer of the Little Chief Mining Company, at Mullan; and is also interested in many others.

Richard Daxon was born in Rock Island, Illinois, on July 7, 1859, being the son of Pierce and Margaret (Hynes) Daxon, natives of Ireland, now living in Girard, Kansas. The father was a soldier in the Forty-seventh Illinois Infantry and for many years was justice of the peace and assessor in Kansas. Our subject went with the family to Kansas when he was eleven and he obtained his education from the public schools. In 1879 he went to Colorado and mined and in 1883 we see him at Thompson Falls, Montana, where, with his brother, he operated a saloon. He came to Murray in the time of the excitement and opened the Palace hotel. He sold that in the spring of 1886 and prospected and in the fall of 1888 he and his brother opened a saloon in Mullan. In 1894 he sold to his brother and Mr. Daxon went into business in Wardner. In the spring of 1895 he came to Wallace and opened the Coliseum, which he sold seven years later and is now operating the Sunset beer hall. Mr. Daxon is one of the old timers and is well acquainted with all the early prospectors and is informed as to the various properties in this district. Mr. Daxon has two brothers, William, a large property holder in Mullan; James, a farmer in Kansas. Mr. Daxon and his brother, William, have a fine farm of two hundred and forty acres in Kansas, which they rent.

On July 1, 1900, Mr. Daxon married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of August and Elizabeth Yeager, residing at Fletcher, Idaho. Mrs. Daxon has the following brothers and sisters, August, in business in the Philippines; Christena, whose husband, Fred Inman, is engineer in the Sunset brewery; Laura, a school girl; Emily Goetz, in New York; Anna Smith, whose husband is with Stewart & Welch, railroad contractors in Spokane; Emma, a school girl. Mr. Daxon is a member of the F. O. E., Wallace Aerie, No. 54; of the Coeur d'Alene Court, No. 9, Foresters of America; Lakota Tribe, No. 13, I. O. R. M.

FRANK F. JOHNSON. Without peradventure the financial institutions of our land exert the most potent influence upon the country as to its standing, its progress, and its prosperity. Hence it is that public sentiment demands that men of the finest ability and unswerving integrity and intrinsic worth be at the head of these institutions. The gentleman of whom we now have the pleasure of speaking is and has been for years among the most substantial of banking men in the northwest and the magnificant growth of the First National Bank of Wallace, at the head of which he stands, being president and prominent stockholder, demonstrates without uncertainty his ability in the financial world. He has built up an institution here that has the perfect confidence of the entire Coeur d'Alene country, which stands high among the banking institutions of the northwest, and that does an enormous business. A detailed account of Mr. Johnson's career will form an important part of Shoshone county history and therefore we append the same.

Frank F. Johnson was born in Shawano, Wisconsin, on November 15, 1862, being the son of Albert and Elizabeth S. (Fisk) Johnson. The father was a native of Massachusetts and came from a prominent and old New England family. The mother was born in Wisconsin but also descended from a leading New England family in colonial days. Frank F. was reared in Colorado, whence his family went when he was five years old. After a thorough high school course in Denver, he went to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and there took a course in mining engineering. Following this, Mr. Johnson was engaged in government land surveys for two years and then took up the cattle business with his father for two years. It was 1887 that he came to Murray, where for two and one-half years he was engaged in the bank. Then Mr. Johnson opened the Bank of North Idaho and in 1892 he organized the First National Bank of Wallace and since that date he has been at the head of the institution. Mr. Johnson has one sister, Mrs. Annie R., wife of Dr. W. A. Jones, a leading physician in Minneapolis.

On April 17, 1888, Mr. Johnson married Miss Marie L. Gieson, in Colorado. Her father is a retired farmer in Wisconsin and her mother is deceased. To this happy union three children have been born: Albert D., Clara I.., Ellsworth E. Fraternally Mr. Johnson is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., Shoshone Lodge No. 25; with the Wallace Chapter No. 9, of the R. A. M.; with the Coeur d'Alene Commandery of K. T.; with the B. P. O. E., Coeur d'Alene Lodge No. 331. Politically he is allied with the Republicans and in 1891-2 he held the important office of treasurer of Shoshone county. Mr. Johnson has given of his time in the city council for four years and has aided by excellent sagacity and shrewd business ability to place its affairs in good shape. In addition to all these matters mentioned, Mr. Johnson was a moving spirit in furnishing the city with its excellent system of lights and water. He and his associates bought in the stock of the Wallace Manufacturing, Electric & Water Company, reorganized matters, placed all in good shape and sold to the present company, and Mr. Johnson is retained in the responsible position of president. He is also president of the Shoshone Club and an active member of the board of trade, all of which profit much by his wisdom and executive ability. In social circles Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are leaders and are the center of a large circle of admiring friends. Their pleasant home is a center of refined hospitality and is presided over with grace and dignity by his charming wife, while Mr. Johnson, by his pleasant ways, kind treatment of all, integrity and sound principles, has placed himself in a very enviable position in the city and wherever he is known.

THEODORE F. JAMESON. The gentleman of whom we now speak is not only one of the oldest pioneers in the Coeur d'Alene country, but is a thorough pioneer in every sense of the word and well acquainted with the various districts of the mining part of the United States and especially the northwest and has had great experiences in his career on the frontier. He is a man of geniality and affability and is now conducting a resort which is headquarters for the old timers of the country and his place is well known all over this part of the state. Mr. Jameson has a good bar, always stocked with fine liquors, operates a neat and quiet billiard hall, and has his place embellished with valuable curios and collections of minerals.

Theodore F. Jameson was born in Paris, Kentucky, on November 3, 1843, being the son of William W. and Nancy (Luckie) Jameson, natives of Kentucky. The father died in 1853. Both the families are of old colonial fame and stanch American sentiment. Our subject was educated in the public schools and when he was sixteen the family went to Missouri. He remained on a farm with his parents until he was twenty and then in 1870 we find him in San Francisco and the next year in Pioche, Nevada. In 1878 Mr. Jameson went to Leadville and there and in Rosita he engaged in the liquor business. In 1878 we see him in the famous Black Hills of South Dakota and in 1881 he went to the Wood river country, Idaho. In the fall of 1883 he was in Walla Walla, and in February, 1884, Mr. Jameson came to Eagle City, Idaho. A few weeks later he went to Murray and opened a saloon. This he conducted until 1886, when a move was made to Wardner, whence he came to Wallace in 1889. He then opened his present place and has since given himself to his business. He is located near the business center of the city and his place is orderly and neatly equipped. Mr. Jameson has no brothers and but one sister, Mrs. M. J. Cluster, of Mexico, Missouri. Mr. Jameson is a widower and has no children. He is a member of the Eagles, being treasurer of Wallace Aerie No. 54. He is an active member of the board of trade and a progressive citizen who stands well.

ABRAHAM P. HORTON was born in Canada about 1856 and was raised in New York state. He first started for himself in 1870 and had an experience of losing his money on another man's game in the great city and he returned to peel hemlock bark for another start. Later he went to Ontario and in a short time was in St. Paul, Minnesota, whence he went to the Black Hills in 1875, having trouble with the Sioux Indians. He spent several years digging gold, contracting in the mines and returned to Bismarck and piloted a train over to the Black Hills, being chosen captain. In 1880 he fell eighty-seven feet in the King Solomon mine, and it took him a year to get over the effects of the accident. In 1881 Mr. Horton went to Alaska and after great hardships returned to Tacoma, whence he went again to the Black Hills. In 1883 we find him in the Wood river country and at the time of the rush to Murray he was on the crest of the wave and found good diggings. He was also in the Big Horn country in 1877, but found no prospects worth opening. In 1893 Mr. Horton went to the World's Fair and also made a visit to his old home and returned to the mines again and since that time has been active in the various interests of the Coeur d'Alene country. He is well known and a pioneer, having been connected with various properties.

JAMES M. ADDLE is a well known attorney at law in Wallace, where he has practiced steadily since he came to the city in 1900. Shortly after his arrival he was nominated for county attorney and failed by only fifty-three votes to carry the day, being on the Democratic ticket. He is active in political matters and is of the old Jeffersonian stamp.

James M. Addle was born in Meadville, Pennsylvania, on October 8, 1851, being the son of Amandus and Margaret (Shartle) Addle, natives of Pennsylvania, and the father is living in Meadville now. He served in Company H, One Hundred and Eleventh Pennsylvania Infantry, under Colonel Kane. The paternal grandfather of James M. was a patriot in the Revolution. The mother of our subject came from an old German family and her father fought for the American cause in the war of 1812. She died in 1893 at Meadville, aged eighty-six. James M. was raised in his native town and was educated in Allegheny College there situated. Thence he went to Texas, read law, rode the range in that state and in New Mexico and in April, 1874, in Texas, he was admitted to the practice of law. He practiced there some and a few years later we find him in the profession in Great Falls, Montana, whence he went to the Cripple Creek district in Colorado and practiced and did a mining business and in 1896 Mr. Addle returned to Texas, in which state and in Utah, Wyoming and Arizona he traveled and did business. In 1898 he enlisted in the Rough Riders, went to Florida and after discharge he returned to practice and in 1900 he came to Wallace. In the intervening time Mr. Addle has given himself to the practice and handling of mining business.

On May 5, 1873, Mr. Addle married Miss Clara O'Brien, of Franklin, Pennsylvania. Her parents, Anthony and Sarah O'Brien, are now deceased. Her father was a prominent man and was sheriff off and on in Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, for forty years. One child has been born to this union, Maude, single. Mr. Addle is a member of the K. P., Manila Lodge No. 13, in Wyoming, and he is past C. C.; of the Lakota Tribe of I. O. R. M., being past sachem.

JESSE W. TABOR is a prominent one of the old pioneers who came with the first influx to the Coeur d'Alene country and has made this his home since that time. He is also a leading business man and an influential citizen of Wallace, handling at the present time a large establishment in the Holohan and McKinley building, where he carries a choice stock of stationery, books, toys, novelties, cigars and so forth and does a first-class business.

Jesse W. Tabor was born in Kentucky, on June 24, 1855, being the son of Henry and Anna (Meridith) Tabor, natives of Kentucky. The father's ancestors came from Virginia and he died in 1862. The mother of our subject came from a prominent and old southern family and two of her brothers fought with the Union army. Two brothers of our subject's father served in the Union army, although the family held slaves. Jesse W. was reared and educated in Kentucky and when eighteen went to Texas with his stepfather and mother and the balance of the family. The stepfather died soon after landing there and the mother the next year. Our subject took charge of the farm and held the family together until his sister married and then he went to high school for nearly two years, after which he opened a feed corral in Dallas and then mined in Colorado. In January, 1884, Mr. Tabor came to Eagle City, did some building, prospected and in June, 1885, went to work on the Tiger. In 1887 we find him in the Bell mine and the next year he was in a grocery in Burke. It was in 1889 that Mr. Tabor came to Wallace and opened his present business and snce that time he has been eminently successful and is favored with a fine patronage. Mr. Tabor has one brother and one sister, James and Lizzie Pinson.

On January 23, 1894, Mr. Tabor married Miss Catherine Robertson, whose parents are natives of and reside in Scotland. Mrs. Tabor has one sister, Maggie, in Spokane. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Tabor, George and Catherine. Mr. Tabor is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., Shoshone Lodge No. 25; with the Lewiston Consistory No. 1, of the Thirty-second degree Scottish rite; El Katif, Mystic Shrine, in Spokane; with the B. P. O. E., Coeur d'Alene Lodge No. 331; and with the K. of T. M., Silver Tent No. 3, at Wallace.

CHAPTER I.

THE PRESS OF NORTH IDAHO.

There has been no more potent factor in the development of northern Idaho than its press—its newspapers. With unswerving faith and tireless zeal they have labored for the settlement and advancement of this region, ever enthusiastic, never weary of advertising the region's wonderful resources and possibilities. Who can gainsay the fact that north Idaho owes to its press and the neighboring press in other states a debt of gratitude which it can never repay? The press has been the key that has unlocked the treasure vaults of northern Idaho and exposed their contents to the world, conveying the information to the people of other states and lands, drawing them hither. They read, they came, they have stayed, they have brought their friends. No other human agency could have achieved such a triumph as has the press in this civilizing work. At home the disheartened, the discouraged, the faltering, the unseeing have been filled with new life, with enthusiasm. The film has been plucked from their eyes and the glories and opportunities of the state revealed to them. By means of the press the individuals, the communities that make up the country, have been kept in close touch with one another with the natural result—encouragement, new ideas, new life, co-operation.

Like most other benefactions, however, the press is not appreciated by the masses. Because its powers have been abused by unscrupulous, selfish individuals and corporations, the press is condemned; because it strikes from the shoulder without fear it is branded as harsh and unfeeling; because it holds up to the world a mirror reflecting the wickedness of humanity it is abused as vile. Its faults, to be sure, are many, but they should not be allowed to blind us to its numerous virtues, its true worth.

To the Golden Age belongs the honor of pioneership in north Idaho journalism. In fact, it is believed that the Golden Age was the first newspaper published in the interior Northwest. Lewiston was its home, and August 2, 1862, the date of its birth. It lived in a golden age, indeed, for the Idaho mines were then in the zenith of their producing powers. A. S. Gould possesses the distinction of having been the founder and editor of this pioneer paper. He was attracted to the bustling city of Lewiston by the mining excitement which prevailed in 1862. Mr. Gould, we learn, remained with his paper only a year, being succeeded by John H. Scranton the following August. Then Frank Kenyon assumed charge. But the gold seekers evidently did not give the paper their support, for the little sheet finally suspended publication in January, 1865. Ultimately the plant was removed to Boise.

But the field did not long remain vacant, now that the path was broken, for during the summer of 1865 the Radiator was established at Lewiston by Thomas Favourite. It was a four-page paper, independent in politics. It was published until the spring of 1866, when a mining excitement in Montana induced Mr. Favourite to remove his plant to a new gold field. Then for several months, or until the Lewiston Journal was established on January 17, 1867, north Idaho was again without a paper. C. G. Kress, of Lewiston, say that Seth S. Slater and William Mahoney were the founders of this paper. The following fall Alonzo Leland & Son were its publishers and editors. In size the Journal was a five-column folio; its news matter was attractively written and set up in type and its editorials were refreshing and timely. Politically the Journal was a staunch advocate of Republicanism. Material and labor were evidently high-priced in those days, for the Journal sold for eight dollars a year, or fifty cents a copy, exclusive of postage. Like its predecessors, it was a weekly.

It is in connection with the Journal that we first meet Alonzo B. Leland, one of the ablest newspaper men that northern Idaho has ever had. No man has been more prominently identified with the upbuilding of northern Idaho, and none has been more faithful or loyal to his home. Born in Vermont in 1818 Mr. Leland was left an orphan at a very early age and spent his boyhood upon a typical New England farm. His early education was such as could be obtained in country villages in those days, but he labored earnestly, making the most of his advantages, and at the age of sixteen engaged in teaching. Later he entered the State Academy of New Hampshire, where he spent three years, after which he entered Brown University, graduating from that institution in the class of 1843. While in school he supported himself by working at the carpenter's trade. After leaving college he taught for several years in Massachusetts and Maryland. In 1849 he was induced to the far west by the discovery of gold in California, and October, 1850, found him in Oregon. His first work in Oregon was that of a civil engineer, and it fell to him to assist in surveying and platting the present city of Portland. Subsequently he entered the newspaper field in that city, founding the Portland Standard in the spring of 1854. In 1858, with an associate named Mallory, Mr. Leland established Portland's first daily, the Advertiser. Later he became interested in the Daily News and the Times, in which latter paper he gave not a little attention to the mining discoveries made in Idaho in 1860 and 1861. In June, 1861, he entered the crowd of gold seekers and became one of the pioneers of Florence. That fall he returned to Portland, but in 1862 again journeyed to Idaho, where he resided until his death in 1891. Individuality is stamped on all his newspaper work. His ability as a writer was much above the average; his penetration and foresight were keen; his grasp of every situation masterly. No greater compliment was ever paid to this pioneer editor than that from the lips of one of Lewiston's foremost citizens, who said: "Mr. Leland's only fault was that his thoughts were twenty years in advance of the times."

Mr. Leland was the acknowledged promoter and leader of the annexation movement and a tireless advocate of railroad building in north Idaho.

THE IDAHO SIGNAL.

On March 9, 1872, the Idaho Signal flung its banner to the breeze at Lewiston, succeeding the defunct Journal. Henry Leland, son of Alonzo, and Robert A. Rowley were the publishers and editors of the new paper, but the elder Leland occasionally contributed to it. The home of the paper was situated on Third street, between C and D streets, in a small frame building. The subscription price was fixed at five dollars a year, or twenty-five cents a copy. The Signal was a neatly printed, five-column folio, creditably edited. The editors disclaimed any previous experience in editorial work, saying that their knowledge of journalism had been gained solely in the composing room.

In saluting the public the Signal says: "We deem the field a good one in which to test ourself, and we enter upon it with a hearty good will toward all who may become our patrons, and with a firm resolve that, if our zeal and energy to meet their wants and reasonable expectations will make up for what we lack in experience, that zeal and energy shall be devoted to our enterprise. We shall be independent on all subjects. Thus we let our Signal be known."

The material used in printing the Signal was the same as that used in printing the Journal, although the enterprise was a distinct one. November 1, 1872, Mr. Rowley was compelled to retire from the business on account of ill health, his interest being transferred to John M. Dormer Esq., who assumed editorial charge. Mr. Dormer remained with the Signal only a year, when he, too, retired, leaving Henry Leland in full possession. The Signal was doomed to meet with failure as had its predecessors, and in September, 1874, the property passed into the hands of the Idaho Printing & Publishing Company. Immediately W. C. Whiston and J. M. Dormer leased the material and launched another craft, the Northerner, upon the stormy sea of journalism. Adversity soon overtook this little craft, also, for it was wrecked as soon as the "hard times" squall struck it. Then came the present pioneer of north Idaho newspapers.

THE LEWISTON TELLER.

Mr. Leland now enters the field in earnest, associating with him his son Henry, formerly one of the publishers of the Signal. The enterprise was engaged in with great earnestness, and year by year the Teller rose by sheer force of merit. By this time the country was beginning to settle rapidly, and the field was, therefore, a larger and more important one than it had previously been. The first issues of the Teller were of the same size as the Signal and the Northerner, but the subscription price was reduced to three dollars a year. There was no wasted space in the Teller, its advertising and news columns being full to overflowing. Success smiled upon the venture, and in April, 1878, the paper was enlarged to a six-column folio, all home print. Through the succeeding decade and a half the Teller led the van of progress in north Idaho. In 1882, the 1st of February, the old fashioned hand presses were replaced by a power press. In time Henry Leland withdrew from the paper and was succeeded by his brother, Charles F., who brought to his work much energy and ability. For awhile before his death Alonzo Leland was alone in the management of the paper. When, on March 1, 1890, declining health and advancing age forced him to retire, the property passed into the hands of Carl Foresman, superintendent of the Lewiston schools.

Mr. Foresman took up his labors with energy and ability, enlarged the Teller to an eight-page paper, increased the amount of reading matter and made other improvements, which bespoke the fact that he was a capable newspaper man as well as a teacher. The Teller kept its high standing among the journals of the state and increased its circulation in the home field. It also espoused the cause of Republicanism (it had been non-partisan theretofore), and has remained true to that party ever since. In 1894 Editor Foresman was signally recognized by the Republicans of Idaho, who nominated him for the office of state superintendent of public instruction. He was victorious in the campaign which followed, and for two years held the position with credit to himself and the state. In 1896 he returned to his newspaper work. By December, 1898, the business had grown so as to warrant a twice-a-week edition, instead of a weekly, as theretofore.

February 9th, 1889, is the date of a great disaster to the Teller, its old office at the corner of Main and Second streets being destroyed by fire. The flames broke through the roof of the one-story building about half past five o'clock in the afternoon, and before the alarm was fairly sounded, the enclosed space in the garret was afire. The fire apparatus was frozen, and the nozzle of the hose clogged with ice. Before these difficulties could be overcome the building was doomed. The office fixtures and stock were generally saved, though damaged somewhat by water. Willing hands carried all of the machinery except the big press and engine out into the street, so that the loss was not as heavy as it might have been. Fortunately a portion of the loss was covered by insurance.

Business was re-opened in the present office on C street, near the city hall. Here a large cylinder power press was erected for news purposes and jobbers, latest improved paper cutter, and other machinery and printing materials were installed, fitting out the office in a complete and modern manner. The facilities of the office for job printing are excelled by none in the city, and the assortment of type is one of the largest in northern Idaho. During the campaign of 1900 the Teller issued a daily edition, having absorbed the Daily Patriot. At present Mr. Foresman is engaged in making preparations for the establishment of another daily.

THE NEZ PERCES NEWS

Long since laid away in the journalistic graveyard of north Idaho, was many years the Teller's rival in the local field. It was established at Lewiston in September, 1880, by a local publishing company, and placed in charge of W. H. Brooks, an experienced newspaper man. Brooks became involved in trouble late in the fall and was forced to leave the country. Then, in January, 1881, Aaron F. Parker, a brother of Frank Parker, editor of the Boise Statesman, took charge of the paper and steered it through the many difficulties which beset it into a position of influence in the state. Mr. Parker, who is till living at Grangeville, very early in his career as editor of the News attained prominence by forceful expressions of his opinions and by his power in descriptive writing. Not less attentive than the Teller to the needs of the community nor less faithful to its public trust, the News rapidly won its way to a high standing at home as well as abroad. At first Mr. Parker was an annexationist, but only a few years elapsed before he took up the battle for a united territory, and made the News and later the Idaho County Free Press the spokesman of the anti-annexationists in northrn Idaho. Very strenuously did he apply himself to combating the arguments of the veteran Lewiston editor, Mr. Leland, on this subject.

In October, 1883, Mr. Parker's interest was attracted to the Coeur d'Alene mining country, and selling the News to a man named Abbott, he became one of the pioneers in the New Eldorado, where he engaged in the publication of the Coeur d'Alene Eagle. Mr. Abbott disposed of his interests in the News to Messrs. McConkey & Beeson, who published it until the return of Mr. Parker from Shoshone county in April, 1885, when he resumed charge. In June, 1886, Mr. Parker disposed of the property to Adams & Beeson, and himself went to the thriving town of Grangeville, where he established the Idaho County Free Press, becoming the pioneer journalist of Idaho county. Shortly after Messrs. Adams & Beeson took charge of the News they sold out to Judge Norman Buck and A. Quackenbush, who changed the name to the Stars and Bars. Judge Buck was a power in Idaho politics at that time, and with such a man at its head the Stars and Bars quite naturally took a leading position among its contemporaries, but it failed to give satisfactory financial returns, and in a short time suspended. In June, 1889, the plant was removed to Palouse City, Washington.

THE LEWISTON TRIBUNE

Is the only daily in north Idaho, and its permanent establishment as such was an important forward step in the journalism of this section of Idaho. In workmanship, style of make up, typographical appearance, and the literary ability displayed in both news items and editorials it takes high rank among the newspapers of the state. Its genial editor, Albert H. Alford, ex-regent of the state university, and ex-speaker of the lower legislative body of Idaho, bears the reputation of being among the foremost editorial writers in the northwest. He and his corps of assistants have made for the Tribune an excellent reputation at home and abroad.

The Weekly Tribune was established at Lewiston in September, 1892, by two of its present proprietors, Albert H. and Eugene L. Alford. The office was in a small, one-story building on Main street. Here, with limited facilities, these gentlemen began the issuance of their little paper. It was a most vigorous advocate of Democracy and is today, although more independent than formerly. During the campaign of 1896 the Tribune was published as a semi-weekly, and so well was it received by the public that the publishers determined to try a daily. This they did in May, 1898. They met with gratifying success in their enterprise, success sufficient to justify their making the daily a permanent thing. In 1900 Wallace B. Stainton, who had been connected with the Tribune since its establishment, became a full partner in the business. The same year the company secured the Associated Press morning franchise for Lewiston. Meanwhile the weekly publication has been continued. It is an eight-page paper; the daily a six-page. From the very first the Tribune has been an "all home print."

After occupying several different homes, always rented ones, the Tribune at last has its own building, erected by the company last year. It is a handsome brick structure occupying a prominent location on Fourth street in the down town district. In the completeness of its equipment the Tribune has a great advantage, its plant and office being superior to those of any paper in the state. It furnishes employment to not a few skilled workmen and writers. Mr. E. L. Alford, who kindly piloted the writer through the establishment, estimates its value at between $15,000 and $20,000. A. H. Alford is the editor of the Tribune, Eugene L. Alford the business manager, and Wallace B. Stainton city editor.

THE DAILY PATRIOT

Completes the list of the newspapers which have been published in Lewiston. This pioneer Lewiston daily was established September 1, 1897, by Frank M. Roberts and his son, Coral F. Roberts. It was published for about three years, then, as before stated, was absorbed by the Teller during the campaign of 1900. Mr. Roberts is now engaged in the newspaper business at Stites.

IDAHO COUNTY FREE PRESS.

To the Free Press belongs the honor of having blazed the pathway of journalism in Idaho county, and no inconsiderable amount of credit is due to this pioneer paper and its energetic and intrepid publisher and editor during the first fourteen years of its existence for the important part they have taken in the upbuilding of Idaho county. The Free Press has labored faithfully and well for the people of the region it represents, and Mr. Parker has wielded a tireless and skillful pen in his efforts to make the Free Press a representative newspaper in every sense of the word. For many years after its birth, June 18, 1886, the journalistic field in this sparsely settled and but poorly developed county was indeed a barren one, but the country presented vast opportunities, a tremendous latent power, which the pioneer paper has lived to see only partly developed, and yet of astonishing strength. It was founded as an independent journal, and has always retained its freedom of thought on matters affecting the county at large. For several years it was independent in politics; it then came forth as a supporter of the Democratic party, and has since been the leading county paper of that faith.

The advent of a newspaper in Idaho county was hailed with great joy by the inhabitants of that section of north Idaho. The people of Grangeville made the printing of the first number a gala occasion, which will live long in the memory of those who participated. The brass band honored the publisher with a concert; flags were hoisted all over the town, and the first paper was sold at auction to J. S. Fockler, of Salmon river, for $50.

During the first three years of its life, the Free Press was a four-page, six-column paper. In 1889, however, the columns were lengthened and another added, and in this size it now appears. For a long time the two inside pages were "patent," but years ago the publisher gladly made the change to home print.

The newspaper met its first serious reverse on Christmas Eve, 1897, when the building it occupied was burned to the ground. Of the contents, nothing except the files, ledgers, subscription and account books, and the editorial desk, were saved from the flames. This loss was a serious one, but Mr. Parker had faith in the enterprise, and immediately set about making for his paper a better home than it had ever had before, with the result that at present it occupies a sightly, convenient and commodious building on Hall street, just opposite the old Grange hall. The first home of the Free Press was in the Harris building on Main street, about where the present Pfeufer block now stands. Then it was removed to the building at the corner of Hall and Main streets, which was destroyed by fire.

The Buffalo Hump boom in 1899 called forth the Daily Press, the first number of which was printed January 9, 1899. H. E. Waggoner acted as city editor. This daily publication, a small half sheet, was regularly published until December 2d following. During its brief career the daily was eagerly read, as Mr. Parker maintained the same high standard in this paper as he did in the weekly. During March, 1899, a fine, new cylinder news press, operated by water power, was installed.

On September 28, 1900, after nearly twenty years of continuous service, dating from early in 1881, when he took charge of the Nez Perces News, Mr. Parker retired from the field of active newspaper work, and is at present devoting himself to his real estate, mining and other business interests in the county where he has resided for the past eighteen years. He has been a tireless and successful worker in his chosen profession, and has left an indelible mark, not alone on the journalism of north Idaho, but also on its history.

Elmer McBroom, formerly the business manager of the Roseburg, Oregon, Review, succeeded Mr. Parker as editor and publisher of the Free Press, and the product of his work is creditable to his abilities as a writer. The Free Press is prosperous and thriving. It is the official county journal, which adds to its prestige. The plant is well equipped with a cylinder news press, jobbers, paper cutter, news and job type, etc.

THE CAMAS PRAIRIE CHRONICLE,

Formerly the Cottonwood Report, is the second oldest existing newspaper in Idaho county, it having been preceded only by the Free Press and a short lived paper at Denver. The Report made its bow to the public January 27, 1893, the Camas Prairie Publishing Company being the publishers, and Tannatt & Hogan business managers. It was published weekly on an army press, and was a four-page, seven-column paper, all home print. Elmer Waldrip served the paper as editor until the plant was disposed of July 15, 1893, to J. S. Rhoads and T. W. Turner, when Philip W. Pearson became the local editor. With the issue of May 11, 1894, the Report passed under the editorial management of L. J. Hornaday, and for the first time discarded its independence in politics. Mr. Taylor was succeeded by J. M. Wolbert in September, 1895, who retained charge only a few months. Then the publication was purchased by Rustemeyer & Wimer, they assuming the editorial management at the same time. During their ownership the Report became the Camas Prairie Chronicle. Last January Mr. Rustemeyer retired from the business, leaving Mr. Wimer the sole proprietor. The plant is a small one, consisting of an army news press, an Excelsior jobber, type, etc. The paer is now twenty-four columns in size, with "patent" inside. Devoted to the best interests of Cottonwood and Idaho county in particular, newsy and neatly printed, the Chronicle commands an excellent patronage from both advertisers and subscribers.

THE GRANGEVILLE STANDARD.

The Standard, the third oldest newspaer in Idaho county, was established at Grangeville, March 25, 1899, A. J. MacDonald, editor and manager. Its platform then is its platform now: "Republicanism, truthfulness, reliability on mining subjects, the advancement of the interests of Grangeville and Idaho county, and the advancement of the morals of the community." The management of the paper has undergone many changes. On May 10, 1899, the Standard Printing Company, Charles F. Lake, editor and manager, assisted by John Flittie, succeeded A. J. MacDonald. Editor Lake was soon succeeded by George W. Goode, and he in turn by Frank M. Roberts, the latter taking charge April 27, 1901. In August, 1901, William Leach, formerly with the Clarkston, Washington, Chronicle, assumed the management of the Standard, W. W. Goode being proprietor at that time. The present owners, C. J. Lisle and H. L. Brown, purchased the property in September, 1901, taking charge September 13th. Both are experienced men, formerly of Butte, Montana. Mr. Lisle was employed on the editorial staff of the Daily Inter-Mountain.

Although the office was fairly well equipped at the beginning, Brown & Lisle have made so many changes and improvements that the plant is now practically new. No printing house in north Idaho carries a better line of type, and the Standard is without doubt as neatly and tastily printed a newspaper as there is in the state. Nor are its news and editoiral columns less worthy of praise, for they reflect in an interesting and breezy style the life around and in Grangeville. The job office of the Standard is very complete and modern, a new Chandler & Price jobber being among the recent acquisitions. The newspaper is printed on a Campbell cylinder, operated by water power. This press, however, is to be removed soon and a new one of greater capacity installed in the new home that the propiretors contemplate for their establishment. The Standard at present is an eight-page, five-column paper, all home print. It is not too much to say of the Standard that it is representative of the best type of the American country newspaper.

THE GRANGEVILLE NEWS

Is Grangeville's youngest newspaper, having been established April 4, 1902, by H. L. Herzinger, a veteran journalist of the Northwest. All who come in contact with Mr. Herzinger note his strong, energetic and generous character, and the News itself is the best measure of his journalistic powers. Although still very young and forced to compete with two other strong weeklies, the News is steadily gaining strength. The plant occupies a commodious office on Hall street, and is equipped with a Washington hand press, a jobber, paper cutter, type and other necessities of the newspaper and job office. The News is a four-page, seven-column paper, issued weekly. In politics it is Democratic.

THE IDAHO MOUNTAINEER

is published at Kooskia, on the Clearwater Short Line, and is a neatly printed, newsy little weekly, mirroring the life around its home. The Mountaineer was established four years ago, at the time that Kooskia was being built. H. E. O'Donnell is the proprietor and editor of this journal.

THE IDAHO COUNTY PATRIOT

Was first known as the Register, under which name it was established at Stites, February 22, 1901, by W. N. Robinson. Frank M. Roberts, an experienced newspaper man, formerly the publisher of the Daily Patriot at Lewiston, purchased the Register in August, 1902, and changed the name to the Patriot, its present title. Mr. Roberts is a strong writer and the Patriot is a popular little paper. Like the Mountaineer, the Patriot is printed in folio size.

THE MORTALITY LIST.

The Idaho Gold Miner was the second paper published in Grangeville. This short lived paper was founded by T. E. Edmundson and was published during 1894.

On December 4, 1895, the Camas Prairie Cayuse, a breezy little sheet, was established at Grangeville by Goodell & Ruggles. Its battles with the waves of adversity was short, and it was soon submerged, never to rise again.

Another of Grangeville's early papers was the Republican, published in the spring of 1896, by Winfield Harper. The paper was founded as a political organ. Col. W. D. Robbins was interested in this enterprise.

The Cottonwood Times made its appearance at that prairie town during the first week in December, 1898. Messrs. Turner & Short were the publishers. During its life it was a creditable paper.

Franklin P. Turner commenced the publication of the Alta Idaho Area at Stuart, now Kooskia, in January, 1898. The railroad boom passed away within a few months, however, and with it came the demise of the Area.

COEUR D'ALENE NUGGET.

The Coeur d'Alene Nugget was the first newspaper to be published in Shoshone county. This pioneer journal was called into existence by the settlement of the Coeur d'Alenes and made its bow to the public at the historic town of Eagle City, March 15, 1884. At that time thousands of miners thronged the hills and canyons of the North Fork country, and it was not strange that the press made its appearance so soon after the opening of the region, for this has been an almost universal experience in American history, since the Civil war at least. C. F. McGlashan and W. F. Edwards were the publishers of the Nugget. In size the paper was a five-column, four-page folio, and the old copy which fell into our hands was unusually well printed and edited. After an irregular life of several weeks the Nugget was absorbed by the

COEUR D'ALENE WEEKLY EAGLE.

The second oldest paper in the camp and county. The Eagle was owned and edited by Aaron F. Parker and George W. DeSucca, and during its four months' existence was an able and energetic exponent of the great mining camp from which it derived its support. Mr. Parker tells us that the first number was published April 12, 1884, in a tent occupied jointly by the Eagle and the postoffice. For this rude home the lessees paid $75 a month. The postoffice remained in the tent until the arrival of Postal Inspector General Curry, who ordered Postmaster Parker to move the postoffice into a wooden building. This move was necessary because the moisture during wet weather caused the stamps to stick together. The Eagle was printed on four pages of six columns each and a perusal of the files shows that Messrs. Parker and DeSucca did creditable work upon their journal. On June 12th Mr. Parker retired from the business, leaving his former partner in full charge. Subsequently Mr. Parker returned to the paper. In August the last number appeared, the re-action of the boom proving too great for the paper to withstand.

COEUR D'ALENE PIONEER.

The next newspaper to appear in the Coeur d'Alenes was the Coeur d'Alene Pioneer, published first at Eagle City and later at Murray by the Pioneer Publishing Company, of which Henry Bernard was the manager. No. 2 of this paper came into our hands in the course of our researches, and afforded much interesting material of a historical nature. It bore the date of April 28, 1884, and was printed at Eagle City. It was a four-page, six column sheet. In those days the subscriber had to pay dearly for his paper, all of the early Coeur d'Alene papers selling for twenty-five cents a copy or six dollars a year. The Pioneer was a weekly. Not very long after the first number appeared the editor and manager became involved in a quarrel with one of his employees and killed him. The murder was a most dastardly one, and Bernard was threatened with a popular trial and execution. The Pioneer suspended publication soon after the affair took place.

COEUR D'ALENE SUN.

Most prominent and important among the pioneer newspapers of the Coeur d'Alenes is the paper of which we now write. For nearly twenty years the Sun has regularly appeared, some times daily, at others tri-weekly, but generally weekly, and a careful, exhaustive perusal of its files from beginning to end enables us to judge its merits and few papers there are which have more accurately and full portrayed pioneer conditions and recorded the growth and progress of a great mining camp. First, last and always the Sun has been an ardent believer in the greatness of the mineral section which is its home; its columns have been freely given to mining discussions, discoveries and progress, while at the same time the Sun has gained for itself an enviable reputation for accuracy in these matters. The Sun has always been a valiant champion of clean, honest government, and its voice has been a strong one in county affairs. As a disseminator of news it early took a leading position in north Idaho, and as a careful, strong critic of territorial and state affairs it has excelled.

The founder, publisher and editor of the Sun, Adam Aulbach, began his labors in newspaper work forty years ago, and long before he came to the Coeur d'Alenes he had gained an experience and a reputation which easily gave him a leading position among the newspaper workers of Idaho when in the winter of 1883-84 he came to this young territory to take up his labors. He arrived upon the scene early in the winter and decided the field was a good one for a newspaper. So he ordered a complete outfit of sufficient size to print a small paper and decided to locate temporarily at Belknap, Montana. Accordingly on May 13, 1884, the Belknap Sun, printed on a half Medium Gordon, made its bow to the world. The first issue contained fifteen columns of solid reading matter. At first the Sun was published tri-weekly. Of course it gave its principal attention to the Coeur d'Alene mines. As time passed Mr. Aulbach became more and more convinced that the camp was a substantial one, and finally he decided that the time had arrived when it could support a properly conducted newspaper and prepared to remove the Sun plant to Murrayville. This was accomplished at great expense, a large pack train being required to transport the material over the uncut and snow-drifted mountain trails across the Bitter Roots. On Tuesday, July 8, 1884, the Idaho Sun appeared for the first time and at once drew to its support a host of friends. The publisher promised the Coeur d'Aleners a good paper and the files show that this promise was very faithfully kept. The first of the succeeding year another change was made in the name, this time Coeur d'Alene being substituted for the word Idaho, and the Coeur d'Alene Sun it has since remained. The field proved to be an excellent one, and the Sun took every advantage of the opportunity presented and prospered exceedingly.

One of the results of this prosperity was that on January 1, 1886, Mr. Aulbach commenced the publication of a daily instead of a tri-weekly edition, which was continued until June 2, 1888. During this period of nearly two and one-half years the news service of the Sun was its strongest feature, and in all probability there have been few mining camps which have enjoyed a better service in their infancy. Thence on the placer camp began to decline, as a result of which the Sun experienced corresponding hard times. The South Fork country succeeded to the prosperity which had once belonged to the people of the North Fork, and many towns sprang up in that section during the latter part of the 'eighties and the early 'nineties. To this new field Mr. Aulbach was temporarily drawn, and in July, 1890, he turned the Sun over to a syndicate of Murray business men to conduct while he went to Wallace. Charles Swaine became the Sun's editor and business manager, and remained in this capacity until January 1, 1891, when the property was leased to Charles A. Ervin, who took personal charge of the paper. Mr. Ervin conducted the paper until April 28th of the following year, when he gave up his lease. A week later the Sun was indefinitely suspended, Mr. Aulbach assigning as a reason that he himself was busy with the Wallace Press and that he could find no one to either lease the Sun or conduct it for him.

For six months the Sun remained lifeless. Then Mr. Aulbach removed to his old home, Murray, and again took the helm of his first love, applying himself with renewed vigor to the work. Since then the pathway of the Sun has been one of alternating smoothness and roughness. At times the shadows have fallen with discouraging density across the path, but each time the Sun has pierced the darkness with unwavering faith, and still gives forth its messages of encouragement and confidence, despite the fact that the section referred to is passing through the most trying time experienced since its settlement.

Typographically the Sun has always maintained a high standard. The equipment is all that could be desired in a country newspaper office, the machinery being operated by water power installed in 1886. Published first in a rough log cabin, it soon outgrew these rude quarters, and the office was removed to the old Murray bank building, standing on the corner of Second and Main streets, where its present home is. The building is a fine frame structure, one of the best in the town. In politics the Sun has been strongly independent, always supporting the men whom it has thought best fitted for office.

THE EAGLE STAR.

This was a short-lived paper, published at Eagle City in the fall of 1885 by S. E. Dillard. The first copy appeared on November 21st. While it lived the Star was an excellent paper, but the camp was unable to maintain it.

WALLACE FREE PRESS.

On July 2, 1887, Alfred J. and John L. Dunn, brothers, who came originally from Missouri, commenced the publication of the Wallace Free Press in a little frame building on the site of the present O. K. block. Their plant was of fair size, including a Washington hand press, and the brothers threw their whole energy and soul into the work with the result that the Free Press was not long in gaining for itself a more excellent reputation, both at home and abroad. It was not our privilege to look over the files of this pioneer newspaper, owing to the fact that they had been mislaid, but from notices which appeared in contemporary journals and from the lips of those who read the Free Press we have no hesitation in saying that it was a first class journal in every way.

Dunn Brothers continued the publication of the Free Press until the spring of 1889, when they sold the property to Edward Tibbals and his brother Frank. They changed the name of the paper to the Wallace Press. Subsequently the business came into the hands of Adam Aulbach, of the Murray Sun, under whom the Press enjoyed great prosperity. Among other improvements made was the installation of the plant in a new, two-story brick building on Bank street, between Fifth and Sixth streets, where it still remains. The upper story was occupied as a Masonic hall; the lower story, jointly by the Press and Easton's jewelry store. Mr. Aulbach was the proprietor of the Sun until July, 1892, when it was sold to R. E. Brown, better known locally as "Barbarian" Brown, an amateur journalist of considerable ability. Under his ownership the name of the paper was again changed, this time to the Coeur d'Alene American. H. W. Ross succeeded Brown, entering upon his management just as the hard times of 1893 reached the Coeur d'Alenes. The journal failed to weather the storm, and late in the year sank beneath the waves of adversity.

The Fourth of July, 1894, marked the reappearance of the Wallace Press on the journalistic stage of north Idaho, under the ownership of Adam Aulbach. Patrick Connor acting as manager. A little later Connor became lessee, and on October 17th George S. Warren became a joint lessee. At this time the Press was printed as an eight-page half-sheet, all home print. Formerly the Press had been printed in quarto. A change had also been made in the paper's politics. Under the proprietorship of Dunn Brothers the Free Press was strongly Republican; then it became Democratic, then independent in politics; now it appears as a Populistic journal.

George Garbutt succeeded Warren and Connor on March 25, 1896. Just before election day he was called to his Maker. Mr. Warren, the former proprietor, again took charge of the paper and remained at its head until January 1, 1903, when the present proprietor, E. B. Reitzel, acquired possession of the business. Mr. Reitzel is an experienced newspaper man, and under his ownership and editorship the Press is one of the leading papers of north Idaho. Since the campaign of 1896, when the paper supported the Silver party, the Press has been a stalwart Republican journal, and is today the leading Republican newspaper of the county. The Press plant is quite complete, including a country Campbell news press, jobbers, paper cutters, a large and modern assortment of type, etc. The business occupies the entire lower floor of the building, the editorial office being situated in the front, and the composing and press room in the rear of the building. Irving Wilson is associate editor of the Press. Typographically and editorially the Press is a credit to those who are connected with it, and to the metropolis and county whence it derives its support.

COEUR D'ALENE MINER.

This paper was the second journal established in Wallace, and is now numbered among those unsuccessful ventures in journalism of which there are plenty in every section of great wealth and opportunities. It was established June 6, 1890, at Wallace by Dunn Brothers, formerly proprietors of the Free Press. In size it was a five column quarto. The printing was all done at home, a fine tribute to the energy of the publishers and the loyalty of the people to home enterprise. For six years the Miner was published by the Dunn Brothers; then Charles E. Angel took the property. However, the life of the Miner was destined to be short, for the paper suspended publication after the election of 1896. Then for four years the plant was idle. Finally in 1900 E. B. Reitzel and Harry F. Ingalls resurrected the Miner, and for a few months published it, after which the plant was consolidated with that of the Press. At present Dunn Brothers own a half interest in the Press plant, although the Press itself belongs solely to Mr. Reitzel. Throughout its existence the Miner was a strong Republican paper. During the great Wallace fire on July 27, 1890, the Miner office, building and contents, was completely burned, necessitating the purchase of a new plant and the erection of another building. The building was erected on the corner of Bank and Fifth streets, and is now used as the domicile of the city postoffice.

WALLACE DEMOCRAT.

This journal was established by a stock company of Shoshone county Democrats in the fall of 1892, with M. J. Donnelly as manager and editor. The paper was printed in a six-column folio form. After being published for a little more than a year the paper was discontinued, and the plant sold to the Coeur d'Alene Miners' Union and Knights of Labor, who founded the

IDAHO STATE TRIBUNE

On September 20, 1894. For some time organized labor in this section had felt as if it needed an organ through which to reach the general public, and the result of this feeling was that the members of the union and the knights of District Assembly No. 13 secured as editor and manager S. Van der Muelen, past master workman of the Knights of Labor in Iowa, and purchased the old Democrat plant. As the official organ of organized labor in Shoshone county, the Tribune was at once accorded a foremost place among labor journals in the west. Mr. Van der Muelen remained with the Tribune only six months, when he was succeeded by R. E. Seysler, who continued to steer the editorial helm for two years. Upon his retirement B. R. Creedon took charge and guided the Tribune's destinies for a year; then came Clarence Smith, under whose management $3,000 was expended for a new plant, which added greatly to the facilities of the office and enabled the Tribune to appear in as neat a dress as any paper in the state. A Cottrell news press, a large paper cutter, jobbers, type, stones, etc., were among the additions to the old plant, rendering it practically a new one. On June 1, 1898, the Tribune was accorded the distinguished honor of being chosen as the official organ of the Western Federation of Miners, which position it retained for a year. On October 1, 1898, the Tribune was also greatly honored by having chosen as its editor and manager James R. Sovereign, well known throughout the United States for his work in the interest of the Knights of Labor, and labor organizations generally. However, Mr. Sovereign remained in Wallace only a year, and was succeeded by W. H. Stewart. A year and a half later, in the spring of 1900, Mr. Sovereign returned to the Tribune, and has since been its editor. At present the Coeur d'Alene Unions own the property. In the beginning the Tribune supported the Populist party, but subsequently gave its allegiance to Bryan and the Democratic party. The plant and offices are comfortably housed in a commodious frame building situated on East Bank street. Like its contemporary in the Wallace field, the Tribune appears weekly and is printed in quarto form. The workmanship on the paper is first-class, as might be expected in the case of a paper conducted as the Tribune is.

WALLACE ADVANCE.

In the spring of 1900 Charles H. Stevens commenced the publication of a weekly paper bearing the above name, using the old Miner plant. Its life was very short—not more than a few months.

COEUR D'ALENE MINING RECORD.

The Record is the only strictly class paper in the Coeur d'Alenes, its object being, as its name implies, to pay especial attention to the mining industry. For that matter, however, there is little else except mining for any of the newspapers in this county to give their attention to. The Record is also an illustrated paper, and its beautiful engravings, wide columns and calendered paper lend to it more the air of a magazine than that of a newspaper. It appears semi-monthly, and is printed at the Idaho State Tribune's office. H.

A. Moore, the publisher and editor, is well fitted for the work he has undertaken—that of advertising the wonderful Coeur d'Alene mines to the world—and his writings are regarded as semi-official by conservative mining men. The Record is deserving of much commendation for its excellent work.

The Record first appeared in 1901 as the Coeur d'Alene Mining Journal, and for the first year was controlled by a stock company. Mr. Moore took the paper last year and changed the name to the Record.

BURKE INDEPENDENT.

In 1888, when Burke was in the heydey of its boom period, M. D. Scott brought to the town the old newspaper plant at Eagle City and began the publication of a small sheet known as the Burke Independent. The initial number appeared Thursday, July 26th, and was a meritorious publication. The editor came to the Coeur d'Alenes from the Black Hills. The following December Mr. Scott retired from the business, which forthwith passed into the hands of Capehart & Brite. The latter changed the paper's name to the Burke Galena. Shortly after the Galena came into existence it succumbed.

THE SILVER STAR,

Published at Burke and Gem, was the next journal to aspire to fame in the Canyon creek district, but it, too, lived only a short time. H. L. Hughes was the Star's editor and C. D. Vaughn its business manager.

THE KINGSTON INDEPENDENT.

Is the name of another unsuccessful journalistic venture in the Coeur d'Alenes. As its name indicates this newspaper was published at Kingston. The Independent was established in 1897. In size it was only eight by six inches, but the quality of its reading matter was good. Clarence Smith served the paper as editor.

OROFINO COURIER.

The pioneer newspaper of southern Shoshone county is the Orofino Courier, published at Orofino by Horace E. and James R. Greer. The Courier is a newsy, neatly printed, five-column paper, four pages of which are home print, and a like number of pages "patent." All of the local news is fully written up in an interesting style and the newspaper's enterprising editors are ever keenly alive to the interests of the community and state in which they live. The first number of this paper was given to the public May 19, 1899, and consisted of one sheet struck off on an army press, which, together with a few handsful of type and a small amount of other printing necessities, were brought to Orofino in a buggy. The miniature plant was installed in a corner of the Clearwater Improvement Company's warehouse near the river's bank, and there the plant remained until its proprietors were able to construct a suitable home for it. Into this building the plant was finally removed and is today being conducted. As rapidly as possible the owners added to their equipment, increased the size of the paper, and made various other changes and improvements until the Courier has reached its present standard. A fine Washington hand press is in use, an improved Challenge paper cutter, a modern Chandler & Price jobber, ten by fourteen inches in size, and a large assortment of excellent type. The office stands on Main street and here in its comfortable home the editors and proprietors are ever ready to extend a cordial hand to all visitors and bid them welcome to the town. In politics the Courier is and always has been Republican.

OROFINO OPTIMIST.

The Optimist is also published at Orofino, and is a sprightly journal, smaller in size than the Courier, but containing more pages and fully as much news matter. Its publishers are the Optimist Publishing Company, composed of several of the leading business men of the community, and under the management and editorship of Charles Hofstetter the paper is deservedly popular. The Optimist was established only a few months ago, the first number appearing December 5, 1902. The equipment is both modern and complete for a country office, comprising presses, paper cutter and a fine assortment of new type.

PIERCE CITY MINER.

As its name implies the Pierce City Miner, published at Pierce City, is especially devoted to the mining interests of this famous camp, although the Miner really is interested in the whole community, and does not hesitate to publish all the news that can be gathered relative to that section of the county. The journal is published in half-sheet size, eight pages, four of which are printed at home, and it is only just to say that the paper faithfully represents the section to which it is indebted for support. Greer Brothers, of Orofino, established the paper March 2, 1902, and until April 1st of this year they owned the property. On that date it passed into the hands of the following representative Pierce City business men: President, M. A. Ellis; secretary and treasurer, Samson Snyder; directors, L. F. Culver and Col. W. J. Todd. David M. Nulty, an experienced newspaper man, originally from Canada, who had been managing the paper since November 14, 1902, was retained in the capacity of editor and manager by the new company, and in his hands the Miner will continue to keep the outside world posted regarding the development of the Pierce City district. The office is equipped with a jobbing outfit in addition to a country newspaper plant.

THE WARDNER NEWS

Represents the metropolis on Milo creek in the Coeur d'Alen journalistic field. The News is a five-column folio, neatly printed, newsy and well edited. In politics it is Republican. Aaron Frost is the present publisher. The News plant is quite complete and modern, including all the requisites of a first-class country newspaper and job office, and occupies a commodious home on Main street in the heart of the business center. The News is now in its seventeenth volume, having been established June 11, 1886, by the Coeur d'Alenes' pioneer newspaper man, Adam Aulbach. The paper was published under his management and proprietorship for some time during the early years of its existence, but since then its career has been checkered. It was started as a weekly and is still published as such. J. S. Langrishe, the veteran comedian and newspaper man of the northwest, was among the early editors of the News. Of him it has been said that he so conducted his paper that not a harsh word was ever found in its columns, while at the same time his work made a lasting impression upon the people of this section. He died November 30, 1895, at the age of seventy-four, and was buried the following Monday. It is said that his funeral was the largest ever held in Wardner. In respect for his memory a majority of the business houses were closed during the funeral hours. R. E. Brown was also among the former editors and publishers of the News, having acquired the property in January, 1892.

COEUR D'ALENE BARBARIAN.

This journal, which attained to considerable local fame in its life, was established as a monthly during the closing days of the year 1891, by R. E. Brown, who, because of his connection with the paper, was at once given the title, "Barbarian Brown." At first the paper was published at Wallace; then an edition was published simultaneously at Wardner and in this form the Barbarian was published for a long period. Subsequently a semi-weekly was issued. It passed into memory a decade ago.

THE WARDNER CITIZEN

Was another of Wardner's unsuccessful journalistic enterprises, which was established by C. R. Burrus during the middle 'nineties. The Citizen was independent in politics and is spoken of as a well edited and creditable paper.

COEUR D'ALENE RECORD.

The Record was established at Murray in 1886 by G. N. Culver and son, Otis. A six-column folio, all home print, was published, and is said to have been a paper creditable both to the publishers and the camp. At first the Record was a tri-weekly, but later it became a weekly. In politics it was Republican. Immediately after the great Spokane fire, the paper was discontinued and the plant shipped to Spokane.

MULLAN TRIBUNE.

The Tribune was established in 1889 by H. C. Piggott. Subsequently it was sold to Adam Aulbach, Piggott going to Osborne, where he published the Coeur d'Alene Statesman. Then the Tribune passed into the hands of F. K. Jerome. During the middle 'nineties it was discontinued, but later revived under the name of the Mirror. At the time of the labor troubles in 1899 the Mirror, under the management of W. H. Stewart, was confiscated by the government because of its utterances. A portion of the material was destroyed, we are informed. The following October Larson & Greenough revived the Journal, and under their ownership it was continuously published until July, 1903, when it was again suspended. The Mirror was Republican in politics.

JOURNALISM IN KOOTENAI COUNTY.

What the social, political and financial condition of Kootenai county might be today had no newspapers been printed within its boundaries from the date of its formation to the present time, it is impossible to tell. It is not possible to estimate the weight of their influence in the development won of the past nor in that of the future. That this influence has been essential to the attainment of present conditions, all must admit, and there are certainly none of any degree of intelligence who would expect uninterrupted progress without it. An honest newspaper is a power for good, a guide for the student of local and general affairs, and in many ways a conservation of the best interests of its constituents. The power of a newspaper lies not so much in its purely intellectual power of expression as it does in the public confidence that its opinions are honest opinions, unbiased by partisanship or personal friendship. The public has no use for the opinions of an editor if it once discovers that he does not discuss public questions honestly and disinterestedly from the single point of view of public welfare. An editorial opinon is worthless to the public unless there is a man of good sense and information behind it, who is as courageous and impartial as a just judge in the trial of cases in the courts.

A newspaper is at once a private business and a public trust. A mixture of motives, all entirely honorable, may govern and dictate the conduct of newspapers; but a newspaper cannot in the long run hold the confidence of its patrons if it fails to discuss public questions with honesty and disinterestedness. The public weal must be its point of view if it expects public confidence and respect. The public does not expect that its editor will always be acute in mind and able in policy, but it has a right to expect that he will be upright in purpose and incorrupt in action, and the influential editor seldom fails his people. Merciless personalities in politics are sometimes manifested through the press, just as they are elsewhere in the organized expression of human thought, feeling and business, but no newspaper ever rose to influence and long maintained it whose editor made his private piques, his unquenched personal animosities, his unwreaked personal revenge and unsatisfied private interests the polestar of his working career. The value of a newspaper to a people and to a community depends largely also upon its devotion to local interests. If the editor's energies are expended exclusively for personal financial success or political preferment, regardless of his obligations, not alone as a moulder of sentiment, but as a medium through which knowledge of local affairs and conditions is conveyed to the public, he ceases to be a useful member of society and the usefulness of his paper is lessened to a very great degree.

Kootenai county has been fortunate in that the men who have come from various parts of the country and assumed editorial charge of its nwspapers, have come with a view to becoming permanent residents. They are men of intelligence, who have made homes in the various communities, have become imbued with pride in local and general progress, have become identified with public works and many of them have become worthy representatives of the people in places of honor and trust. The first newspaper men to visit Kootenai were, like many others, in search of fortune in whatever form and in whatever place they might be able to find it. Like the prospector they blazed the trail, exposed the precious mineral, sold out and moved on. None of the papers published at the time of the formation of the county are now in existence, and there is no paper now published in the county that had an existence prior to 1890.

The first paper published in Kootenai county was the Lake Side Leader, its first issue appearing in January, 1882. It was issued at Fort Coeur d'Alene, and existed but a few months during the summer of that year. We have not been able to ascertain the name of its editor. In the fall of the same year Mark W. Musgrove commenced the publication of the Kootenai Courier at Rathdrum (then called Westwood). Mr. Musgrove was a lawyer of considerable ability, who was connected prominently with the important cases tried in the early courts, and who was prominent in the early politics of the country, serving in various official capacities. For a number of years the Courier was the only paper in the county. It suspended publication in 1892 and its editor left the county and state. Another of the early papers was the Coeur d'Alene Times, established in 1889 by C. A. Curtin and Harry Bronson. In 1892 it was purchased by Earnest Duersenler, who took the plant to Rathdrum, where he continued its publication as the Rathdrum Times, until the summer of 1893, when he suspended and sold press and material to a Mr. Cornell. Mr. Cornell again changed the name of the paper to the Rathdrum Register. Under this name it ran but two or three weeks, when it was closed out and ceased to exist. The Post Falls Post was established in 1890 by A. J. McDonald. In June, 1893, Mr. McDonald removed with his paper to Rathdrum, where he issued it as the Rathdrum Post until April, 1895; at this date it suspended. The Hope Examiner was another of the pioneer papers that ran a short time during the late eighties. The Hope Prospector was established in 1890 and quit publication in 1894. John F. Yost, now of Sandpoint, was one of its several editors. At Sandpoint the pioneer paper, now defunct, was the Journal, edited by J. R. Law. L. H. Faust, now a state senator in Montana, also published a paper a short time at Sandpoint, which he called the Republican. Not one of these papers is now in existence and their files were not preserved.

The Silver Blade was established at Rathdrum June 1, 1895, by John F. Yost, as a Silver Republican paper. February 10, 1897, it was purchased by J. C. Brady and continued as an organ of the Silver party. Mr. Brady continued its editor until his death in July, 1901, when it was published for a time by the Silver Blade Publishing Company. In August, 1901, W. A. Logue became its editor and manager and so continued until April, 1902, when he was succeeded by W. M. Miller. Mr. Miller remained in charge until the plant was purchased, July 11, 1902, by Charles W. and J. R. Culp. Charles W. Culp is a man of experience in newspaper work, having for a number of years been connected with various papers in Montana, among them the papers of Helena, the "Montanian," and the "Montanian" of Libby. J. R. Culp fitted himself by study and correspondence for the work he has chosen. The brothers are both natives of Montana. In May of the present year they changed the name of their paper from the Silver Blade to the Tribune. Since coming to Rathdrum they have familiarized themselves with political, commercial and social conditions, and have made many friends by intelligent and conscientious devotion to the locality in which they have made their home and to the best interests of Kootenai county. The Tribune is Republican in politics and fair and fearless on all questions of public interest.

The Panhandle News was launched into the newspaper prorld August 7, 1902, at Rathdrum. Its editor and proprietor is W. A. Logue, formerly editor and manager of the Silver Blade. The News is an exponent of Democratic principles, and has already built up a large patronage, which includes not only its political friends, but some of its political enemies. Mr. Logue is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, but spent his youth and early manhood in the Colorado mining regions. For a number of years he conducted the Boulder (Colorado) News and was for a time connected with the Denver Tribune. Before coming to Kootenai county he was connected with the papers of Baker City and Canyon City, Oregon. Mr. Logue is an entertaining writer, and in his editorial columns discusses the leading questions of the day in an interesting manner. He takes special interest in county and state politics, and is bringing his paper to the front ranks of Kootenai county's weeklies.

The Coeur d'Alene Press is one of the oldest papers now published in the county, having been established by its present owner and editor, Joseph T. Scott, in 1892. From the beginning it has been a leading paper in all matters pertaining to county and state affairs. It was started as a Republican paper and so remained until the great campaign of 1896, when its editor espoused the cause of Democracy. It has since that time been the recognized organ of Democracy in Kootenai county. Mr. Scott is a man of wide experience in the newspaper field, and of recognized ability in any intellectual field of endeavor. He is a native of Ohio, in which state he was educated. His first editorial work was done on the Glendive (Montana) Times, with which he was connected during the year 1882. For seven years, beginning in 1883, he edited and published the Dickenson (Montana) Press. During these years he was an active participant in Montana territorial politics, and assisted in the organization of the state. In 1900 he was elected a representative of Kootenai county in the state legislature. He has been closely identified with all efforts to build up the beautiful city of Coeur d'Alene, and the magnificent county of Kootenai, and his labors have been fruitful of material results. He has recently added to his plant a Babcock cylinder press, which is operated by steam power, new type, perforating machine, and job press, made necessary by gradually increasing business. The Press is one of the substantial institutions of the county.

The Independent is a politically independent weekly established at Coeur d'Alene in July, 1902, by Smith & Moon. C. A. Smith comes from Duluth, Minnesota, and O. B. Moon from Eagle River, Wisconsin. Both these gentlemen are experienced journalists, and the Independent is ably edited. Although comparative strangers in Kootenai county, Messrs. Smith and Moon have made many friends since founding their paper, and it is receiving the generous support to which the earnest and well directed efforts of its editors entitle it.

John F. Yost of Sandpoint began newspaper work in Kootenai county, at Hope in September, 1891. Previously for three years he was a teacher in the Rathdrum schools. He was first editor of the Hope Prespector in 1891 and 1892. He founded the Rathdrum Silver Blade in 1895, continuing its publication until April, 1897. In May, 1899, he established the Kootenai County Republican at Rathdrum. In July 1901, he moved with his paper to Sandpoint, where he is now located as its editor and publisher. Mr. Yost is a native of Ohio, where he received his education and learned the printer's trade. He has always taken a lively interest in Kootenai county politics and is a hard working Republican. He was postmaster at Rathdrum during President McKinley's first administration. In 1902 he was Republican candidate for state senator and was elected. Mr. Yost is an able man, a capable editor, a good public speaker and the Kootenai County Republican is one of the leading papers of the county.

The oldest editor in Kootenai county in point of time served, is S. D. Taylor, of the Kootenai Herald at Bonner's Ferry. Mr. Taylor has been continuously in the editorial chair since July 4, 1891, when he established the Herald at Kootenai Station. After the completion of the Great Northern railroad in 1892, the town of Kootenai was practically abandoned and Mr. Taylor removed to Bonner's Ferry. The Kootenai Herald is one of the most successful and widely circulated papers published in the county, and its editor is highly esteemed as a man of intellectual worth, principle and honor. The Herald is Republican in politics. Its editor, while taking an active interest in politics, devotes much space to a plea for the reclamation of the swamp lands of the Kootenai valley, which must eventually become the richest agricultural section in the county. Mr. Taylor is also after a much needed bridge over the Kootenai river at Bonner's Ferry. He is a strong advocate of local and general progress, is energetic and persevering, and to his paper the people of Bonner's Ferry are greatly indebted for its continual efforts in furthering the city's advancement.

The Harrison Searchlight is owned and edited by S. M. Logan, who assumed charge in April, 1902. The paper was first known as the Signal, but we have been unable to obtain the name of the first editor. It commenced publication in 1894. In 1896 S. W. Crane, the pioneer of Harrison, took charge of the paper and conducted it until 1898, under the name of the Mountain Messenger. In May, 1898, the plant became the property of Hubbard and Co. Since that date it has had several editors, viz: H. O. Thompson, W. S. Biggs, Thomas Lawson and S. M. Logan. The name was changed to the Searchlight in 1900. Mr. Logan is publishing a Republican paper and is keeping before the public the advantage of Harrison and Kootenai counties as a field for investment and the location of homes. The Searchlight is a credit to Harrison and Mr. Logan is a successful manager and editor.

The Priest River Enterprise is a Republican paper, whose first issue appeared July 4, 1902. Its editor, A. B. Hoag, before coming to Priest River, conducted papers at Mt. Idaho, this state, and at Lebanon, Oregon. Mr. Hoag is a native of Minnesota and a graduate of Bates College at Lewiston, Maine. After graduation he spent several years teaching in Maine and Massachusetts, and the Albion (Idaho) Normal and in Albany College at Albany, Oregon, where he occupied the chair of English literature and elocution. Being a man of extensive and diversified information, Mr. Hoag is well equipped for the field in which he has located and the Enterprise is well started on a career that cannot but prove successful.

The St. Maries Courier is a semi-weekly publication established February 19, 1901 by E. Deuerslie. This enterprise was launched about the time St. Marie began to boom and has kept pace with the rapid progress made by the town. It is neutral in politics, is well edited and would be a decided credit to a much larger place than St. Maries. Mr. Deuerslie is devoted to the best interests of St. Maries and is doing all in his power through the columns of the Courier to bring home builders and capital to the growing town. In this effort he is meeting with success and the Courier is fast progressing toward a position in the front ranks of the country newspapers.

The St. Joe Budget is the latest birth into the newspaper world of Kootenai county. Its first issue appeared December 12, 1902. The Budget is Republican in politics and is owned by the Budget Publishing Co., Wil E. Dockeray, editor. The St. Joe country is just beginning the progress of development and Mr. Dockeray is assisting in a very material way through the columns of the Budget. The editorials and the news columns show him to be well fitted for the work he has undertaken and the publication will no doubt meet with success to which earnest and conscientious endeavor is entitled.

LATAH COUNTY PRESS

MOSCOW MIRROR.

From the date of its establishment, July 4, 1882, the Moscow Mirror has never missed an issue. Hon. Willis Sweet, now attorney general for Porto Rico, was the first editor of the paper, and C. B. Hopkins, now United States marshal for the district of Washington, was the first publisher. Mr. Hopkins was then publishing the Colfax Gazette at Colfax, Washington, and for some time the presswork on the Mirror was done at the Gazette office. It was at first a small six-column sheet with patent inside. The subscription price was $3 per annum and it had a circulation of about 140. In November, 1882, the paper was purchased by C. B. Reynolds, who paid but $400 for the entire plant. Mr. Reynolds continued the publication of the paper until June 7, 1889, when it was purchased by Jolly Bros. Elmer E. Jolly was editor and manager. His brothers, James D., a printer, and Thomas H., an attorney, were interested with him in the property. The paper is now owned and edited by W. D. Smith. Mr. Smith has made a number of changes and improvements in the property. When he first took charge the paper was a five-column quarto. To accommodate increasing business the plan of an insert supplement was used for a time. April 16, 1903, Mr. Smith installed an up-to-date type setting machine, a Simplex typesetter. This was followed by a change in the makeup of the paper, which is now issued as a large eight column folio, all set at home. The paper not only covers all the news of Moscow thoroughly and well, but in addition has correspondents in the tributary districts from whom these localities is secured and published. Typographically the paper is most attractive, the advertisements being displayed in a manner which would do credit to a metropolitan publication. The advertising patronage is so immense as to already crowd the limits of the enlarged publication. The paper is housed in a commodious brick structure and the plant is equipped with new and complete machinery and type. It is issued every Thursday and is Republican in politics. As an indication of the growth of the paper it is interesting to note that from a valuation of $400 and a circulation of 140 in 1882, the paper in 1898 was valued at $15,000 and its circulation had grown to 1,500. In later years two almost complete plants were sold from the material in the office. Interest in the paper's progress lessened and when Mr. Smith took charge in 1902 the circulation had dropped to less than 500. During the past seven months the circulation has been increased to 1,100 and is rapidly growing. The plant is now valued at $6,600. Mr. Smith is a native of Princeton, Illinois. In 1887 he went to Lamberton, Minnesota, where he founded the Lamberton Leader. He conducted this paper until June 15, 1893, when he founded the Winnebago (Minn.) Enterprise. Under Mr. Smith's management this became one of the leading Republican papers in Minnesota and of the middle west, and also one of the most valuable papers from a financial standpoint. While conducting the Enterprise, during the years 1893 and 1902 inclusive, Mr. Smith was assistant secretary of the Minnesota senate. He was a most active and influential worker in state and national campaigns and had a promising future before him had he remained in Minnesota. Mr. Smith took charge of the Mirror, December 29, 1902, and at once began improvements in the plant and in the general tone and makeup of the paper that will give it undisputed right to first rank among the weekly publications of the State of Idaho.

NORTH IDAHO STAR.

The pioneer Republican newspaper of Moscow is the North Idaho Star, which was established October 1, 1887, by J. L. Brown. Mr. Brown conducted the paper successfully for three years when it passed to a corporation known as the Star Publishing Company. The company conducted the paper until October 9, 1893, when it was purchased by Henry C. Shaver, the present owner. Under the present ownership the paper has grown immensely in business, circulation and influence.

Mr. Shaver is of the class of newspaper men who are, alas! too few in these modern days. He is not only an all-around printer, a disciple of the case, but has had ripe experience in all branches of the editorial department of the profession, having been connected in important capacities with some of the leading papers of the east, and having had many years of experience as editor and publisher.

Henry C. Shaver was born in Kendall county, Illinois, August 5, 1858. He was educated in the common schools of Iowa and there learned the printing trade in the office of the Republican at Waverly, Iowa. Later he engaged in the publishing business as owner and editor of the Record, of Cedar Falls, Iowa, his first business venture of importance. He published the Cedar Falls Record for four years, when he became identified with the Daily Leader of Des Moines. For six years he was editor in chief of that paper, when he resigned to devote his attention to the Iowa interests of the Chicago Herald, with headquarters at Des Moines. From this latter position he resigned in June, 1893, to become the Washington, D. C., correspondent of the Des Moines Daily Leader. He also served as correspondent at the national capital at the same time for the Omaha World Herald and the Indianapolis Sentinel. In the fall of 1893 he came to Latah county and took hold of the Star. The Star is typographically an evidence of the thorough knowledge of the art preservative on the part of the owner. It is a neatly printed, well edited eight page folio, six column paper, a credit to the state and owner and a prosperous business property, the value of which is constantly increasing.

Shortly after Mr. Shaver purchased the Star he set about to improve the office equipment. Being a thorough printer, as well as an experienced editor, he fully appreciated the importance of a mechanical equipment that would enable him to do all the work required in a city of 5,000 people, and to print a handsome paper as well. All the fashionable and attractive faces of type were added as they appeared from the foundry, as well as the labor-saving appliances known to the printing craft. The latest additions to the office are a Babcock cylinder press and a gasoline engine, both new from the factory. These considerable additions make his facilities as complete as any in the state, enabling him to do a wide range of work, and to publish as handsome a paper as is turned out in Idaho. The Star will doubtless continue to maintain its position as one of the leading newspapers of Latah county, a position which has been readily conceded to it up to the present time.

TIMES DEMOCRAT.

The accepted organ of the Democratic party in north Idaho was, for a number of years, the Times Democrat, published at Moscow. The paper was first established March 1, 1891, by William Taylor. He ran it for four months, when it was turned over to Samuel T. Owings, who conducted it until October 1, 1891, when the plant was sold to J. L. Brown. April 1, 1892, Mr. Owings again became editor and publisher and continued in charge until June 1, 1899, when the property was leased by Hon. Samuel C. Herren. Mr. Owings resumed charge January 1, 1900, and continued as editor and publisher.

Samuel T. Owings is a native of Baltimore, Maryland, born September 1, 1868. He was educated in his native state and came to Moscow in September, 1888. He from the day of his arrival has been active in business enterprises, public spirited and devoted to the interests of Moscow, Latah county and the state of Idaho. He first engaged in the grocery business and later acquired valuable mining interests in British Columbia. He has erected several residences in Moscow and in many other ways has contributed to the development of that town. He is a successful and representative business man.

The Times Democrat has an excellent plant, valued at about $3,500. The paper, which is a five column folio, is issued every Thursday. It is strictly a home paper, no plate matter being used. In each issue the local items of interest are interestingly presented and the news of the state and of the world is given in condensed form. An attractive feature to many readers is the absence of an editorial page, the editorial expressions being presented in paragraphic comment with the new items. It January, 1903, Mr. Owings changed the policy of the Times Democrat and it is now issued as a Republican paper.

KENDRICK GAZETTE.

The Kendrick Gazette, a Democratic weekly newspaper, published at Kendrick, has a rather interesting history. Its forerunner was the Kendrick Advocate, the first copy of which was issued July 4, 1890. In the absence of a building the printing office was set up under the shade of a tree and there the first copy of the paper was printed. H. L. Frost was the pioneer editor and he conducted the paper until January, 1891, when he leased the plant to James F. Vincent, son of Judge Vincent, of Mount Idaho, Idaho. Mr. Vincent continued the publication of the Advocate for some time after he had, in January, 1892, established the Kendrick Gazette, when the Advocate ceased to exist. Mr. Frost, an attorney, was editor of the Advocate, Tuesday, August 16, 1892. Shortly before two o'clock that morning flames were seen issuing from the second story of the building in which the Advocate office and Frost's law office were located. Within half an hour afterward two blocks had been burned over and $80,000 of property had gone up in smoke. There was a rumor that the fire was of incendiary origin and suspicion rested upon Editor Frost and he was compelled to leave for Moscow for safety. The Gazette building was destroyed in the fire, but the forms were saved and the paper did not miss publication. March 16, 1894, the Gazette building was again burned the night before publication, but enough of the matter was saved to issue a paper next day.

The present owners of the paper are Mackintosh & Weber. D. T. A. Mackintosh is the editor and H. W. Weber is business manager. For many years the paper was issued as a five column quarto, but this year the business had increased to such an extent that the owners doubled the size. It is a clean, newsy paper, "devoted to the interests of the Potlatch country, and is enjoying a deserved measure of prosperity."

CANYON ECHO.

The Canyon Echo, a weekly Republican paper, issued at Kendrick, every Tuesday, originally started out as a Democratic paper under the name of the Kendrick Times. The paper was started in 1893 by the Times Publishing Company, of which Frish Brothers were the chief stockholders. They had charge of the paper for two years, when E. H. Thompson was installed as editor. Mr. Thompson was succeeded as editor by Jesse Collins. In June, 1897, E. E. Alderman became editor and publisher. In March, 1898, the name of the paper was changed to Canyon Echo. Under Mr. Alderman the paper has become Republican in politics. He is the present editor and proprietor of the paper. Mr. Alderman is a native of Ohio and was educated in the public schools of that state and at Hiram College. He is a lumber manufacturer and one of the leading citizens of Kendrick. The paper is a bright and newsy five column quarto and has an excellent circulation and large advertising patronage.

GENESEE NEWS.

Three different names have been given to the paper now known as the Genesee News, the weekly paper published at Genesee, and while now a stanch Republican organ it was originally started as a Democratic paper. In August, 1898, J. L. C. Mays started the paper as the Genesee Advertiser, Democratic in politics. The early career of the publication was checkered and October and part of November of that year no issues were published. In November, 1898, E. R. Wiswell took hold of the plant and rejuvenated the Advertiser, but made it a Republican organ. Later Ed Barton became associated in the ownership. In 1889 the paper was sold to C. M. Poor, who changed the name to Recorder and made it an independent paper, with strong Democratic leanings. In 1891 the paper was purchased by J. W. Hopp and Charles Power, who changed the name to the Genesee News and made it a Republican paper. This firm was more successful than its predecessors in the ownership of the plant. When they first purchased the paper it was a five column folio, but they soon enlarged it to a six column quarto, its present size. Since February, 1892, when he purchased the interests of Mr. Hopp, Mr. Power has been editor and proprietor. He has been very successful in his conduct of the paper and has built it up to one of the best and most influential newspapers in north Idaho. The paper is issued every Friday.

TROY NEWS.

The Troy News, originally called the Vollmer News, was established in 1894 by Charles Moody. The pioneer paper in Troy was the Vollmer Vedette, which was established in 1891 by T. E. Edmondson, but which only ran a few months. Mr. Moody ran the News for some time. Later editors were J. C. Peterson and A. G. Greer. Mr. Peterson, with John E. Hoffman, were for a time the owners of the publication. The present editor and owner is B. S. Nelson. The paper is issued weekly and is a well printed, four column quarto. It carries proportionately an immense amount of advertising, of which government land office notices form no inconsiderable part. The paper is in a most prosperous condition and will probably soon be compelled to enlarge to meet the growing patronage.

JULIAETTA ENTERPRISE.

The newspaper graveyard at Juliaetta is a large one, but, at last, in the Enterprise that town has a newspaper which will live and prosper. The first newspaper in Juliaetta was the Gem, which was established May 18, 1889, by W. L. Taylor. He was a talented young editor and managed to keep the Gem alive for eighteen months, when the enterprise was abandoned. The paper was practically resurrected in the Potlatch, which first came out in June, 1891, with J. M. Bledsoe as editor and Collins Perryman as business manager. They conducted the paper until 1892, when it was sold to William R. McCracken, who changed the name to the Juliaetta Advance. After two years the Advance was discontinued, owing to the panic and general depression. Later the Potlatch Press was started there by Alford Bros., later publishers of the Lewiston Tribune. They sold out after one year to F. J. Bratton, who published the paper for two years and then shut down the office, shipping the press to Spalding. May 1, 1899, M. P. Stevens, an able attorney and clever writer, established the Register, which later passed the way of the earlier papers. This year The Juliaetta Enterprise was established by D. T. A. Mackintosh and H. W. Weber, also owners and publishers of the Kendrick Gazette. W. A. Turner is local editor and manager of the Enterprise and he is making a decided success of the property. The paper is a seven column folio and is issued every Thursday. It is given a very liberal advertising patronage by the Juliaetta merchants and has an excellent circulation.

THE PALOUSE EMPIRE.

The Palouse Empire is a weekly recently established at Moscow by Will H. Stewart and Oscar F. De Partee. Mr. Stewart is editor and Mr. De Partee manager. This paper was started as the "Citizen," March 1st of the present year. After running for ten weeks as a Democratic publication the publishers left the political field and entered that of the agriculturist, horticulturist and stock raiser. They also changed the name of the paper to the Palouse Empire. The field they have entered is practically unoccupied by a publication of this kind and as the editor is displaying marked ability in the discussion of topics on which the Palouse farmer is always seeking information, there is good reason to believe the paper will become one of the substantial institutions of the county. The publishers contemplate changing the form of the paper to an eight column quarto. The office and publishing rooms are in the Business College building.

FIRST PAPER IN THE COUNTY.

A history of the press of Latah county would be incomplete without mention of the Moscow Argus. This was the pioneer newspaper of the county. It was published in the winter of 1878-9 by the Moscow Literary Society and its editors were R. H. Barton, George P. Richardson and Dr. William Taylor. They had no printing press, so the paper was written out by hand and was read at the regular weekly meetings of the society.

CHAPTER II.

REMINISCENT.

Throughout the following pages are gathered a few of the current legends, stories and rhymes concerning the pioneer days of northern Idaho. While no one can vouch for the accuracy of the descriptions, or the reliability of the relators, the sketches are interesting, and the local color strongly suggestive of earlier scenes in the settlement of the territory and state.

A NORTH IDAHO INDIAN MASSACRE.

The following is substantially as related by Martin Fry, of Bonners Ferry:

"I came to Bonners Ferry in 1876. The story of the massacre, which I am about to relate, I got from the whites wen I first came here. But I have also learned it many times from the Indians, who witnessed all the transactions after the massacre and who were familiar with the massacre itself. I understand and can speak the Kootenai Indian language and the account of the massacre as told to me by several of these Indians and repeated time after time, has never varied in any particular.

"In the summer of 1866 a party of five Indians went, with their families, from this place up the Kootenai river to a point near the mouth of Libby creek, on a hunting expedition. Previous to their going, earlier in the season, a party of prospectors made a discovery of placers up Libby creek. About the time of the arival of the Indians at their camping grounds, a party from the prospector's camp started out with pack horses to obtain provisions. A few days later they returned, reaching the Kootenai river at a point opposite the mouth of Libby creek, where the Iidians were encamped. Some of the Indians appearing on the banks of the stream, the prospectors called to them and asked that they bring over the canoes and assist them in getting themselves and their provisions across the river. This was done. After reaching the shore, the provisions were unloaded from the boats to the backs of the pack animals, and, it being late in the afternoon, the party proceeded up Libby creek, going into camp for the night about one-fourth of a mile from the Indian camp.

"After nightfall the squaws proposed to the bucks that the latter steal up to the camp of the whites, frighten them away by some means and get their stock of provisions. They would later lay the blame for the theft upon the Blackfeet, who at this time made frequent raids over the Kootenai country, pilfering not only from the occasional white settlers, but from the Kootenai Indians, and not infrequently killing Indians with whom they came in contact. The proposal of the squaws met the approval of the bucks and accordingly, late in the evening, they proceeded to the camp of the prospectors and told them they had discovered signs of Blackfeet Indians in the vicinity and that there was danger of an attack from them at any moment. A man named Allen was in charge of the party, which consisted of himself, Joe Herron and another, whose name I have forgotten. These men had spent many years in the mining camps and were accustomed to facing dangers; they knew the Indian character well and at once suspected that this was a ruse to frighten them from their camp and get their provisions. They consequently paid no attention to the warnings of the Kootenais, although one of the party suggested to Allen that it might be well to go on up the creek to the main camp which was only a few miles away. But Allen said 'No.' The Indians went away and the prospectors turned in for the night.

"Foiled in their first attempt to get the stores of the white men, the Indians returned to their tepees and consulted as to what course should next be pursued. Just before daybreak they returned to where the miners were sleeping and fired a volley over the camp. As it was thus far only the desire of the Indians to frighten the whites away, no one was injured by the first volley of shots. Aroused thus suddenly from their sleep, the whites sprang to their feet, but instead of fleeing, began hurried preparations to move. The Indians were disappointed by the failure of their ruse and angered by the actions of the whites in refusing to be frightened into deserting their stores. Another volley was fired, and this time Allen and one of his companions were instantly killed, while Joe Herron received a shot through the cheek. Realizing his helpless condition. Herron fled into the brush where he managed to hide securely from the Indians, although they spent several hours beating the woods in an effort to locate his hiding place. Had Herron been found he would have been quickly dispatched and the details of the first act of this tragedy would probably never have been told, while the second part would proably never have been enacted. But Herron remained secreted, saw the Indians, whom he recognized as the party of Kootenais that had rowed him and his companions across the river on the previous afternoon, drag the dead bodies of their two victims away from the camp, carry off the provisions and lead away the horses. He believed that the other camp, further up the creek, had also been attacked and feared to move in that direction. After the Indians had departed, therefore, he came from his hiding place, made a wide detour through the woods and struck the Moyer trail, several miles above the mouth of Moyer creek. In escaping from the camp, his gun was left behind: he was also without provisions of any kind and he knew it would only be by the rarest chance that he might meet or overtake white men with supplies. Nevertheless he at once started on the long journey down the trail and Kootenai river for the Wild Horse mining camps of British Columbia. For twenty-one days he pressed on through the long tangled grass of the river bottoms, along the rocky sides of the mountains, through forest, underbrush and valley swamps, swimming streams and climbing mountains, enduring the most exhausting hardships with no food but the berries and roots of the forest, and for the greater part of the time suffering intense pain from the shot wound through his cheek. After three weeks of this wandering, he reached the camps of the miners, completely exhausted, his shoes worn from his bleeding feet and his clothes in tatters.

"Despite his condition, however, he rested but a few days before organizing a posse to return up the valley and avenge the death of his companions. One division of the party went direct to Bonner's Ferry, anticipating the return of the murderers to their homes near this place. Another division of the party went to the mouth of Libby creek, the scene of the massacre. John Walton, who was E. L. Bonner's agent in conducting the ferry and trading post, was the only white man permanently settled in the country at that time. He knew nothing of the massacre until the arrival of the posse from Wild Horse. In the meantime three of the Indians had returned from Libby creek and two had remained up the Kootenai river at the mouth of Gold creek. When the miners reached Bonners Ferry, they found John Walton at the post and with him was old Abraham, chief of the Kootenais, who had always been very friendly to the whites. Walton spoke the Kootenai language and when told of the massacre, he questioned Chief Abraham and learned that neither the chief nor the tribe knew of the murders committed by the hunting party. The details of the murders were explained to Abraham and he was told that if he surrendered the guilty members of his tribe all would be well; otherwise the miners from Wild Horse and other regions would swarm the Kootenai country and exterminate his tribe. Abraham promised to produce and surrender the murderers and at once proceeded to the tribal camp, two or three miles down the river. Summoning the three into his presence, he told them he knew all about the murder and, furthermore, that the whites now at the trading post had said if they would return with them to Libby creek and show them where they had cached the provisions belonging to the murdered men, they would be forgiven and allowed to return home. In this way Abraham induced the three Indians to go with him to Walton's store at the ferry. The miners, being apprised of their approach, secreted themselves in the brush at the roadside near the store. When Abraham and his companions entered the store, Walton stepped out, locked the door and signaled the miners, who at once rushed into the building, overpowered the murderers, bound them securely, and placed them under heavy guard until ready for their departure for the scene of the massacre, where it was their intention to execute the prisoners.

"Soon afterward the start was made for Libby creek, the Indians with their hands tied marching in front of their captors, who were followed by a band of Kootenai tribe with which were a number of the relatives of the doomed criminals. Arriving at Moyer creek, seven miles above Bonners Ferry, one of the white men crossed over and stationed himself as a guard on the opposite bank. The water was only about four feet deep and the Indians were instructed to wade across. They had evidently come to realize that they were not to be turned loose as Chief Abraham had led them to believe, for one of them, when he had reached the middle of the stream, succeeded in loosening the cords upon his wrists and attempted to gain his freedom by plunging beneath the water, diving and swimming toward the main channel of the Kootenai river. A volley of shots from the guns of the miners put a speedy end to his career and his body floated off down the river. The other two Indians crossed the creek and were followed by the rear guard of the miners. After the attempted escape the miners decided to take no more chances and their two remaining prisoners were accordingly shot on the east bank of the Moyer, and their bodies left to the care of their relatives, who were still following, but who had offered no resistance to the miners.

"There were five participants in the massacre; three of them had now been slain. Proceeding on up the Kootenai river Herron and his posse had no trouble in locating the two at the mouth of Gold creek. They were captured, taken at once to Libby creek, the scene of the massacre, and hanged. Thus was the death of the prospectors revenged.

"In all the history of the Kootenai Indians there is no record of friction between them and the whites before or since the occurrence narrated above. The good old chief Abraham, or, as he was called by the Indians, 'Alplam,' died in the summer of 1882, age unknown, as he was white headed when the first settlers came to the country. Too much cannot be said in praise of this old chief who was greatly beloved by all who knew him. He was a welcome visitor in the homes of all the white settlers and at the time of his death there was genuine sorrow among his white as well as his Indian friends."

EARLY DAYS OF FLORENCE.

P. W. Gillett, in the Oregonian: The recent discoveries of gold mines in the vicinity of the Buffalo Hump, in Idaho, recall to my mind the great rush to the rich placer mines at Florence City in 1862. These mines were discovered almost by accident late in the fall of 1861, so late that but few were able to reach them that season on account of the great depth of snow in the surrounding mountains. The news of this discovery soon spread over the country and from the first of February until the last of May every steamship from San Francisco to Portland was crowded to its utmost capacity with gold seekers. Early in the spring of 1862 people in great numbers from all parts Oregon, Washington, Idaho and even from British Columbia, began to roll out for the mines. Farms, shops, offices and stores were deserted and thousands left their homes in great haste to reap the golden harvest.

Portland was the grand starting point, and though only a town of about 2,300, soon put on metropolitan airs and was the busiest place on the coast. Hotels were crowded to overflowing, the stores were chock full of customers, and the storekeepers were so busy and independent that they hardly had time to see or wait upon purchasers. These were Portland's palmiest days, and then she first began to realize that she was a city. On April 15, 1862, with sixteen others, I started from Astoria and joined the great throng. Each one took a horse, knowing that we would have much land travel to perform, and probably have our food to carry also. The Oregon Steam Navigation Company owned and managed all the steamboats running up the Columbia river, and consequently made prices of freight and passengers to suit themselves. Passage from Portland to The Dalles, less than 100 miles, was $8, and 75 cents extra for meals. From Portland to Lewiston, 345 miles, passage was $30, meals extra, and freight by ton, by measurement was only $120. The boat that carried me to The Dalles was so full of people that it took all day to serve two meals. We left Portland at 5 A. M. At six o'clock the first table was seated; as soon as it was empty another was made ready, and so on as rapidly as possible, until about 12 o'clock, when we reached the lower cascade landing, all had been served. Then it took until 6 P. M. on the upper boat to serve the next meal. This rush was not just for a day or a week, but it continued for several months.

The Dalles, though but a village, was a busy place —a regular toll-gate, where all who passed through had to pay toll in some shape. The town and suburbs were dotted with tents and wagons and thronged with busy men, packing horses, loading wagons and getting ready to start. We left The Dalles with our horses packed with 150 to 200 pounds of provisions, camp equipments, etc.

All roads leading up to Columbia were full of people, horses, teams and vehicles of every description, while the steamboats were more than full. It was a great flood tide of immigration and commerce, rolling up the Columbia valley like an irresistible torrent. The Powder river mines were also newly discovered and many were headed in that direction.

I must not omit mentioning a very curious and interesting sight I witnessed as we passed along the narrow trail, just beyond the mouth of Des Chutes river. The ground at and near the foot of the high basaltic cliff was covered with innumerable rocks and boulders that time had thrown down from the bluff. All around us, and as far as the eye could see, were hundreds of rattlesnakes, lazily sunning themselves on those rocks. Their dark, sleek bodies could be seen glistening in the sunlight hundreds of feet away. They were of all sizes, from medium to very large. Our presence did not disturb them, as they allowed us to pass within two or three feet of them without changing their positions. They were so numerous that I did not attempt to count them, but there were many hundreds of them in sight. There must have been a great den of them in the rocky cliff.

At Umatilla landing we met a number of miners returning from Powder river, all glad to get back, declaring that there was no gold there worth the getting. At that place we found a tent restaurant, "Meals $1; with dessert $1.75." We all took a full meal of bacon and beans, hard tack, black coffee and a small piece of the poorest sort of dried apple pie.

At several points between The Dalles and Walla Walla the ground was strewn with dead cattle which had starved during the late unprecedented hard winter. Where the city of Arlington now stands, I counted 150 dead cattle on less than one acre of land. They had come down that ravine in the winter in quest of water and food, neither of which they could get, the river was frozen over and the snow was so deep they could find no grass.

We passed through Walla Walla on the 9th of May. It consisted of a row of small houses and stores on either side of the road that ran through town. The country around Walla Walla and Lewiston was only just beginning to be settled. Between Walla Walla and Lewiston we did not see more than a dozen houses, the most of which were in the Touchet, the homes of pioneer stockmen.

When we reached the Alpowa creek we found Indians farming on a small scale. They were plowing, one Indian riding the horse, another holding the little home-made plow. Near the mouth of that creek was quite a good farm, the old home of Rev. H. H. Spalding, who settled there in 1836. Here I saw a clump of apple trees in full bloom. This orchard was planted by Mr. Spalding and, except those at Vancouver planted by some of the Hudson's Bay people, were probably the first fruit trees of this sort planted on the North Pacific coast. Reaching Snake river, opposite the town of Lewiston, we found the bank of the river covered with hundreds of men, horses and vehicles of all sorts awaiting their turn to get across the river. We took our place in line, but did not get across until dark. We put up our tent in the town. During the night we were disturbed by the firing of pistols and the whizzing of bullets so unexpectedly near that the next morning we moved further back. Drunkenness, gambling, crime and murder were in full blast in Lewiston. I will quote from my diary kept at the time, which will show the condition of things as I saw them and how the country appeared at that time:

May 12, 1862—Lewiston is a brisk place. There are stores and shops of every sort, law, doctor, dentist and express offices. The town is built of canvas, poles, logs and split boards. Wood is worth $10 per cord; split boards, three feet long, $50 per thousand, and shingles $25 per thousand. There is a small steam sawmill here, making lumber of logs floated 40 miles down the Clearwater river, which sells at $100 per thousand. Town lots are all the rage. Everybody is buying lots, selling lots, squatting on lots, jumping lots and lawing about lots. Yet Lewiston is situated upon an Indian reservation, and no one has any title to the lots, save squatter's rights—squatter's sovereignty. Lots are selling at $50 to $1,000.

May 15—My friend, G. L. Wood, of Yamhill county, dined with me today. I borrowed an extra tin plate, cup, knife and spoon, and entertained him in fine style. He is running the ferry across Snake river and is making money. (A few years later he was elected governor of Oregon). The mighty flood of human life still rushes on with restless steps and eager hopes. Pack trains and vehicles of every sort come laden with provisions, merchandise and lots of whisky. The town still grows, houses springing up like magic, saloons and gambling houses are numerous and are full of people night and day. Here fools and their money part to meet no more. There is much crime and frequent murders here.

May 24—Mounted my horse this morning and started for Florence City, accompanied by a merchant from Walla Walla. We passed through a fertile rolling country until we reached the summit of the Blue mountains, where we found pine and tamarack timber thinly scattered over a well-tufted surface, making it resemble an extensive and beautiful park. The trail follows a broad and almost level ridge that grows broader as we advance until it seems more like an undilating than a mountainous country. At 6 p. m. we stopped and "staked out" our horses, made a cup of tea, and ate our meal of hardtack, cheese and dried beef. When we awoke our blankets were white with frost.

May 23—The scenery along the trail today is the most picturesque and beautiful I ever saw. The face of the country is diversified with timber and prairie happily interspersed, with hills and dales, glens and glades and dancing streams. At 10 a. m., as we emerged from the timber, we came in full view of the famous Camas prairie, stretching almost from the Salmon to the Clearwater river and about eighteen miles in width—a sea of verdure and an Eden of flowers. We descended by a long, sloping point into the prairie, and found the soil very black and exceedingly fertile, though inhabited only by Indians and wild animals. It is too valuable a country to remain long in this useless and neglected condition. It will not be long until it becomes the home of civilization and a rich agricultural district.

When my Walla Walla companion overtook his pack train, I had to proceed alone. In passing through White Bird creek I saw many Indian lodges, the most conspicuous of which was that of Eagle-of-the-Light, the chief, and a great many Indians, but they did not molest me, except to urge and almost force me to cross a rude bridge they had constructed across a small creek for which they wanted me to pay $1. But I firmly refused and rode across the creek below the bridge.

At 5 o'clock p. m., I reached a large encampment of people just below the snow line, and about two miles this side of the Mountain house, and stopped all night. Late in the evening news came in that the large gang of men employed to shovel out the snow and cut and remove the logs and make a passable trail, had just completed their work.

May 27—Mounted my horse at 6 a. m. and started alone for Florence City. The snow was piled so high on either side of the trail for several miles that I could not see over it—in some places it was 10 feet deep. I reached Florence at 4 p. m. and was the first man to enter Florence on horseback. When I reached the mining district and the miners got sight of my horse, they threw down their picks and shovels, tossed up their hats and shouted and yelled as if they were crazy This din of shouts followed me until I reached the town. The sight of a horse was the announcement of cheaper food and all sorts of merchandise. All winter they had paid 40 cents a pound to men to pack in their supplies of all sorts from the Mountain house, twelve miles away, on their backs.

June 2—A continuous stream of people is pouring into Florence which gives it an exceedingly busy appearance. There is still some snow on the ground, but it is rapidly melting away. Having never been in a mining camp before, it is very interesting and new to me. Everyone but the newcomers are as busy as bees, digging, ditching and washing out gold in cradles and sluices. Immense heaps of fresh earth are piled up in every direction and the whole country is so full of prospect holes that it seems totally ruined. I spent a day visiting several claims and found many anxious to sell out, although all claimed that their properties were very rich.

June 8—This morning reports were circulated that exceedingly rich diggings had just been discovered in the neighborhood of Buffalo Hump, about sixty miles in a northeasterly direction from here. A few miners who seemed to know where the new discoveries are started off in the night to prevent the crowd from following them. All day people by hundreds, and perhaps by thousands, are getting ready as fast as possible to go. Many start with packs on their backs, while others take horses well laden with food to last weeks.

June 10.—Still hundreds of excited men are rushing off to the Buffalo Hump. Within two days flour has advanced from 50 cents to $1 a pound, and almost all sorts of provisions in like proportion, on account of the extraordinary demand.

June 15.—The town is alive with people today. Everybody goes to town on Sunday to lay in supplies, see the sights, get and send letters, buy newspapers and take a rest. Newspapers cost $1 each. I can only afford three a week. On almost every corner an auctioneer is selling horses, goods and merchandise of every sort. Great clumps of people stand in the streets discussing the "new diggings." The saloons are full of people. Many are gambling, hundreds drinking, while some are simply idling away the time and listening to the alluring chink of coin on the gaming tables. Frequent quarrels occur at the gaming tables which almost always culminate in shooting, and often killing. Not infrequently some drunken ruffian draws his revolver and begins to shoot in the midst of the vast crowd, often killing or wounding some one and creating a fearful stampede. Such is Sunday in Florence. Here the congressman, legislator, judge, divine, doctor, lawyer, merchant, farmer, laborer and sailor mingle in the same crowd, wear slouch hats, blue shirts and ragged or patched breeches. Nearly all of this vast horde of gamblers, roughs and desperadoes are from California—the remainder, dregs and offspring of that foul collection of villians that flooded California in 1849 to 1852, ten to thirteen years ago. There is no law here, or none that sees, abates, retards or punishes crime. Scarcely a day passes that some one is not killed or wounded. There has been strong talk of establishing a vigilance committee, but as yet nothing has been done. The decent people of Florence endure these outrages with remarkable fortitude.

June 18.—The price of flour and provisions is going down. I bought today 50 pounds of flour for $27.50, and a five-gallon keg of syrup for $25. Fresh beef, mutton and bacon sell at 50 to 60 cents per pound.

June 21, 1862.—News came in by express today that both Corinth and Richmond had surrendered and were occupied by United States troops. The Union men in our neighborhood assembled at Squire Atwood's camp (Atwood of the Cascades) to celebrate the event. The squire has an old-fashioned brass English blunderbuss that would make as much noise as a modern six-pounder, which he fired after each speech. At the close of the speaking the old squire was so full of patriotism that he overloaded the blunderbuss and blew her into atoms, after which we gave six rousing cheers for the Union and adjourned. (The report of the surrender of Richmond was untrue.)

June 25.—Great numbers of miners are returning from the Buffalo Hump, thoroughly tired and disgusted, having found no gold worth the taking. On their way there many got lost in the mountains and wandered around for days, and were followed by others who supposed they were on the right way to the mines. Many horses died from overwork and want of food.

July 4.—Ice was frozen last night, and I never saw so white a frost as covered the earth this morning. The boom of guns announcing the "Glorious Fourth" awoke me this morning.

July 6.—Among all of my friends and acquaintances here none are making anything. Great numbers of people are selling off everything and preparing to leave.

July 15.—Hundreds of tents that studded the hills surrounding Florence have disappeared, and are now deserted and desolate.

July 17—Scorching frost this morning. Another man was shot and killed in town today by a brutal gambler, who as usual was allowed to go unpunished.

July 18.—This morning two new comers took up a a claim on Sand creek that had been taken and abandoned by more than half a dozen different parties, but those fellows struck the right spot, and found $50 to $100 to the pan. Another man was killed in town last night.

Nearly all the rich claims here are in or very close to Summit flat, and I believe they do not cover two square miles; and the entire Florence mining district does not cover more than four or five square miles. There are some very rich placer diggings here, and much gold has been taken out, but I truly believe that five times as much money has been expended in coming here and searching for gold and getting back again as has been or ever will be taken out of these mines.

Excepting the great excitement of 1849 and 1850 there has never been on this coast a mining excitement equal to that of 1862. I have no means of knowing the number of people who went to Florence during this excitement, but it was very large. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, had to sponge or beg their way back home, not being able to find paying diggings or get employment.

REMINISCENT—1877.

One dark night very early in July, 1877, just two days before the first victory of the troops over Joseph in the battle on Cottonwood creek, a courier from Fort Lapwai galloped into Lewiston at full speed and dismounting in front of General Sulley's headquarters on Main street, vigorously pounded on the door until it was opened. The hour was about midnight, and with the exception of the volunteer guards thrown around the town, most of the inhabitants had long been wrapped in the arms of Morpheus.

The general came to the door and learned that the messenger was from the Indian agent, who had sent warning that the Indians were crossing the creek near the agency in large numbers and were apparently heading toward Lewiston. The agent advised the inhabitants to prepare for an attack and, if possible, send word to the few settlers south and east of the city. At that time General Sulley, who was an Indian fighter of note, was stationed at Lewiston in charge of the commissary department of the army in this region, and by virtue of his position and experience practically in command of military affairs in Lewiston. The old general expressed his opinion regarding the suspected attack in most emphatic terms, holding that such an attack was not reasonable and, moreover, contrary to the custom of the Indians in that they never attack large towns or cities. However, to satisfy the populace he sent G. K. Vincent to the sheriff's office, where he found Under Sheriff Kress and told him the news. They decided to quietly warn the isolated settlers and otherwise prepare the town in cast an attack should be made.

Accordingly Mr. Kress enlisted the aid of James McCormick, Joseph Yane, Al. Dunwell, Fred Manning and five or six others, who hastily saddled their animals and went on their mission of warning the settlers.

Meanwhile, however, the news that the redskins were coming had in some mysterious manner been spread abroad and in a comparatively short time all Lewiston was astir and preparing for the murderous onslaught. The guards were hastily assembled and the two cannons in the town, one located about opposite where the Odd Fellows hall now stands, the other at the west end of Main street, were quickly manned. Captain Williams took charge of one gun and Knaggs, the O. S. N. Company's agent here at that time, commanded the other squad.

A log cabin, formerly a store building, stood where the First National bank now stands, and here General Sulley's headquarters had been established. As the people became aroused they congregated in large numbers in front of this building where all was excitement and bustle. General Sulley himself hurrying around in his shirt sleeves and trying to calm the people's fears. Some were armed, others demanded guns and all were anxious to assist in the defense of their home.

The Indians not appearing on the scene and scouts being unable to find a trace of the marauding redskins, the excitement gradually wore away and the people returned to their homes. The guards remained on duty all night but their vigilance was not rewarded by even a sight of their dusky foes.

In the morning it was learned that the Indians who were reported as crossing the Laywai and proceeding toward Lewiston were friendly Nez Perces moving stock and that their numbers had been greatly over estimated. It is true that the sympathies of the reservation Indians were with Joseph and it is also true that many so called friendly Indians afterwards joined the warriors, so that it can be truthfully said that Lewistonians had reasonable grounuds for their first Indian scare.

MOONEY'S ADVENTURE.

All old timers well remember the flurry caused in eastern Washington and north Idaho during the summer of 1878 by the announcement that the savage Bannocks had broken loose from the Fort Hall reservation and in company with the equally heartless Piutes of central Oregon were pursuing a course directly toward this region. The stories which came from time to time from the seat of war of cruel murders and massacres, the sacking and pillaging of property, the stealing of stock and the destruction of other property only added to the apprehension felt by many in this section and the country was on the alert for any news pertaining to the warring redskins, though only a comparatively small number actually feared trouble. Even after the defeat of the Indians near Pendleton and the dispersal into small bands, these fears still continued and had not entirely died out in 1879, the year of our story.

About this time also, there lived in Portland a man named Mooney, who was a successful fancy goods merchant. Mooney was not content to deal with Oregonians, only, but as a firm believer in trade expansion, and this explains how it was that one crisp October morning, while vague rumors of Indian trouble still filled the air, he took his seat in the Lewiston stage at Walla Walla, his purpose being to extend his business operations as far east as this north Idaho town. "Dutch John," a veteran stage driver known throughout the entire northwest, held the reins and Mooney's only other companion was a fellow drummer. As the stage rolled rapidly along, the three men became very sociable, as might be expected, and soon the passengers were deeply interested in the yarns which "Dutch John" spun for their benefit. John's life had not been very prosaic and what few hairbreadth escapes and blood-curdling experiences he had been unfortunate enough to miss, his imagination readily conceived. With such a foundation to build upon and with the skill of story telling which he possessed, partly natural and partly acquired, along with the companion art of handling a stage coach, it was not strange that he was able to construct such thrilling and wonderful stories as to hold his audience completely at his mercy. Soon the theme became the recent Bannock war and "Dutch John" would appear to have been one of the foremost men in that affair and to have been then in possession of the most exclusive news of the redskins' secret movements. This information was exclusive, probably, in that John was the only one in possession of these facts. Mooney, who is described as being of slight build, in the early 'thirties, of a decidedly serious cast of mind and very impressionable, eagerly swallowed these stories and the effects produced were easily detected in his nervous actions. Meanwhile his fellow traveler had joined forces with the driver and by the time the coach reached the Alpowa there was a thorough understanding between these two conspirators.

While passing this point, "Dutch John" noticed that one of the squaws living there was shaking a blanket in the breeze. Instantly he took advantage of this exclusive bit of information and turning to Mooney he cried, "See that squaw up there waving that blanket? Well, that is the signal agreed upon between her and the redskins and it means that the varmits are about to attack us." With that he applied the lash and quickened the speed of the stage. Mooney turned excitedly toward the Indian figure outlined against the sky. The fellow passenger quickly drew his derringer, took off his hat and dodging down, fired through the crown. The shot incited the horses to greater speed, "Dutch John" wildly gesticulated and yelled, while Mooney, now thoroughly frightened, crouched down in the bottow of the stage for protection and there carefully examined his fellow passenger's hat. "A pretty close call." he remarked. After a little, no Indians appearing, the party regained their composure, though this little incident only brought forth a fresh deluge of stories from "Dutch John."

With never a stop the stage proceeded at a rapid speed until Silcott's ferry across the Clearwater was reached. There the passengers got out and Mooney, his legs still shaking, sank to his knees and humbly and devoutly thanked the Father who watches over all for his narrow escape from a frightful death and piteously begged that He continue to watch over him while he was in this wild region.

Arriving at Lewiston about twilight, Dutch John" drove his stage to the hotel and deposited his passengers and freight. Then he proceeded to carry out the bold plan which had been slowly maturing in his mind. Several were let into the secret that the Indians were marching on the town and that a strong guard would be necessary to save the inhabitants of this fair city from instant massacre. Sometime in 1877 a home guard had been organized and during the early part of the Bannock war this organization had been partly revived in case of an emergency call. Charles G. Kress, the pioneer jeweler, was in command of this temporarily organized guard and before him "Dutch John" laid his plan. Kress consented.

After removing some of the marks of travel from his clothes, Mooney decided the sooner he had transacted his business here and gotten away the better it would be for his peace of mind. With this idea in mind he immediately proceeded down the street to Grostein & Binnard's large store at the end of Main street and at once entered upon his work of securing orders. He had not been engaged in conversation very long before Captain Kress with a squad of a dozen men appeared at the front door and entered. He announced that news of a contemplated Indian attack had been received and that he had called for the purpose of enlisting a few more men to stand guard that night. The employes had been taken into the scheme and immediately they began donning their coats and securing their guns as if the summons was a matter of every day occurrence. Mooney hastily terminated his call and started toward the door. But he was not to escape so easily for Kress halted him and requested him to step into the ranks. Mooney protested that he did not care to fight Indians, that he had no gun and finally that he had business to attend to.

"We cannot excuse you," said Kress, "as we need every man we can muster. We will arm you. You will have to do the same as the rest and take your turn at guard duty."

Mooney protested, but in vain. A needle gun and some shells were given him, and walking with Kress at the head of the line, the guard marched two by two up the Snake river and by a trail (which followed the line of the present road from Snake River avenue up on Normal hill) to the top of the hill overlooking the river. The year previous, 1877, the citizens had constructed a rude rifle trench here in anticipation of an attack from the Nez Perces. Here the line stopped and Captain Kress ordered Mooney to take his post. Instructions were issued to him concerning his actions in case of an attack and he was told in impressive tones that death at sunrise was the penalty meted out to men who deserted their posts while on guard. "Lewiston" was the password. Mooney begged that he be allowed to go to the telegraph office and telegraph to Portland concerning his danger and the disposition of his property in case he should meet death, but being refused, took the situation bravely and grimly answered that they would find him faithful. Then the detachment marched on across the hill and down a trail where the Fifth street grade has lately been made to the city. At the Raymond hotel the drinks were passed around among those who wished to imbibe, and the guards made merry while the lone picket stood faithfully by his post and patiently awaited the merciless onslaught of the enemy.

Hour after hour passed and still no movements in the darkness did he perceive. The intense stillness, the suffocating darkness unnerved him and he was about to cast himself upon the mercy of his white friends when he was startled into action by a series of blood-curdling whoops and yells which seemed to rend the very atmosphere into fragments. It was now nearly midnight. Louder and louder grew the cries and nearer and nearer came the enemy. Mooney bravely stood his ground and sought to penetrate the darkness around him. Now he could see the skulking forms. With blankets about their heads, weapons in their hands and their lips uttering wild cries whose meaning he knew not; he saw them advance toward his post. Now and then the flash of a gun accompanied by the roar which followed denoted the position of the hostiles. The whole tribe seemed to be charging. Mooney tried to sound the alarm but the trigger fell harmlessly on the cap which refused to explode. Again and again did he load but fate seemed to be conspiring against him for the cartridges absolutely refused to do their duty. (Had Mooney investigated he would have found that the loads had been carefully extracted from the shells, which were useless in the first place.)

Suddenly, when within fifty yards of the earthworks, the enemy drew together for a grand charge, and with renewed energy raised their cries and yells and dashed forward. Mooney could stand the strain no longer. Coward or no coward he would never stay to be scalped even though the act did reward him with a hero's crown. Flinging his useless gun aside, he fled precipitately down the hillside. At the foot of the hill or bluff and directly in his path stood William Kettenbach's chicken coop, a building of respectable dimensions. This structure Mooney cleared at one leap and then bounded onward toward the Snake river, preferring a watery grave to death at the hands of a savage warrior. Just at the water's edge he ran into three men, one of whom was William Boise, who is still a resident of Lewiston. Boise grasped Mooney and together the quartet rushed back to town. Here his friends assured him that the Indians had retreated and that the danger was now past. They congratulated him on his remarkable escape, sympathized with him and led him away to the hotel where, they said, he might now rest in peace.

A few minutes later the six or seven white Indians who had so valiantly stormed the ramparts above town, the three who had been sent around to intercept Mooney should he attempt to plunge into the Snake and a score of others who had been let into the conspiracy met and exchanged congratulations on their little joke, one of the most successful ever perpetrated in this region. The joke was too good to be kept among a few and not many hours passed before the story was common property. Mooney spent the next day in Lewiston and it is very probable that he was told the true history of the Indian scare before another night shrouded the city in darkness. It is known that the next stage numbered among its passengers the hero of the Lewiston Indian scare of 1878.

The following touching story of the death and burial of "Stumpy" Wicks, one of the early characters of the Coeur d'Alene district, is told in the Coeur d'Alene Eagle under date of May 3, 1884. The story vividly portrays the conditions which then existed in the Eagle camp.

"OVER THE RANGE."

"'Stumpy' Wicks was dead. The mountain fever had killed him. A few days before he started off into the hills, telling the boys that he would find something rich, or never go out again. He did not find anything rich, and he never went out again. The fever laid its grip upon him, and in three days he was dead. He had "gone over the range," the boys said.

"It became necessary to bury 'Stumpy' Wicks. And how was he to be buried? By his relatives? He had no relatives. By his pard? He had no pard. By the town? There was no town. Forty years ago 'Stumpy' Wicks had left his home—no one knows where—and his people—no one knows whom— to wander in the west. He died alone. His wife, his mother, his sister, if he had one, will never know where he died, or what hands laid him in the grave.

"It was the boys. They got together and made a coffin out of a box or two, and covered it with black cloth. They put 'Stumpy' into it, with a clean flour sack over his poor, dead face. They chipped in and hired an ex-parson, who for some years had abandoned his profession to give "'Stumpy' a send-off." They dug a grave to a good and honest depth in the tough, red earth. They went out and found a flat rock for a headstone, and on it, with an engineer's graver, they scratched the brief epitaph, "'Stumpy" Wicks.' Then they followed the coffin wagon to the grave, walking through the mud and rain.

"There were forty men in that funeral procession, and not one woman. Very few were drunk, and nearly all had taken off their six-shooters. There were forty men who stood around that open grave, and not one woman to drop a tear, as the ex-parson read a brief portion of the Episcopal burial service and offered a short prayer for the safe journey of 'Stumpy's' soul over the range. There was no history of 'Stumpy's' life. No one knew his history. It was doubtless a sad enough one, full of slips and stumbles, full of hope, perhaps before he had finally 'lost his grip.' They found a woman's picture, very old, and quite worn out, indeed, in 'Stumpy's' pocket and this was buried with him. This was probably his history.

"There was not a tear shed at 'Stumpy's' funeral. Not a sob was heard but neither were there any oaths or any laughter.

"When the time came to fill up the grave, ready hearts assisted ready hands, and the experienced miners quickly did the work. They rounded up the mound and fitted up the head-stone. When the ex-parson stepped back from the grave he stumbled over the head-stone of Billy Robbins, the gambler, whom Antoine Sanchez knifed. There were a good many of the boys resting there. The bullet, the knife and the mountain fever had finished them, except those whom the committee assisted. It was the committee who put Antoine Sanchez at the foot of Billy Robbins' grave.

"There was no green thing in this graveyard, no living plants, no little flowers. It lay red and bare upon a red and bare hillside. There were no white stones to mark the homes of the sleepers; those used were of the rough, red granite.

"The boys were quiet. They were thinking, perhaps. They looked up at the sky, which strangely enough, had in it no tint of blue, and the sky, in pity that no tear was shed, wept some upon them.

"As the procession broke up and moved back to the saloons, one was heard to say that it was the 'd—dest, mournfulest plantin' he ever had a hand in.' In fact the camp did not get back to its normal condition until the next day. There was something sad even for these rough souls in the lonely, unwept death of 'Stumpy' Wicks. It made them think and I wonder if some of them did not reach out their arms from their blankets that night and hold them up and call out softly, 'Oh, Stumpy, Stumpy! What is it you see over the range? After a wretched, broken life, what is there for a man over the range?'"

A SHOSHONE COUNTY BEAR STORY.

The Coeur d'Alene mountains are the natural home of the north Idaho bear family. Here among the numberless deep, narrow canyons and the high, long ridges covered with a dense growth of pine and cedar, underbrush and berry bushes, where a multitude of clear, gushing mountain streams may quench the thirst of man or beast, where for sections several miles in extent the great forest belongs alone to the animal world; in this region bruin was lord of the forest until superseded by the pioneer miners and their trusty rifles. Even at this late day, bears are not infrequently met with in what is known locally as the North Fork country, meaning the region drained by the north fork of the Coeur d'Alene river. Some portions of that section are still uninhabited and very little traveled except by the denizens of the wilderness.

It was on Beaver creek, a southern tributary of the North Fork, that the scene of this bear story is laid and the time of action was in the spring of 1896. The Coeur d'Alene Sun tells the story in the following words:

"Charles Eisenstein, the young ranchman living on the North Fork at the mouth of Beaver creek, is deservedly the hero of the Coeur d'Alenes today, for he has killed the daddy of the bruin family in these parts. For several years it has been known around Delta that some wild animal was killing sheep and carrying them off. Calves were also missed. On Sunday, May 3d, a cow was killed near the mouth of Beaver creek. All signs led to the belief that a huge bear was committing the depredations. Very few men have lost any bear, but young Eistenstein said he had lost one when that favorite cow was killed. So late on Tuesday afternoon he took his Winchester rifle and a little bear dog and went up the road toward Delta to a point where tracks had been seen that day.

"He waited until dark at a point half a mile below town and had just about concluded to go home when he heard the bear coming down the mountain side. Suddenly Eistenstein saw a huge, dark object stalking through the brush. He raised his Winchester and fired at the advancing animal. A howl and a growl followed, while the dog rushed forward and engaged him, Eistenstein, in the meantime, pumping lead into the brute from the trusty repeater. Ten shots had been fired into the infuriated beast without apparent serious results and only one more cartridge was left when it pushed through the dense undergrowth and for the first time his monstrous size became known to the hunter. The young man realized that his case was now a desperate one and accordingly planned with quick wit. Nearer and nearer the animal came. When within eight feet, with the barrel of the gun almost touching his lordship, Eistenstein fired his last bullet. The bear dropped and the hunter hurriedly retreated several yards, while the little dog kept up his annoying attack. Suddenly the monster reared on his haunches, uttered a terrible growl and fell forward. Eistenstein could stand by no longer, but, followed by the dog, fled to A. J. Prichard's cabin, a mile down the road.

"Eistenstein remained at Prichard's cabin during the night and on Wednesday morning at daybreak he again set forth, this time with Mr. Prichard's Winchester and plenty of cartridges. But he had no use for them. The bear was found dead about ten feet from where he had risen for the last attack upon the death-dealing hunter. The young man went to Delta, procured assistance and returned to the scene. Four men's strength was required to place the carcass in the wagon, and its weight was estimated by those who saw it at between 600 and 700 pounds. The species to which the animal belonged was the common dark brown family. Thomas Shuster has purchased the head and skin and will have them mounted. Henry Oxley, who was at the World's Fair, says that Eistenstein's bear is fully as large as any he saw at Chicago. Without doubt it is the largest member of the bruin family ever killed in the Coeur d'Alenes, and for the time being Eistenstein and his faithful dog are the popular heroes of the county."

THE PIONEER BABY OF FLORENCE.

Regarding this interesting little piece of humanity, the Idaho County Free Press, under date of July 2, 1897. says:

"Frank Fenn narrates an interesting story respecting the first white child born in the old Florence mining camp. The parents of the child were Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Foster. In those days, 1864-5, there were very few families in that section, among them being Mr. Fenn's parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Fenn.

"When the Foster baby was born there was no nourishment provided by nature for it. Mrs. Fenn undertook to sustain the little one's life by rice water and other crude preparations, but these did not agree with the infant and it seemed destined to die. At one time Mr. Foster decided to take his child in his arms and make a snow shoe trip to a distant point where there were cows, but it was thought that the child would perish from the cold, and the scheme was abandoned.

"At last some one suggested, as a last resort, that there was a bunch of sheep on Salmon river, nine miles distant, and it was thought quite likely that among them might be found a ewe with milk. Accordingly a man known as 'Flintlock' Wilson volunteered to go down and see if a sheep could be secured. He found one solitary sheep, a black one, with a lamb by her side. Without much trouble he captured the animal, led it as far as he could and then, swinging her across his shoulders, mounted his snow shoes and carried it into camp. To make a long story short, the ewe's milk saved the child's life. One of Frank's duties during that memorable winter was to care for and milk the sheep."

PIONEER LIFE IN IDAHO.

The following extract from the annual address delivered before the Idaho County Pioneers' Association at Mount Idaho, July 4, 1891, by the retiring president, James H. Robinson, of Grangeville, gives so graphic a picture of life on Camas prairie in the 'sixties, that we gladly give it a place in this chapter:

"To the pioneers of Idaho county gathered here today I wish to recall some experiences of early years on Camas prairie. To those present who have made homes here later these incidents may serve to answer the question as to how a handful of people shut out from the world and dependent entirely upon their own efforts for sustenance and social enjoyment succeeded.

"A goodly number of those who located here prior to 1870 had come to the mines of Elk City, Florence and Warren to make a fortune, which at the end of one or two years would in most cases consist of a pair of blankets and a battered outfit of cooking utensils. With these as capital some would build a cabin in the timber and make rails and shakes, or whipsaw lumber for the few who were more prosperous; others built log houses almost anywhere they pleased on the prairie and called it home. But very few families were here in 1866, but from that time onward the number slowly increased; a friendly social feeling prevailed, and when these families came together, as they often did, to spend an evening, they did not lack for means of enjoyment. No matter about the conveyance; a cayuse with a blanket, a log sled, a bob sled or perhaps no conveyance at all; the principal thing was to get there and forget dull care. Dancing was a part of the amusement and for the best of reasons, costumes were a matter of secondary importance. The ball room dude of today would stand aghast at the surroundings and dances of 1867. In vain would the bachelor look for young lady partners: they were not there except in very short dresses.

"The sight of these embryo women, however, gave promise of a future when partners would be more plentiful. That time has come. But, alas! Where are the bachelors of '67? If, in the meetings of these early settlers, the surroundings were more crude than today, their greetings were as cordial, their kindness and friendship as genuine, and in most cases their intelligence and culture were fully equal to that of the present. Their eyes were closed and their tongues silent in regard to the cheap dress of a poorer neighbor. Do not some of you remember those old time gatherings, one in particular that took place in the old 'mountain house' where now the Chinaman and his Joss presides? All joined in the pleasures of the evenings and good time was kept to 'Money Musk' by those who would smile to see themselves try it now.

"These early settlers were not saints, neither were they quite sinners. The man who in those days owned a wagon was looked upon as a very Vanderbilt in wealth, and when a stubborn ox would twist 'round a stump and break that wagon it was considered a proper occasion to use strong language. Cards were in general use, but as an amusement more than for gain. 'Come up and take something?' then, as now, met with a ready response, but drunkenness was rare and perhaps in no other settlement founded in the state is there an instance of a hotel being successfully established and conducted for almost thirty years without the sale of liquors beneath its roof. And yet such is the record of the Mount Idaho Hotel, conducted on that principle for all that time by our worthy president, Honorable Loyal P. Brown.

"There were few deaths then to sadden hearts, and is it not significant when we remember that no doctors were here; neither did we have lawyers to look after our welfare—to get us into trouble only to get us out again. In settling disputes arbitration was resorted to, or else the quicker mode of knocking down the aggressor. Ministers, too, were away in pastures more green.

"During the first ten years of settlement perhaps the average visit of the minister was one in ten years. Families would often spend the Sabbath in God's great temple, under the shade of these lofty pines—a day of rest indeed—and returning home at evening, each would feel that the burdens of the coming week would be lightened by this respite.

"All who were here in these first years will remember the concert of music in the timber on clear, frosty mornings. It was more discordant, perhaps, than that of our excellent band and chorus of the present time; yet it was music to those who were building homes for loved ones. This concert, which is now so rarely heard, was made up of lively whistling, of the echo of voices in song and laughter, of the clear ring of axes along the foothills, while the crash of falling trees made an appropriate bass: Then, when the day's work was done and loads piled high, came the merry run home with not a fence to interfere.

"Are there any here now who remember John Brown's big sled, built for pleasure as much as for profit? It would accommodate several families, and on winter nights, packed in straw, buffalo robes and blankets, young and old drove away feeling as happy as though it were the finest cutter. There are a few here who attended the raising of the Crooks and Fairfield barns, great structures they were considered then, standing for twenty years as landmarks and evidences of enterprise in the very beginning of the settlement. When they were erected every citizen was there, proud and glad to thus aid in adding permanency to the country's growth. These buildings, like their owners, have passed away and will soon be forgotten, but long will the builders live in memory as among the most worthy men in pioneer days.

"The early settlers attended the elections promptly, though there were but few votes to count, paid their taxes without a grumble and were good, law-abiding citizens, except when forbearance of evil ceased to be a virtue. In a very few instances they took the law into their own hands and punished gross offenders with the penalty due. A few remember 'Shumway Jim,' and were present when he expiated his many brutal crimes. He was an English speaking Indian, who delighted in murder, and soon after the death of his last victim, he was escorted to the timber by the people one fine morning, and like the ship, 'never returned.' Such conduct today would be justly condemned, but twenty-five years ago it was self-preservation to do as the pioneers did. They were a little group of men and women, isolated and almost without the pale of civil law, and felt that with such characters as 'Shumway Jim' and Pete Walters in their midst, they were compelled to be a law unto themselves.

"Schools and literary societies were established even before houses were built for their accommodation. The log school house, with its immense chimney and rustic furniture, which stood on the bank of Whisky Bill creek, near Mr. Aram's home, was the scene of many an effort at oratory and eloquence in debate, until a wider field of action was sought in organizing a sham legislature.

"There are some here who were members of that body during the winter of 1867 and 1868. It consisted of but one house, with Loyal P. Brown as speaker, and I. Muncie as clerk; T. L. Ward acted as governor. Meetings were held alternately in the old Whisky Bill creek school house and at Mount Idaho. Almost every bill introduced would come in conflict with the interests of other members and a war of words would result. The clerk, not having an assistant, had much to do, and claimed pay for his services. The claim was referred and a report brought in recommending that a gold pen be presented the clerk by the legislature. The procuring of the pen was referred to a committee of three, only one of whom is now living. With zeal worthier of a better cause, they manufactured a wooden pen twelve inches long, painting it to appear as gold. The pen was laid in wool in a neat box and the explosion looked forward to with interest. The presentation took place in a room in the old hotel and passed off well until the box was handed the clerk, and the hoax was discovered. Then there was language loud and wild and the box was splintered over guilty heads. A new clerk was elected and the work of making laws went smoothly on until a bill was introduced to change the course of White Bird creek and bring it onto the prairie, dropping it into Butcher or Three Mile creek.

"Here came the tug of war and Greek met Greek when the question came up as to which of these creeks should receive White Bird. It was a memorable debate. Members took off their coats, the better to be heard, stood upon the desks, hurling arguments at the speaker in behalf of their favorite creek, which, they alleged, would become the great water power of the west, by the addition of White Bird's waters. Confusion became worse confused. The sergeant-at-arms and the speaker's gavel failed to quell the storm. The bill never reached a vote, and White Bird today still rolls majestically onward in its natural channel to the Salmon.

"No pioneer will forget Bush, the man of oxen and of wit, humor and jokes. At every house he was welcome. Rough he was, but withal genial and kind and full of that spirit which will not down in adversity. He was a strong man physically, but it was his misfortune at one time to suffer for weeks from an aching tooth—one of those big grinders, apparently sound, but possessed of a power to make a man wish he had never been born. There seemed to be no help for Bush, as doctors and dentists were not yet a part of our population. In his wanderings from house to house in search of relief, he found a man who had picked up in Florence one of those ancient instruments of torture called a turnkey. It was old and rusty, and the owner knew nothing of how it should be used; but Bush determined at once to stay with the owner until the tooth was out, if it took all winter. After argument, entreaty and almost force on the part of Bush to have a trial made, the gum was cut away with a knife, and the horrible instrument of torture was fitted on the tooth. A powerful wrench followed; then an involuntary yell from the victim. Again this relic of the Inquisition was forced down on the tooth and the operator, with both hands on the handle and with all his strength, gave a twist that sent the tooth across the room. With a wild stare Bush's eyes followed the tooth as he exclaimed: 'Thank the Lord, it came out just before I died!'

"As time passed the farms were enclosed, and each year more land was brought into cultivation. Prices for all produce were high, and the supply at no time equal to the demand. Prosperity smiled on the settlement until, through increase of population, over production glutted every market. A large-hearted, liberal spirit prevailed with the first settlers here so long that it became a habit which led to financial disaster with many of them when the reverses of later years came. A compliment was paid to the honest endeavors of the pioneers, which came from an unexpected source. One of the first merchants here, on closing out his business, made the remark: 'De beoples on dis prairie scratch harder to pay what dey owe dan any beoples I ever see. Since I come here I make more ash $20,000 and I only lose shust $500 in bad debts.'"

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

George Underwood, in the Lewiston Teller, published June 10, 1899, tells a touching story of pioneer life in north Idaho, which well illustrates the fervent patriotism which stirred men's souls in the dark days which followed the close of the Civil war.

"In April, 1865," says he, "a party of twenty miners were working on Jawbone bar, six miles below Lewiston, on the Snake river, when one day the steamboat came around the great bend. From the masthead the Stars and Stripes floated at half mast. Every rocker stopped, every shovel supported a man who was speechless from the silent message of sorrow. 'The flag's at half mast.' That sentence, spoken in a low voice which trembled with emotion, was the only word spoken. The boat plowed the water. Every pulsation of the great engine was an imaginary tap of a muffled drum in a funeral march.

"In the company was a young newspaper man who had left New York on account of his health. He was a Unionist of the pronounced type and he was a leader in every assembly, whether of miners or politicians. He instinctively took off his hat, and, without knowing the cause of mourning, his associates silently followed his example.

"The boat passed on up the river without a word or sign from a man on board. Only the inanimate sign of mourning appealed to the sentiments of those anxious spectators. Quite likely the passengers and crew took the miners to be only Indians to whom the news of the day would have been unappreciated. Anyhow the miners were left to work out, unaided, the problem of the cause of the mourning sign. They worked it out in silence. The young newspaper man, still standing with bared head, turned as pale as a man whose heart had ceased, for a minute, to beat. Then he cried out like a man who had seen a terrible apparition, like a maniac in the throes of fear of the imaginary horrors of a madman's hell: 'Lincoln is dead! Lincoln is murdered!'

"With one accord the shovels fell upon the rocks and twenty men started to Lewiston. Though the hot sun beat upon the sandy road, they won the race and arrived in Lewiston before the steamer did. The people of Lewiston heard the message first from the soul of that young patriot. The miners brought the message to Lewiston in advance of the boat and through them the news of the great national calamity first reached the ears of the populace, although the confirmation did not come until delivered by those on the boat.

"The awful news was received with deep manifestations of sorrow. The public grief found expression upon every face. There was none who rejoiced in this section of the territory. The citizens were patriots."

COEUR D'ALENE'S PIONEER CHILDREN.

The best testimony upon this subject accords to Thomas Argyle, now of Spokane, the honor of having been the first white child born in the Coeur d'Alenes, and to Miss Alice O'Neil a like distinction of being the pioneer daughter of the Coeur d'Alenes. Thomas Argyle, says the 'Murray Sun, was born on Prichard creek above Murray, September 11, 1884, the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Argyle. Alice O'Neil is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Larry O'Neil, of Murray, and her birthday is but a few weeks later than that of Mr. Argyle.

INDIAN ELOQUENCE.

An event of no small importance occurred at Kamiah, July 4, 1903. A company of about 800 Nez Perce Indians, men, women and children, assembled, with some white people, to do honor to Independence Day in patriotic celebration. The exercises consisted of a parade, speeches, singing and the yearly feast. A liberty car, beautifully draped in the national colors, carried fifty little Indian girls dressed in white, who waved flags. Preceding this car marched the Indian band, which was immediately followed by one hundred boys in rank. Before the parade, a song service was held in the gospel tent, all in the Nez Perce language. During the day various exercises were held, such as patriotic and religious speeches, song services, etc., all in the Indian language.

One of the leading features of the day's celebration was the oration delivered in the English language by James Stuart, a Nez Perces merchant of Kooskia. Among other things he said:

"The Nez Perces tribe, once among the fiercest Indians of the northwest, now sits in church studying the Word of God * * * * Very few persons have any idea of the progress made by the Nez Perces since they came under the control of the United States. Most people think the Indians a worthless lot, and that it is useless for the government to attempt to make fit citizens of them. But I tell you you should consider the condition they were in a few years ago, and see where they stand in the world today. * * * * The Nez Perces have, in little more than a generation, become the best and most intelligent tribe of Indians in this part of the country. * * * * My people, the Nez Perces, have made some wonderful strides in advancement during the past few years. We are still hopeful that a time is coming when the entire tribe will not be looked upon as a separate, peculiar people, but as a new, loyal, liberty-loving community, forming an integral part of this great republic which we Indians love so well, and of this great day of independence which we celebrate with such enthusiastic joy.

"My brothers, I care not what your politics may have been, let us remember that 'eternal vigilance is the price of liberty,' and that the prosperity of our nation, of our families, depend upon the protection of the rights of its people. We, as a part of this great nation, love the song 'America,' and all the national airs. We celebrate this day in memory of that glorious Fourth when first was wide flung the banner of freedom and of equal rights. By faith we hear the liberty bell of 1776 echoing throughout the mountains of the east and the west, the vales of the north and the south, reverberating to our very souls. We glory in the flag of our country, we love her people, we salute the Stars and Stripes. By the powers that be we swear our allegiance to her and to her people. For our people and country we will live and gladly struggle up the long heights that lead to advancement and refinement, and if need be, we will as gladly die that this opportunity for freedom shall not be taken away from those who will follow us.

"Our beloved country! Bound together by the ties of a common brotherhood, let us live forever as one people—a free and independent nation, an inseparable and undivided people."

The occasion served to demonstrate the advancement made by the Indians and it is a source of no small gratification to all intelligent people to see, in the same field where less than a quarter of a century ago the savage bands of Joseph wrought massacre and pillage, and while that individual is still living, this magnificent tribute of patriotism and assurance of submission to the nation's laws, emanating from the Nez Perces themselves.

PIONEER YULETIDE.

Lewiston Teller: The first Christmas celebration in the Lewiston valley, of which any living witness has personal knowledge, occurred at Lapwai in 1860.

John M. Silcott, the oldest living pioneer except one, Thomas B. Beall, was then sub-agent at Lapwai, under Agent Blake, who was occupied exclusively elsewhere. Old Uncle John never did things by halves, even in those days of limited accessories of civilization. He therefore sent invitations to every white man within fifty miles of his home, and not one of the invited guests would have sent regrets for any excuse short of total physical disability. These guests were: Col. William Craig, Thomas B. Beall, N. B. Dutro, Thomas Page, Captain M. M. Williams, Doctor Theobolo, Jake Schultz, Joe Medeau, Henry McNally and the Spanish chef, Spanish Frank.

The cuisine was elaborate, although a little irregular. There was no turkey, but a wild goose, which filled the place very acceptably; there was no roast pig, but a stuffed cub bear stood upon the platter; there was no pumpkin pie, a dish for which the old pioneer always felt a longing that was hard to satisfy; there was no great variety of confections, nor were there any fashionable wines, for which every one of these guests had, perhaps, a longing desire inspired by past associations; but they did have pure alcohol. The government had supplied Dr. Thebodo's dispensary with a five-gallon can of this potent drug, and the seal was intact till that Christmas morn.

There was perhaps not a guest under this hospitable roof who could not have appreciated the most delicate bouquet in the best wines of an aristocrat's cellar, but they were equal to the occasion of enjoying raw alcohol with water in no extravagant portions, and each and every guest did the contents of that sealed can justice. And further, none ever complained that the alcohol did not do its expected work.

It is also appropriate to connect this Christmas dinner with the first New Year's dinner. One was intimately connected with the other. The alcohol did not last through the week, but the effects of it did. Col. Craig invited the guests to come to his home for the closing act of the holiday celebration. He lived on what was called Waha creek then, now Sweetwater creek.

The alcohol being gone, a dire situation arose. Jake Schultz and Joe Medeau, known as "French" Joe, appeared on the scene while the smell of alcohol was still in the air. They volunteered to make the journey to Walla Walla for stimulants for Craig's New Year's dinner. John Silcott furnished the money to pay for ten gallons of whisky and Col. Craig furnished the horses. The journey of over one hundred miles was undertaken with only three days in which to make the ride. They made the trip and broke the record for rapid freight service. They made the entire distance of over 200 miles, going and coming, with pack horses, in three days. This display of energy speaks well for the enthusiasm displayed by those who attended those pioneer celebrations.

Col. Craig had a pretentious dwelling for that day and age. His house was comparatively a large one and a smooth floor gave it a position on a par with aristocracy.

The house and the floor, the women (natives) and the whisky suggested a dance and great preparations were made for this recreation. These men, who, if living now, are sedate and bowed down with age, were then young and proud and each wanted a partner for the dance. They used every means of persuasion and even strategy to secure the attendance of the best looking partners.

The dinner was very elaborate. The whisky, though milder than the fiery alcohol, induced exuberance of spirits, and there was a flow of soul that was never forgotten by a single guest. The native girls were too modest to make lively dancers, but they were induced to join in the mazy waltz and the bewitching quadrille while the liquor held out.

Of the participants of this celebration perhaps only Tom Beall survives. Silcott died in December, 1902.

NIGGER PRAIRIE.

All pioneers of the Coeur d'Alene remember Nigger prairie and the different stories told of how it came by that strange name. The prairie is in reality only a small cove in the valley of the South Fork at Mullan and long ago the pioneer name by which it was dubbed passed out of general use. In the summer of 1884, E. S. Topping, a correspondent living in Murray, in a letter to his paper, the Bozeman (Montana) Courier, related the following story concerning Nigger prairie. One pioneer vouches for the truth of the incident related; another stamps the story as false. The existence of an early pioneer's grave at the spot referred to is undisputed.

"Every mining camp has its legend of wonderful diggings, which had been worked in times past," says Topping, "but which can never be found when looked for. This camp also has its story, which I shall relate. During the fall of the year 1866 a negro came into Missoula with a large amount of gold dust, which he spent royally, with the remark that he knew where there was plenty more. The next spring he, with three horses, went out again and came back in the fall with a larger quantity of the precious metal than he had brought in before. The next spring he went out accompanied by a Flathead Indian and the two were seen in July by a party of emigrants going to Oregon via the Mullan road, living in a log cabin which the negro had built in a small opening, which is now called Nigger prairie. It is situated about five miles from the head of the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene. A week later another emigrant party found the negro dead, killed probably by a gun. They buried his body and went on. The next fall the Flathead was seen in possession of the negro's horses and it was then supposed that he was responsible for the latter's death. Those who buried the unfortunate negro placed at his head a rude cross, and when I was there a few days ago I found that some one had, with more humor than propriety, placed a hewn slab at the foot, which bore this inscription: 'Here lies the coon.'"

EXPENSIVE TERPSCHICOREAN SPORT.

While in a reminiscent mood one evening last winter, at the Jersey House, Grangeville, one of the earliest of Idaho county's pioneers related the following story of pioneer experiences in the Elk City camp. It well illustrates the free and easy spirit of those flush times and also sets forth in bold contrast the bogus and counterfeit character which was to be occasionally found among those open-hearted, generous, diamond-in-the-rough miners. The writer caught the words substantially as follows:

"It was in the winter of 1868 that Elk City announced to the hundreds of miners throughout that camp that a big dance would be given at that place.

All were invited who felt inclined to trip the 'light fantastic toe,' with oceans of wheat extract and other drinkables on the side, and mountains of substantial grub to cheer the inner man and sustain him through the siege of shuffle and whirl which was certain to follow; for in those days a dance meant several days and nights of protracted effort.

"At Station, on the south fork of the Clearwater, some sixteen miles below Elk City, the word was received with rejoicing, and on the appointed day a delegation of eight or ten of the denizens of that enterprising camp, under the leadership of George K. Reed, the leading merchant, and Paddy White, another popular miner, started up the river on the ice toward the scene of the intended revelry and feasting.

"In 1868 the climatic conditions were such that a very little exertion produced extreme thirst. Consequently the boys, on arriving at Elk after a sixteen-mile tramp, at once repaired to the saloon conducted by the Hibernian gentleman, Barney Reynolds, to whom still clung in a pronounced degree the brogue of the Emerald Isle and also the spirit of acquisitiveness.

"Everybody in hearing was called up to the bar, as was the prevailing custom then, and as all drinks cost twenty-five cents each, it meant five or six dollars a treat. Gold dust was used as the circulating medium and had to be weighed, necessitating much trouble. So Barney, to economize in labor, at once announced:

"'Yez boays frim th' Station, Oi knows ye's all; whin iny of yez traits. Oi chairges thim up to the Station, and yez kin all shure sittle it to onct at the lasth. Oi'll be aisy on yez, comin' frim the Station as ye do.'

"This was assented to, and the festivities of the occasion were at once entered into by the visitors with heartiness and spirit, sandwiching in with killing regularity the drinks with the dancing and eating. It is to be noted that the enterprising Barney noted down these treats with equal regularity.

"At the end of the two days' and nights' hilarity, the boys from Station prepared to return home. They had indulged in wine suppers and other expensive luxuries of the kind; had had a rip-roaring time. They expected that their bar bill would be considerable, but they were not counting the cost as one of the things with which to burden their mind, when a good time was in the other end of the balance. They headed for Barney's place to wipe out the score there and start on the return trip, fortified with a finger of his best. As the bill was against the 'Station,' George Reed was selected to act as spokesman for the crowd. He approached Barney with a happy spirit and with self assurance in his manner.

"'Well, Barney, what have you chalked down against us? We're starting for home now.'

"'Oi tol yez Station boays Oi'd be aisy on yez, an' Oi will.'

"'Well, what is it? I've got the dust and want to get rid of it.'

"'Oi tol yez Oi'd be aisy on yez, an' Oi'll do it. Bein's as yez frim the Station, it is only ateen hundrid dollars.'

"For a moment even the bold frontier spirit was set back and the free and easy emissary of the Station crowd looked aghast. But is was only a moment; the rich, red blood surged back from the brain to the heart; George regained his equilibrium. With a hearty 'alright' he whirled about, sought his comrades and together they scraped up the dust, although it drained the buckskin wallets of the last one. The $1,800 in dust was duly turned over to the expert accountant behind the bar and the boys started down the river, cracking jokes and recounting the pleasant incidents of the two-days' lark. Incidentally their pocketbooks were about as light as their hearts, thanks to the nice bookkeeping of their Irish friend.

"Returning to Clearwater Station, they arranged for a return dance, sending out invitations to everyone in the region. A few days later this dance commenced and today holds the record as the longest dance ever held in the state. For eighteen days and nights the fiddle did not cease to squeak nor the heels of the merry dancers to crack against one another and the floor. For the first few hours the fun was enjoyed by all; then some of the dancers thought it time to quit and retired to their cabins. They were allowed a little rest and then a deputation was sent to bring them again to the hall, a request which they obeyed, though not without much grumbling. Once upon the floor, however, the recruits were as jovial as any and were glad to be the means of prying open the eyelids of their weary brothers and walking them back to the hall to keep up the dancing. By this means the original crowd of Station boys who went to Elk City reimbursed their exchequers, besides having another good time. There were but few women present at this great dance, most of the dancing being by the men themselves. The memory of that dance will never fade."

ROBINSON'S LOST MINES.

In its issue of July 16, 1897, the Lewiston Teller gives the following interesting account of the Robinson affair, which at the time and for many years afterward created much excitement in this section of the west. There have been many different versions of the story, but the following is said to contain the substance matter of this famous excitement:

"Robinson, the Fraud, occasioned the greatest quartz excitement that ever prevailed in north Idaho. This man was first outfitted by certain citizens of Lewiston to prosecute an ordinary prospecting tour in the Bitter Root mountains in 1866. He was a man of shrewdness and he displayed no little knowledge of mineralogy. He had been in the quartz mines of central Idaho and, perhaps, those of California. His practical experience qualified him for the peculiar career of fraud that made him famous.

"On the trip of 1866 he was accompanied by five or six local prospectors, some of whom are still living in the vicinity of Lewiston. The route taken was by way of the head of the Palouse and the Potlatch to Elk creek and the great white pine belt. When the party passed beyond the trails they decided that they were lost and gave more attention to trying to discover themselves than to the search for gold. After a few days of hardships the bewildered party arrived at the Clearwater at some point on the north fork. They were confused to such an extent that they did not know what water course they had found. Contention arose in the company about the course to be pursued and temporary separation followed. Robinson took up the stream course. After a little he returned and descended the stream. It is now believed that he made the journey up the river in search of a cache of ore which he had deliberately secreted in the mountains for the purpose of imposing upon those who confided in him. But when he arrived in Lewiston he did not disclose his quartz. He passed on down the river to Alpowa and packed his ore on horses to Walla Walla. It is now believed that the ore which caused this rush was assorted from a mine in Idaho City and packed over to the Clearwater for fraudulent purposes. The prospecting tour was made for the purpose of giving weight to the story he told and the apparently aimless wanderings, while 'lost' were planned to afford mysterious surroundings for the false story of a rich strike. Robinson, however, did not attempt to impose upon his friends in Lewiston. He wisely planned to go farther away from home to appeal to the credulity of mining men. He began his confidence game in San Francisco. There he sought the richest men in the city, men who should have been proof against the wiles of an adventurer. Men of prominence were victimized. He told them a story of hardships, adventure and deep mystery such as the gold brick swindler tells to his intended victim.

"The man who possessed the secret of a hidden fortune was made the hero of a secret coterie. He was a social favorite for a whole happy winter season of fashion. All could secure an interest in the great mysterious mine by the payment in advance of a large sum of money. Robinson accumulated a small fortune by his fradulent representations during the winter. In the spring he started to lead the representatives of the company to the ledge. Among those who began the journey to the Eldorado was Senator Hearst. News of the expedition, peddled secretly, gained wide circulation and an army of spies followed the trail of the gold seekers. Robinson took offense at what he called the betrayal of his secret by members of the company and sought every opportunity to plead lack of faith and a forfeiture of contract on the part of paid-up members of his company. Aside from the plea of justification for the abandonment of the search he feigned sickness and discontinued his leadership. He gave to Senator Hearst and others maps of the route traveled and the pretended location of the mine. The journey was undertaken without Robinson, but it was finally abandoned without results. News of the great discovery spread widely and an army of men was abroad all that fall. Every independent party professed that it knew some secret clew to the exact location of Robinson's ledge, which in fact never existed. The parties who 'grubstaked' Robinson on the occasion of his professed discovery went from Lewiston to claim their rights. They went with evidence of a partnership and with big navy revolvers to enforce their rights, made miners' laws by custom. Lewiston merchants and professional men plunged into the mountains, organized to protect their mutual interests in the claims located by their agent the year before. They never found the claims and Robinson, like the Arab, stole away.

"This chief of wildcatters next appeared in the effete east. Among the conservative New Englanders he found as many and as easy victims as in San Francisco. He repeated his success and doubled his fortune. In the sweet springtime he again entered upon the work of conducting a company to the lost mines of the Bitter Roots. Again he was followed and watched. Even the victims of the previous year were eager to follow their deceiver to a second disappointment. Again Robinson grew morose and threatening over the objectional camp followers. His eastern patrons were more easily controlled than the California company. Robinson could scare them into submission by the fear of Indians and even wild beasts. The howl of a lonesome coyote or a lost burro would silence their grumbling like a dark closet will over-awe a cranky infant. Hon. E. B. True was a member of Robinson's New England party. He relates a story of a night of terror. The party was camped one night on a lonely mountain when a frightful noise was heard. It came nearer and nearer. If True's account of his own sensations may be taken as a criterion, the horror of that night could not be depicted. The unearthly noise left no doubt in the minds of the men from Boston that a terrible mountain monster was approaching. It came very near and True tried to find his gun, but he was paralyzed with fright and could not move. The beast lingered near all night and terror reigned unabated. In the morning it was discovered that a little Mexican mule had joined the pack horses.

"Soon after this incident Robinson disappeared, frightened, probably, not by the voice of the little mule, but by the mutterings of discontent and hints of threats of vengeance. He made two fortunes from one sack of ore and a good story. Hundreds of prospectors have hunted for the Robinson ledge and they are continuing the search to this day. The fact is the ore was taken from a mine near Idaho City and Robinson never discovered the fabled ledge."

MOONLIGHT ON LAKE COEUR D'ALENE.

Slow rose the silver moon o'er Coeur d'Alene,
The fairest vision human eye hath seen;
When nature sits enthroned, sublime and grand—
The sweetest scene from her artistic hand.
Majestic framework bounds the lovely view,
Beneath the canopy of Heaven's blue,
Clothed in the moonlight's soul-inspiring sheen,
And over all, God's ever matchless green.

Slowly, yet higher, rose the full orbed moon
Until, serene, she reached her midnight noon;
The stellar gems their feebler rays withdrew
And left their duty to the brighter few.
Entranced, I listened for the voiceless song—
That hymn of intense silence which the throng
On night's broad plain in concert sing and shine—
"The hand that made us is indeed Divine."

Sweet lakelet! o'er thy crystal bosom flies
A radiance that dazzling charms our eyes;
For o'er thy mountain framework far and wide
Night's glorious queen pours forth her silver tide.
Sanctum sanctorum of great nature's fane
How sweet to stand within these walls again
In night's calm hour and reverently raise
A silent song in our Creator's praise.
—George Stafford in New York Commercial.

The following little poem, dedicated to the Coeur d'Alene's pioneer miners, appeared in the Coeur d'Alene Sun, published at Murray, December 25, 1886:

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

Build us a matchless, golden craft;
Rig it with silver sails;
On Fortune's sea we now sail free,
Wafted by favoring gales.
Build us new lines of travel
To quickly cross the plain;
We'll load the cars with golden bars,—
The wealth of Coeur d'Alene.

Erect for all a stately hall,
Where labor's sons can rest;
The old log hut is now too small
To greet each friend and guest.
So, when at Christmas time we're found.
Old friends to entertain,
We'll pass the cheering camp around
And toast the Coeur d'Alene.

Faint heart ne'er won fair lady yet,—
A proverb never old;
Ambition leads the miner on
When searching for his gold.
Labor is good fortune's key,
Each nerve and sinew strain.
'Twill soon unlock the golden rock
Concealed in Coeur d'Alene.

Our Christmas carol sounds aloud
The miner's just reward;
A mansion now he occupies,
Won by his labor hard.
Emblems of toil adorn his home,
Where peace and plenty reign.
'Tis decked with gold and silver too,—
The fruits of Coeur d'Alene.

Charles Mead, a resident of Murray for a number of years, contributed the following poems to the Murray Sun, in which they appeared at different times during the winter of 1901-02. They are considered of sufficient worth to merit reproduction in this work.

THE MAGIC OF PLACER GOLD.

What magic was there that reared in a night
A city of tents and huts,
And gashed the land so fair to the sight
With tunnels and shafts and cuts?
What magic was there that drew such a crowd,
Undeterred by the heat or cold,
The rich, the poor, the weak and the proud—
But the magic of placer gold?

What lures men away from friends and home
To the perils of land and sea,
Makes most of the wanderers ever to roam
Where the greatest of dangers may be?
What leads men away in the flush of their youth,
To be prematurely made old,
But the love of adventure and gain, forsooth,
And the magic of placer gold?

What blazed the trail o'er mountain and plain
To this beautiful western land,
Smoothing the rough of the Rockies' chain
For the following pilgrim band?
What peopled the West with its sturdy race,
But the young, the brave and the bold,
Who quickened the world to its greatest pace,
Through the magic of placer gold?

SONG OF THE MOUNTAINEER.

A life where the mountains range highest,
Close by a snow-crowned peak,
Where the earth and the sky approach nighest,
And the clouds and the world oft meet;
Where the winds through the pines softly moaning
The song of its long unrest,
And the trees reply ever groaning,
When swayed at the gale's behest.

Way up where the cool, limpid fountains
Gush from the towering crags,
The nectar God gives to the mountains,
Pure and unsullied by dregs;
Where the odor of balsam and heather
Make fragrant the warm summer air,
And vine-tangled thickets of cedar Oft hid the fierce cougar's lair.

O the joy of the long, summer evening,
As the sun sinks down to its rest,
The trees all aglow with its gleaming
And the crags all gilt to their crest.
The moon proudly soars o'er the summits,
The evergreens bask in its light,
And night birds warble sweet sonnets,
Fit requiem to the night.

A home where the deep, mighty gorges
Rend the iron-ribbed cliffs in twain,
And the wild, swirling flood ever forges
Its way to the hot, reeking plain.
Way up where the sky comes the nighest
And man to his Maker draws near,
Up where the mountains range highest,
Is the song of the mountaineer.

SALMON RIVER.—SOUNDS OF THE NIGHT.

Lewiston Teller.

I heard the tones of voices in the night,
Nor any lips save mine to utter sound,
Beside a river in its flight
Through canyons dark, abysmally profound;
But I may not repeat the words they uttered,
And I may not repeat their whispers fluttered.

And first said I, "It is the river dashing
All fretfully o'er hidden, golden sands,
It is the deep-toned sound of sullen lashing,
Surely o'er treasure out of reach of hands;
And waters whirling by the deep immersion
Of ponderous boulders from some far dispersion."

And among the voices interluding
Were the strains of chanting, fine and far,
Chiming of sweet bells, and then intruding
Came the voices—as a shooting star
Draws the attention from the twinkling mazes
Of slow, moving stars, of one who gazes.

Then said I, "It is the pine tree whispers, Swayed by winds from off yon heights of snow,"
Never fairy chanters, baby lispers,
Intonations where great organs blow,
Imitate the pines when sighing, sighing,
It was not their music dying, dying.

I heard the sound of voices in the night;
And others were calling ever near
Did make of me their subject; left and right
They talked above me, as above a bier.
Friends will exchange expressions of regretting,
Recalling all good, the good the rest forgetting.

Oh, it was not the wail of Banshee weeping,
Nor the wild hunter's hounds high overhead
With eager yelpings in their whirlwinds sweeping,
Portelling desolation—from the dead!
They were all kindly voices, and the belling,
The softened chanting are all past my telling.

Perhaps the friends here lost to me forever,
Do gather in this place without a fear
Of human interruption, for the river
Admits no place of habitation near;
And they have come to tell that over yonder
They wait with songs when I cease to wander.

Perhaps it is determined I shall falter
And pause to perish in the rugged land;
That these were sent to watch from that high altar
Whence every soul receiveth its command.
And they but wait the time like those unsleeping,
Who watch at night and have the dead in keeping.

But, come they hither to receive my spirit,
Or to rehearse to me their heavenly song,
Part of its ecstasy I shall inherit
And while I linger, be it brief or long,
And when 'tis bidden, they shall see me dying,
Ready and tranquil, not with tears and sighing.

IDAHO.

Tribute from an Unknown Author.

Let others sigh for orange groves,
Where warmer sunbeams shine,
The lofty mountains freedom loves
And freedom's choice is mine.
I sigh not for the southern clime
Where tropic roses blow,
Give me the pine-clad hills sublime,
The hills of Idaho.

Here many a crystal streamlet clear,
Flows from its mountain home;
And on its banks the peaceful deer
Are free and fearless roam;
And beautiful in evening still,
To mark the sunset glow
Rest on some distant snow-crowned hill
That towers in Idaho.

Though commerce rears no cities proud,
Though wealth has here no shrine,
Though fashion draws no servile crowd,
A prouder boast is thine.
Thy sons are fearless, free and bold,
Thy daughters pure as snow;
For honor, truth and beauty hold
The homes of Idaho.

And I do love thee, mountain land,
Though not a son of thine
For me thy scenes have something grand
In every rugged line;
For I was born among the hills
And reared where tempests blow,
And so my soul with rapture thrills
To hail thee, Idaho.

O, may thy children ever be
To one another true,
And, blessed with peace and harmony,
Their upward paths pursue;
Now linked unto thy sister states,
Thy star with theirs shall glow
And tell what glory yet awaits
The youthful Idaho.

PIONEER BAR OF THE COEUR D'ALENES.

In no pioneer mining camp was there ever gathered, perhaps, a brighter coterie of men learned in the law than in the Coeur d'Alenes. The pioneer lawyers were men of exceptional experience and ability and not a few among them have won their way into national prominence because of their unusual abilities. Few new camps were more widely or better advertised, and the result was that scores of exceptional men in almost every walk of life were carried westward by the newly constructed Northern Pacific railroad, drawn to the new gold fields by the irresistible fascination that placer gold possesses.

As is generally the case in such places litigation soon arose, an almost certain indication of a wealthy region, and the services of those who had toiled over sinuous, snow-drifted mountain trails and carefully picked their way through dense forests with perhaps half a dozen law books and a few dozen sheets of foolscap packed on their backs were called upon to adjust the differences. The Coeur d'Alene Sun says that the first litigant in the camp was Mark Cooney, who brought suit in March, 1884, to recover possession of the Cooney placer, near the King. He was compelled to leave the camp in search of Judge Norman Buck, then judge of the first judicial district of Idaho Territory. This officer he found at Lewiston, and finally prevailed upon him to hold a session of court in Shoshone county, at Eagle City. As soon as the judge could make arrangements he came into the camp and held the session requested. Many cases were tried, all of them earnestly contested, for legal talent was plentiful. Cooney, it should be said, won his case.

United States Senator Weldon B. Heyburn was one of the first lawyers to locate in the camp and none has been a more familiar figure in this section since. He has been actively engaged in the practice of law in Shoshone county for twenty years, and has been identified with all the important litigation concerning mining titles in the Coeur d'Alenes.

Speaking of his associates in those early days, many of whom are still in the Coeur d'Alenes, Senator Heyburn says:

"Hon. William H. Claggett commenced his experience in Virginia City, Nevada, in the earliest days of that mining camp. He was an intimate acquaintance of Mark Twain, who was at that time a newspaper reporter at Virginia City. Mr. Claggett was ambitious for the nomination to congress from Nevada, but failed in this desire and shortly after his defeat removed to Montana, then a portion of Idaho. The trip was made in the customary pioneer manner, across the plains and mountains in a rude wagon. With him went his family. In recognition of his regard for the new home he named one of his daughters Idaho. He remained in the portion afterward organized into the state of Montana, and represented that territory in congress. Failing of re-election he next moved to the Black Hills in Dakota, where he was a candidate for congress against Judge Bennett. He was unable to receive the party's endorsement, so ran as an independent candidate, with the result that he was defeated. Thence he came to Idaho, having remained a short time in Montana, and visited Colorado and Oregon with a view of investigating the desirability of those places as a home. He reached the Coeur d'Alenes in the early days of 1884 and was identified with all the heavy litigation concerning the mines in this section for about sixteen years. In the early 'nineties he claimed election to the United States senate from Idaho, but was not seated. Again he made the contest, before a legislature composed of Democrats, Populists, Silver Republicans and one Republican. Henry Heitfeldt defeated him, after which his life was not an active one because of ill health, which resulted in his death, during the year 1902, in the city of Spokane.

"Another distinguished member of the bar in the pioneer days was Frank Ganahl, a man of exceptional learning and natural ability. A graduate of Harvard law school, he went to California in the early days, and was associated with the men and events that made it famous in the annals of mining and frontier life. In the spring of 1884 he came to Murray, Idaho, and was actively engaged as attorney in nearly all of the important litigation in the Coeur d'Alenes almost up to the time of his death, which occurred in Spokane in 1901.

"Another of the more prominent in the legal profession was the Hon. A. E. Mayhew, who came from Montana to Idaho in the spring of 1884. He had a long and active career, politically and professionally, in Montana, was a pioneer in Colorado in the Pike's Peak excitement, and an active participant in the troubles during the early days of Kansas. After coming to the Coeur d'Alene he immediately took a leading place and for eight years presided on the district bench. He still lives in Walalce, where he is engaged in the practice of law.

"Albert Allen, now a resident of Spokane, was also one of the pioneers of the Coeur d'Alene country. He is a man of keen legal ability and a sound lawyer.

"W. W. Woods was another pioneer lawyer, coming from Salt Lake City. He is a lawyer of distinguished ability and high personal character. Mr. Woods still practices law in the Coeur d'Alenes, residing at Wallace, the county seat.

"These are not all of the pioneer lawyers. Other men of ability and high character participated in the legal events of those times and the litigation concerning titles to the mines of the Coeur d'Alenes is among the most famous mining litigation with which the courts could have at any time dealt."

EARLY DAYS IN MOSCOW.

The pioneers of Moscow were a busy people, but an opportunity to "have fun" at anyone's expense was never allowed to go unimproved. When there was a lull in business, diversion in some form was always found. Illustrative of the manner in which spare moments were sometimes occupied, the following incident is related by a pioneer of the 'seventies: An old man named Chapman lived in Moscow, who was a constant drinker. One evening he had an altercation in the office of the hotel with a barber, a recent arrival, who at this time was somewhat under the influence of liquor. Words came to blows and in the "mill" the barber dealt Chapman a blow on the head which stretched him on the floor. The force of the blow and the effects of the liquor completely paralyzed Chapman, and he lay on the floor, to all appearances, dead. Some one remarked to the barber that he had probably killed the old man. A few moments later it was noticed that the barber had disappeared, and it was supposed that, fearing he had killed Chapman, he had escaped from town and had probably gone to the mountains.

A doctor had been hastily summoned to examine Chapman; it was found he was breathing, and it was decided that the combined effects of the blow he had received on the head and the liquor he had been drinking had put him in a "dead drunk" condition, from which he would in time recover. Chapman was put to bed up-stairs and about this time it was accidentally discovered that the barber was hiding in the garret of the hotel. It was concluded to keep him in ignorance of Chapman's condition and a professed friend made occasional trips to the garret, reporting the injured man's critical conditon, and, thinking for a joke to keep the thoroughly frightened barber all night in the garret, reported his victim gradually growing worse, and, about midnight, reported him dead. At this the barber of course became thoroughly alarmed.

In the meantime others were being made victims of the practical jokers. Chapman was regarded about town as quite a character, and his present startling resemblance to a corpse made it an easy matter to convince any one that he was really dead. Word was quietly sent out that Chapman had been killed by the barber, whereupon men from the business houses, from the streets, and from various resorts, dropped in to take a look at the corpse. Late in the evening a number of the callers were asked to stay and "sit up" with the body, which they agreed to do. There were several composing the party of watchers and among them a man who was not especially impressed with the solemnity of the occasion, being at the time a little under the influence of liquor himself. About three o'clock in the morning, when all were beginning to get drowsy and were moving about the room to keep awake, this man stepped up to the bedside, and, holding a bottle of whiskey toward its occupant, said: "Have a drink, Chap?" The supposedly dead man immediately arose to a sitting posture and extended his hand for the bottle. The consternation of the watchers can be better imagined than described. The bottle of whisky was dropped from the nerveless grasp of the man who was offering it and fell to the floor with a crash, and at the same time there was a mad rush out of the door and down the stairway. When "the joke" was discovered, the victims accepted the situation good naturedly and bided their time to "get even."

On repairing to the garret in the morning to release the barber from his prison and "calm his fears," he could not be found, and it was afterwards learned that some time during the night he had slipped down from his hiding place, hastily collected a few personal effects, and fled from town. He never did come back, and no one ever knew how far he ran or where he eventually landed.
